THE LATE LT.-GENERAL THE EARL OF CARNWATH.—We notice in our obituary the death of this gallant officer who was in his 71st year, having been born in 1768; he was restored to the forfeited honours of his ancestors by Act of Parliament in 1826. He was twice married; in 1789, to Jane, daughter of Mr. Parker, who died soon after; and, in 1794, to Andalusia, daughter of Lieut.-Col. Arthur Browne. By his first wife he had an only child, a daughter, who died at the early age of 11; by his second he had not less than 13 children, some of whom survive him. He was succeeded in the title, and estates by his eldest son Lord Dalzell, late Earl of Carnwath, who was born in Sept. 1797. The late Earl was a Major in the army in 1798; Lieut. and Capt. in the Foot Guards in May, 1803; Lieut.-Col. in the same in Sept. of that year; Col. in Jan. 1812; Maj.-Gen. 4th June, 1814, and Lt.-Gen. 22d July, 1830. He served as Deputy-Adjutant-General in Ireland, and was on the staff in Belfast.

CANTERBURY BARRACKS.—There is now a prospect of these spacious and substantial barracks being completely occupied, it being reported that the various cavalry regiments may shortly be expected from Maidstone. In these days of economy it is something surprising that the Canterbury barracks, which are the [illegible] property of the Government, should have been so long nearly deserted, and Maidstone barracks, for which a heavy rental is paid, is overcrowded with soldiers.—Kent Herald.

Fermoy barracks are to be converted into a work-house.

Her Majesty's warrant to regiments to beat up for recruits extends to 24th April next.

Maj.-Gen. Sleigh is appointed Inspecting-General of Cavalry in Great Britain, vice Lt.-Gen. Sir C. Dalbiac.

COMMISSIONS FROM THE RANKS.—We regret to find that some dissatisfaction has been excited amongst the officers of the Army by what is considered an undue proportion of appointments to commissions from the ranks. The general principle of such appointments is admitted, but it is contended that the practice is carried to a mischievous excess.—U. S. Journal.

CIRCULAR.

Sir,—I have the honour to signify to you the Queen's pleasure that the Regiments of Infantry [illegible] Establishment of [illegible] rank and file, according to the principle of the Circular Order, dated 20th March last. I have, &c., J. GARDINER, Asst. Adj.-Gen.

The Officer commanding [illegible] regiment.

RECRUITING DEPARTMENT.

COPY. Horse Guards, 6th Dec., 1838.

Sir,—It having been decided that the Regiments of Infantry should be immediately recruited to their full establishment of 730 rank and file, I am to signify General Lord Hill's desire, that you will take such steps as may be necessary for completing the regiment with the least possible delay. In the case of regiments stationed abroad, not in India, it is intended that their recruiting shall be continued until they reach a strength of 800 rank and file, according to the principle of the Circular Order, dated 20th March last. I have, &c., J. GARDINER, Asst. Adj.-Gen.

The Officer commanding regiment.

COPY. War-office, 17th Dec., 1838.

Sir,—I have the honour to signify to you that the Queen has been pleased to order the establishment of the regiment under your command to be augmented from the 5th instant, so as to consist of the numbers mentioned in the margin hereof. I have, &c., (Signed) HOWICK, Secretary at War.

Establishment of Regiments in India—9 service companies, 1 Colonel, 2 Lieut.-Cols., 2 Majors, 9 Captains, 20 Lieuts., 7 Ens., 1 Paymaster, 1 Adjt., 1 Quartermaster, 1 Surg., 2 Assist.-Surgs., 1 Surg.-Major, 1 Quartermaster-Serj., 1 Armourer-Serj., 1 Schoolmaster-Serj., 1 Orderly-room Clerk, 9 Colour-Serjeants, 27 Serjs., 36 Corporals, 1 Drum-Major, 12 Drummers, and 699 privates.—Total number, 837.

Ten companies; total, 853—viz., 1 depot company, 1 Capt., 2 Lieuts., 1 Ens., 1 Colour-Serj., 3 Serjs., 3 Corporals, 1 Drummer, privates, 0.—Total number, 16 companies.—Total, 16 companies.

Mortality of French General Officers.—During the last forty-five years, viz. from 1792 to 1838, it has been calculated that 281 French Generals have died of a violent death; of these 170 fell on the field of battle; 55 died in consequence of their wounds; 20 were sentenced to death and shot; 13 were assassinated; and 14 committed suicide.

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

UNITED STATES AND REBELLION IN CANADA.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I am astonished the English Nation will allow themselves to be humbugged by the Americans. Do you think that France, or any other respectable nation, would permit an American steamer and two schooners, filled with armed men, to effect a landing on their shores, without a declaration of war being first declared, and not consider them as pirates and rebels, to be dealt with accordingly? It appears that our steamer, on coming up, fired at the Americans, who instantly hauled into their own waters, and were then supposed safe: as English, and an honourable nation, we ought to have instantly followed and destroyed them as pirates—France, Russia, or America would have done so. We seem afraid of offending the Americans. Is it not preferable to have them as open enemies, and attack them on their own shores, than to permit them to harass our colonies, under mask that the President does not sanction such aggression; at the same time numerous merchants and others are secretly at work supplying the rebels in Canada with men, money, and arms? The present expense for protecting the Canadas is nearly as much as if open war was declared. To cut the business short, we ought to attack the Southern States, emancipate the Negroes, who will join our army, then you will bring them to respect the laws of nations. Every Pole, Frenchman, or other foreigner, either found in arms or aiding and assisting the rebels with arms, ammunition, or other warlike stores, should be found guilty of treason, sentence of death passed accordingly; their leaders executed, the others transported for life to New South Wales, where escape is scarcely possible. The English nation cannot forget the late conduct of General Jackson, when commanding the United States army at Florida. Three British merchants sailed from Nassau, New Providence, to trade with the Florida Indians; from the best information obtained, it appears they knew nothing of the General's proclamation, prohibiting arms, ammunition, &c.; they were apprehended disposing of a few cwt. of gunpowder, tried, convicted, and hanged, by order of the said Jackson. Shall we allow those Americans, after treating our countrymen in the above way, to send an armed steamer, with two schooners, filled with pirates (as we are not at war with the United States), to land their men with impunity on our shores? If we do, we deserve to be degraded in the eyes of every European nation. America, in an evasive way, is doing every thing in her power to injure us; she, in some measure, forces Great Britain to keep up a large army in Canada, partly supplies our troops with provisions, and receives English hard cash in return. This mode of warfare is highly beneficial to the United States: it injures Great Britain more than if open hostilities were declared. If such were the case, each party would have to pay their own quota; but as things go on, the whole expense is laid on John Bull. The point ought to be decided as follows:—if you supply armed men, or admit rebels to arm themselves in your territory, for the purpose of aiding the rebellion in the Canadas, in that case we ought instantly to declare war against America. With an additional army [illegible] numerous gun-boats, steamers, and [illegible] we may hope to capture New York, Boston, Baltimore, and Philadelphia; blockade the Chesapeake, settle the boundary question, and any other question, as you please. England can afford [illegible] 100,000,000*l.* in war; a similar amount expended [illegible]

United States will bring ruin on them: five years' hostility would completely knock them up.

The next point is to raise the needful. I hope, Mr. Editor, every Englishman is ready to come forward in a just cause, to give cheerfully a small portion of his property to save the remainder—compound! If one per cent. were laid on all real and personal property (which of course includes lands, ships, houses, goods, &c.) throughout the United Kingdom, including the Colonies, that sum would realise 400,000,000*l*, consequently reduce our national debt to that amount, it is no great sum for a man to sacrifice 10*l.* out of 1,000*l.* to save the remainder. By such reduction of debt, taxes on tea, sugar, wine, spirits, beer, &c., would be reduced one half! This saving of taxes to the consumer would in four or five years make up to each individual, whose property amounted to 1,000*l*, the sum of one per cent., or 10*l.* in the 1,000*l.*, taken from the above property.

THE BAYONET AND THE DRILL.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—Pending the promised communications from the Baron de Berenger, and the probable one from Maitre des Armes, on the Bayonet, permit me to call the attention of your numerous readers, especially those in authority, to a few subjects promised in my last; but prior to this, I must congratulate Baron de B. on the proposed form of the bayonet, viz., two-edged, with a central rib, as one universally recommended, of invaluable service (if unfixed) in storming, allowing the firelock to be slung, and relieving the men from the danger of being impaled during the escalade. Will the Baron favour us with a description of his patent bayonet? It is frequently alluded to by him, but we know nothing of its form or principle. Leaving then the improvement of the weapon to your able correspondents, may I be allowed to throw out a few suggestions for the improvement of the man, and thus render him in body and mind, as well as appointments, a truly efficient soldier? To attain this, is it not essential to remove or soften all seeming difficulties on his first entering the service, rendering his drill as attractive as possible, infusing a spirit of emulation, and, by throwing open to him amusement for his leisure hours, restrain him from seeking excitement in those dens of iniquity and vice—the soldier's curse, a pot-house? I propose, Mr. Editor, if favoured with a share of your columns, to consider these subjects in their due order, and if I succeed in calling the attention of those who rule us to the correction of one evil, or induce my comrades to refrain from one vice, I shall be amply repaid. I trust I need not disclaim any the slightest intention to cavil, but there are evils, Mr. Editor, which are seen in their full effect by those only who witness their daily working, and it is with this view alone I am induced to notice them, that they may be corrected by those who have the power, and also the will, (as I will know) if the necessity is once proved to their satisfaction.

THE ARMY, NAVY, AND COLONIES OF GREAT BRITAIN.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—The marrowless bones of a miser, who has wasted away through starvation, can never excite commiseration: so neither will the fallacies of a nation, which, through niggardly thrift, saps its own strength, under the specious pretext of economy. The monstrous folly of patriotic parsimony, which has so blightingly ruled the destinies of our Army and Navy for years, is daily developing itself to an astounding extent. Nor will this specious economy bear the test of investigation; for the sums contributed by England to Prussia, Holland, and Spain, would have supported an Army adequate to save us from the disgrace of acquiescing in the partition of Poland, and strengthening an ill-concealed foe—would have maintained a fleet competent to decide whether the pass of the Dardanelles should not be open to British ships, without the humiliation of a British diplomatist passing without a pennant at the mast-head of his steamer, as well as chastise the aggressors of commerce, in the case of the Vixen; and would likewise have enabled Great Britain to stamp a decision on the affairs of ill-fated Spain, widely different from the cold-blooded butcheries now devastating that country. Look to Great Britain, and what is she? A sandhill emerging out of the sea? No. A vast empire extending from Europe to Asia, Africa, and America; and whose possessions are scattered over the German, Pacific, Atlantic, and Indian Oceans; in every sea, and every gulf, nay, on whose dominions the sun never goes down. Is such a nation to circumscribe her Army and Navy to the mere requisite establishment of neighbouring States with scarce a Colonial possession? Nor France or Russia need to maintain a Navy beyond a becoming dignity during peace, though their extent of territory may demand a numerous Army. But even this latter force should be watched with an eye of scrutiny by England, especially as regards Russia; for the invasion of India has been the feverish dream of that power since the days of Catherine. And knowing this, what is the condition of India at this moment? Threatened by a numerous army of savage hordes, urged by the prospect of plunder, at the instigation of Russia, without an adequate force to dispute even their passage, much less to oppose any disaffection of chiefs from within; whilst a space, requiring four or five months to pass over, intervenes between England and India, even had we the troops to transmit! It has been a beautiful fallacy that "Russia cannot march into India;" she has, however, shown us that she may wage war through the medium of millions surrounding the territory. But the niggardly thrift of our patriotic economists has sapped the strength and the defences of our Colonies; and, however averse we may be to keep up an extensive army, the ocean being the high road to the Colonies, our right to its supremacy is indispensable, be the cost what it may; and to secure this, the Navy of England should at all times be equivalent to the combined Naval forces of both Russia and France, as its lowest estimate. This niggardly thrift of patriotic parsimony has placed England at this moment in a most pitiful plight: agitation in Ireland; anarchy in England; rebellion in Canada, coupled with desertions from the Army; and India assailed! Yet an Army insufficient for her wants, and a Navy whose numerical strength is far short of the combined armaments of her ancient rivals. In the Mediterranean, the African ports appear thronged with the armies of France; and the harbours of Egypt spangled with war-ships. If we cross to the Morea, and taking a peep through the Dardanelles—for we must not presume to sail through in these peaceable times—we see the navy of Russia careering the Black Sea, in the pride of superior numbers, with the assurance, moreover, that that of the Sultan is at their disposal, in return for promised protection which England declined to afford him the means of refusing. But is it at the close of the thirty-eighth year of the nineteenth century that we are first to awaken to the fact with which history abounds; viz., "that treaties are maintained only so long as suits the convenience of parties?" What though it be unprofitable to France to acquiesce in a war with Great Britain? Does she not owe us a grudge indelible as the spots on the leopard? And will she not sacrifice that which the whole nation despises, "commerce and trade," if she could but inflict the mortal stab! What guarantee have we that, with ports on the African shores, she would not coalesce with Russia, Egypt, and Turkey; and at a time too, when we are least prepared to resist such a combination of strength? Is the violation of treaties with Britain a novelty, on the part either of Russia or France? And was it not developed as far back as 1830 that, "it was certainly the policy of France to keep peace with England until the naval power of Russia should be able to defy that of Britain?" Since that time both Russia and France have progressively added to their naval strength. Our rulers have been repeatedly warned, that the moment when seamen are wanted is not the moment for devising encouragement for them to enter: and if they imagine that such men as we require for Petty and Warrant Officers will dedicate themselves to the Service, now that the widows are deprived of their pensions, they are wofully mistaken. War cannot be far distant; Turkey has not forgotten the fate of her fleet off Navarin; France retains a vivid remembrance of Trafalgar and Waterloo; Russia is dazzled with the gems of the East; and Egypt is strongly supposed to be favourable to France. And England, dear England, is controlled by a faction of parliamentary brawlers, who mislead the nation with the cry of economy; and whose practice is to reconcile enemies and rebels by the sacrifice of their friends. Hence the swarms of Polish refugee patriots, begging their bread through England; hence the yoke imposed upon Turkey; hence an Army insufficient for the protection of the British Empire, assailed by rebels within or freebooters without; and hence, should we submit to the dictates of the traitors of Canada, will be the loss of that Colony to Great Britain; and though last not least, hence the degradation of the Army and Navy of England! Must the remnant of her heroic "dead weight" retire to the gloom of a prison through want; and the orphans and widows of her warriors be consigned to separate cells in the pauper bastiles, with which this land of freedom has been so profusely studded by the patriotic economists! This is surely "sapping the energies of the country under a specious pretext of economy,' and wantonly exposing her to the fate of the "marrowless miser." And to whom shall she appeal in the hour of her necessity? Is it to the agitators of Ireland, the anarchists of England, or the rebels of Canada, whom she has evinced every disposition to conciliate? No;—her dependence is placed on the despised remnant of "dead weight," which she well knows will never desert her, despite their unmerited treatment.

An Old Sailor.

ENGINEERS, R.N.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—In the columns of your Paper, a few weeks back, I observed the suggestion of a "Naval Officer" relative to the conducting Her Majesty's steam-vessels into action in the event of war. I wish to know from this gentleman what plea he has for classing the Engineers of the British Navy with such a band of desperadoes as he had to deal with in his expedition to Portugal? He has cast a serious odium upon the character of the Engineers of the service, by stating that they are not to be trusted in the hour of need. What does he know of this class of officers, that he takes so great a liberty with them and their reputation? Nothing, that I can see, as he has not been employed under our Government in a position to be able to judge of their merits or demerits. As to his persuading the public that a Lieutenant or a Mate can regulate the machinery better than the Engineer, it is absurd. By the way this officer speaks of Engineers in the Navy, it is evident that he knows nothing of them; but should he at any time feel desirous of becoming better acquainted with this subject, by making it known through the medium of your Paper, he will receive from me such an answer as my humble ability and knowledge of these officers will permit, founded on truth and impartiality.

Canterbury, Dec. 30th. C. H. R.

[This is certainly, what we suggested, an abridgment of the former epistle. We have struck out personalities, which no correspondent should attempt to intrude on the readers of the N. & M. G.—Ed.]

FEMALE EMANCIPATION.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—Your notice of "Rambles in Canada" (N. & M. G. 22d Dec.) emboldens my calling your attention to a Military Paper, "Scenes in the Life of an Adventurer," published in the New Monthly Magazine. It exemplifies the justice of your comments on the Fidies of Mrs. J——'s class. The French female peasant, who served in the army, had no delicate habits nor station to sacrifice, nor did she strive to invade man's province of erudition. She evinces more respect for the sacredness of her sex than do some of our popular authoresses. One of her adventures shows that an English woman needs no masculine apprenticeship to prepare her for bravely defending a wounded parent's life, and her own honour; though her courage could but last while thus heartily required. The nondescripts who volunteer for scenes of peril and indecorum know little of the moral fortitude which so often hides beneath the unpedantic modesty which soldiers, sailors, sages, and all true men, expect in women.

For your defence of their best rights, I offer you the respectful gratitude of A Stay-at-Home.

RELIEF OF CORPS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—Being a constant reader of the Naval and Military Gazette, my attention has frequently been called to your observations on the Rotation System of Relief for Regiments on Colonial Service. In your Paper of last Saturday, you mentioned that the Canadian rebellion had prevented its operations—at least for a time—and that the 54th and 16th could not be expected to return to this country on account of the warlike state of affairs in India. Now, as I consider that system is calculated to give general satisfaction to the Army, I wish to show you a plan that would, in my humble opinion, help to bring it about, at least so far as to enable the authorities to withdraw those two regiments in the course of the ensuing year. The corps in New South Wales have been ordered to recruit to 769, which gives 110 duty-men to each more than they have at present.

The following is the strength of the depots at Chatham of the regiments in that colony:—

Corps.	Present with the Depot.	Wanting.	Total.
28th Regt.	84	110	194
50th do.	60	113	173
80th do.	58	100	158
51st do.	250	100	350
Total required to complete the corps in the Colony	452	423	875

I consider, that if the four hundred and twenty-three men were raised, and the eight hundred and seventy-five men embarked about July next, the 21st and 50th might both proceed to India, and New South Wales be better off for duty soldiers than at present; and I should advise that one hundred of the youngest and best-conducted military convicts might be allowed a chance of redeeming their characters in the 21st and 80th regiments—I mean one hundred in each of these corps. There are a number in New South Wales transported from regiments in Canada for their past attempts at desertion, and also a number from this country who would, if given a chance, not only redeem their character, but render good service to their country against her enemies in the East Indies. I would also recommend, that in place of the Infantry being employed on the Mounted Police, that ten or twelve light active Dragoons, from the regiments of Cavalry on home service, be selected and sent out as convict guards, and on their arrival relieve a portion of the Infantry from that duty, until the whole are entirely brought under their respective corps. By this arrangement a much better disciplined force of Police would be established, the ranks of the Infantry would remain unbroken, and their discipline as corps much better preserved. A veteran company might also be formed, to take the duty of the small detachments in New South Wales, on the same plan as the Newfoundland Company: not worn-out men, but active men, who might wish to become settlers in the colony after a certain period of service; their pensions at all times would enable the Government to call on their services after discharged should the colony become disturbed. This arrangement would be for the benefit of the service and the good of the colony. AN OLD SOLDIER.

WELSH REGIMENTS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—You will oblige an old subscriber by giving place in your columns to a few observations upon Arthur's last letter, headed "Welsh Regiments." It may seem unnecessary to enter into any very serious notice of a proposition which would give to the small principality of Wales an exclusively national army of her own (clad in a fancy dress of many colours), because I believe that such an idea could never be conceived excepting by the "intense pride" (as Arthur has himself very happily expressed it) of a Cambrian Briton. Here is Wales, a remote, thinly populated, and very ignorant part of the kingdom, with, according to the census of 1831, about 800,000 people; and, I believe, something above 500,000 acres of land. To this section of the British Empire Arthur proposes to give a national army, under national officers only; wisely, however, requiring us to give back to his Welsh Federation the English counties westward of the Severn. He proposes that the four Welsh regiments (Welsh as he calls them, for Monmouthshire and Shropshire are English counties, at the present period at least) should each have an additional battalion, in preference to every other corps in the Service; he would give the principality eight regiments of militia, each of eight companies, far above the present strength (for many of these Welsh corps are only companies), and eight companies of dismounted Yeomen into the bargain! Now, I am quite willing to grant our Welsh brethren an equality in every respect, quite as much, the world will say, as they can expect—more would be ridiculous. What have they done beyond the English, the Irish, and the Scots, that they arrogate to themselves (or rather, Arthur for them) the right of standing forth our military champions in a larger proportion to our population than the other parts of our empire? Wales but little exceeds the single county of York in extent of surface, is considerably inferior in population and importance, while the census of Lancashire exceeds all Wales by above 500,000 souls! Now, I never heard that a Yorkshireman was a worse man-at-arms than a Welshman (and I would back him at odds), but would not all Britain laugh if Yorkshire or Lancashire should demand a separate military establishment, especially should they propose to appear with buff coats and old "English" brown bills! Nay, should Scotland even, with a population of about three millions, which, unlike Wales, was never permanently conquered, demand an army exclusively her own, what answer would she receive from the collective empire? But, enough of this. I proceed to that part of Arthur's letter to which I would particularly invite attention—the passage wherein he asserts that the Cymraeg under his own officers "will be found staunch, devoted, and true, where an Irishman would mutiny, and a Saxon throw down his arms!!!" I may here, en passant, express my objection to the term "Saxon" as applied, by an educated person, to the English and Lowland Scots; not that there is anything in the word per se to be disliked or ashamed of—far from it; but because it is used by the ignorant natives of certain districts to express their hatred or contempt (however mistaken and ill-founded) for their former conquerors. But to the point. Surely the English and Irish officer and soldier must feel highly flattered by the Cymraeg's compliment! One will mutiny, the other throw down his arms. I leave my Irish friends to fight their own battles, which they are ever able and willing to do, and taking up the cudgel on the "Saxon" account, beg leave to ask Arthur whether the descendant of the chivalrous Norman, the fierce Dane, or the hardy Saxon, which drove the comparatively unwarlike Briton to the fastnesses of Cornwall and of Wales, and amid those fastnesses subsequently reduced him to vassalage—I ask whether the descendant of such men is to be told that he will throw down his arms when a Welshman would maintain the combat? If so, victorem victo succubuisse queror. But such is not the fact, and the assertion appears an insult to common sense, and every subject of the empire, not a Welshman.

The poor Welsh "bards" will no doubt thank Arthur for the lucrative and respectable rank of paymaster in the new Welsh army, especially if they be permitted, as usual, to levy contributions to the three-stringed harp. At all events his patriotism is sure to obtain from these minstrels at least the tribute of undying song; and though he may never live to see the bonnet rouge and tri-coloured kilts of the Welsh army (scarlet, purple, and light blue!), still, unkilled though he die, he will have the honour (and what can be so consolatory to the intense pride of a "Cymraeg?") of descending to posterity, second only to his illustrious ancestor and namesake, Arthur the Great. I have, &c., AN ENGLISH OFFICER.

TRISTRAM'S PONDERATION ON COMMANDER INMAN'S COURT-MARTIAL.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—With the new year I will present you with a new subject, that of the Court-Martial upon Commander Inman, his consequent dismissal, and the various opinions expressed by Triangle, X. Y. Z., Vindex, and Sentinel, being, with the Editor's remarks, the whole account I have seen relative to this unfortunate trial. I have conned over these letters with the most minute attention, and to do their authors justice, I must confess, that each composition of reason—sense—argument—and ability—but of argufication—

"Is tipped with a bit of the brogue,"

"Divil a bit of the blarney."

Each author unhesitatingly declares the sentence to be unjust and illegal—Tristram, JUST and LEGAL! Voyons.

Mr. Inman was tried upon two distinct charges preferred by Commander Reeve, viz. that of his servant boy being discovered in his bed on the morning of the 12 h of August last, and for absenting himself from his ship, and continuing so until the 19th, when he returned on board the Lily; to which charges my Lords of the Admiralty distinctly added, that "his conduct was also to be inquired into on the said 12th of August, and the six following days, and try him for the same." Sentence,—"First charge PROVED, but there has been no evidence to SATISFY the Court that the prisoner was conscious of that circumstance." Second charge, of delivering himself up as a deserter, NOT PROVED; "but the Court is of opinion, that the conduct of the said Commander Richard Inman, on the said 12th day of Aug., was highly irregular and unbecoming the character of an officer, and the Court doth, therefore, adjudge the said Commander Richard Inman to be dismissed Her Majesty's Service."

It is unnecessary to recapitulate the whole of the reasonings of the four able correspondents in question, as their letters can be referred to; but I will insert their final opinion, and argufy upon the whole. *X. Y. Z. concludes, "May I be permitted, through the medium of your respectable journal, to assume Amicus Curiæ to throw a little light on this strange, and, as it appears to me, illegal sentence? I use the word illegal, because the sentence both acquits and condemns the prisoner. It is like condemning a man to be hanged for murder, after the jury have brought him in not guilty. May I beg to know also, Mr. Editor, how far the arrest of a person, who is asleep, and not made acquainted with the cause of his arrest, is legally correct?" Tristram's answer—A delinquent, or person charged as such, may be arrested and imprisoned, drunk or sober, before trial.

"P.S.—I allow it is proved on trial, that Commander Inman, having been dining and supping on shore on the 11th August (a day by-the-bye not considered in the charges), returned on board at midnight, excited by wine; but it appears he went straight to bed. This can never, surely, be the offence for which Commander Inman has been broken. Indeed, strictly speaking, it took place on the day preceding the first date of the charges; so that even this sin (small as it is) cannot be laid to Commander Inman's charge without a forced construction."

Triangle† says—"It is the opinion of a great number of Naval officers, that the proceeding of the Court was arbitrary and unjust, for as no person accused him of any crime, save the two of which he was acquitted, I should like to know, why he was tried and condemned for an offence not preferred against him. I cannot conceive by what authority the Court acted, and I cannot discover a precedent for it; I, therefore, in conjunction with many others, believe the sentence to be illegal, and hope the Admiralty, by recognising it, will not compel Mr. Inman to resort to the Court of Queen's Bench, to teach the gallant officers, who formed the Court, that they must attend a little to common law in their future judicial proceedings."

"Vindex (in the 'Shipping Gazette,' 21st Nov. 1838) requires to be informed of the propriety or impropriety—justice or injustice—the legality or illegality of the sentence pronounced on Commander Inman. Opinion—1st. The Admiralty Order directs Commander Inman to be tried for such conduct. What is this conduct for which he is to be tried? The Order tells us: your conduct on the 12th Aug. and six following days. Is this his general conduct undefined by the prosecutor? The Order says nothing about general conduct; but it speaks with the utmost precision of particular conduct, by referring to three letters from Commander Reeve, and the whole of the circumstances set forth in these letters. These letters, in fact, form the indictment. The Court, therefore, had no legal right to try the prisoner for anything beyond the specific charges contained in the three letters. And the prisoner having, in his defence, clearly explained away, or disproved, the said charges to the satisfaction of the Court, as the sentence itself admits, his full acquittal ought to have followed, as in law a matter of course.

"2d. In fact, the Court did not try the prisoner for any conduct beside that specified in the three letters, in which he was acquitted: this leads to the same conclusion as above.

"3d. Supposing that any military offence had come out in the evidence, not specified in the indictment (the three letters), the Court had no legal right at that time to pass a sentence of punishment for it.

"4th. Both the Admiralty Order and the indictment are clear and specific; the mistake seems to have been made in the Court."

Thus it appears, this flying squadron of reasoners cruise in the press with a sweeping condemnation of the sentence, and unequivocally advise an appeal to the Court of Queen's Bench, to set aside the proceedings of the Court, and to bring its members up with a round turn,—"a mandamus,"—which means in nautical language, "members to muster" in the Queen's Bench to be rigged by the Lord Chief Justice. Their arguments and opinions appear very plausible, and when supported by such heavy mettle as leading articles, might prove injurious to the Naval Service, and hurtful to the feelings of the honourable members of the Court-Martial and the prosecutor, Commander Reeve,—were they not met on the high seas of the Naval and Military Gazette,—there overhauled, burnt, sunk, or destroyed, on the opposite tack, by the broadside of the redoubtable razee, ARQUIFICATOR.

It is alleged the Court has erred, or committed itself, by acquitting the prisoner of the second charge, and, although finding him guilty of the first charge, yet specifically declares there has been no evidence to satisfy the Court that the prisoner was conscious of that circumstance, and for having, in the face of such declaration, found his conduct on that occasion highly irregular and unbecoming the character of an officer, for which he forfeited his commission. X. Y. Z. and his companions forget that a Naval Court-Martial partakes of the nature of a court of honour and a court of justice. Those gentlemen support their position after their fashion,—I will do the same. The wholesome and moral regulation, throughout the British fleet, is, for each individual in it, to sleep in a separate bed,—the officers in cots or bed-places, the subordinates, crew, marines, seamen, and boys, in hammocks. ["Why don't every soldier in the army sleep in a hammock for cleanliness and morality?" "What's that to you, friend Tristram?" "Ah! what indeed, friend Editor; so pray forgive me."] If two individuals are found in one bed they are guilty of a misdemeanour. Now, let us suppose the First Lieutenant of the Lily had been "poor Jack," who reeled drunk to his hammock on the morning of the said 12th of August, and that a boy, half seas over like Pay, had mistaken his own hammock, and bundled in all standing, like a soldier en bivouac, alongside of his shipmate; suppose them so discovered in one bed, and reported to the Commander, would he, as commanding officer, after duly considering the evidence for or against the alleged criminality of the untoward circumstance, and had come to the opinion that both the man and the boy, from inebriation, were unconscious of being in bed together. I ask, would he have pardoned either offender for a breach of a proper regulation, under the plea of drunkenness? No. "There is no evidence," he would have said to the man, "to satisfy me you were conscious of the boy being in your hammock; but it is my duty to punish you both, the one at the gangway, the other at the gun, for drunkenness, which brought you into so critical a situation, that would have sent you, Jack, round the fleet, thence into the Marshalsea, had you been conscious of your forbidden and uncleanly bed-companionship." Is, then, poor Jack to suffer the infliction of the ignominious lash, and his commissioned superior to escape the degradation of dismissal for the same offence, though doubly aggravated in him as an officer?

In allusion to Lord Durham's road-side speeches at Plymouth and Exeter, the Quarterly Review justly asks, "How could the Earl of Durham, who had not yet rendered an account of his high mission to his mistress, or her ministers, have so far forgotten himself as to make his first appearance in England before such an audience—to be led out, as if he had been a mere Canadian bear, to dance for the rabble of a country town?"

* West of England Conservative, Oct. 24, 1838, which has honestly played its part for Mr. Inman. Its leading article on the trial is most judiciously expressed.

To Readers and Correspondents.

For the convenience of Subscribers, wishing to obtain back Numbers of this paper, we intend to have Agents at all the principal Ports. The "Naval and Military Gazette" may be had regularly of Mr. Yates, Bookseller, 118, Grafton-street, Dublin, and of Mr. Burrill, Library, Chatham.

"An Old Subscriber" (Dublin) may procure the Report for about 3s. 6d. at the Queen's Printing-office. Our last Number will explain the cause of our halting at the 25th. What has become of our correspondent "Say and Seal?"

A Correspondent writes, it is confidently stated that "the Orthographer of Brimstone Hill will ere long bid adieu to the tropics,—whether a general mourning, or other expressions of regret, will take place on the departure of the celebrated Orthographer is not yet decided upon." Our correspondent adds, "that the countenances of all begin already to assume a sombre aspect."

Subscribers wishing to complete the last year's volume for binding, should make early application to the Publisher, several of the Numbers being very scarce. A Supplementary Number, containing a complete Index, with Title-page, &c., is printing, and will be sent free of postage. Orders to be addressed to the Publisher.

"A Commander's Widow" is informed that there are many appointments in public offices eligible for the relatives of Officers. The Candidates are numerous upon every vacancy, and interest is essential to success.

Some silly person has had the impertinence to send us a puff paragraph respecting the life and adventures of a Dr. Thomas Williams—who, we know not; such notices would be out of place in our impartial and independent columns.

"Agamers," who, we recognise as an occasional Plymouth correspondent, will we hope, on reflection, admit that no good could arise from the publication of his letter, whilst it might lacerate the feelings of an old and gallant sailor. With regard to Joseph Hume, our correspondent's opinion is singularly incorrect; the character of that charlatan is well known to the Service, and we little expected to find his apologist a Lieutenant, R.N.

The letter of "M." on the New Army List shall have attention.

For the information of our readers, who have friends in India, we publish the dates, for the present year, on which the Mail for India, overland, will be made up in London. Letters from any part of the United Kingdom must be put into the local post-offices in time, so that they may arrive in London on the following dates. The charge on each single letter is 2s. 6d., no matter where posted. Jan. 19th, Feb. 16th, March 16th, April 13th, May 11th, June 8th, July 6th, Aug. 3rd and 31st, Sept. 28th, Oct. 26th, Nov. 23rd, Dec. 21st. The Mails, overland, from India will be due in London on the following dates:— Jan. 28th, Feb. 25th, March 25th, April 22nd, May 20th, June 17th, July 15th, August 12th, Sept. 9th, Oct. 7th, Nov. 4th, Dec 2nd and 30th. Letters posted in London, or so as to reach London, within seven days after the respective dates of despatch for India, can overtake the Mail, by paying for each single letter 3s. 6d., and marking the letter "via Marseilles."

The Distribution of the Navy and the Letter to Lord Hill, promised in our last, are, from more urgent matter, postponed till next week.

We are sorry to be again obliged to apologise to "One of the War" for the postponement of his letter.

We will write to "Tristram" and "+" on Monday.

Erratum—In Tristram's last—for "my Mid's pay was then 4s. 2¼d." read 1s. 2¼d.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 5, 1839.

So much party spirit has been indulged in discussing the state of the Navy—the alarmists advancing the most audacious exaggerations, reckless of explanation or denial, as to the means of our rivals, insisting that every ship they possess shall be reckoned as fit for immediate service, some even assuming every one of even the hulks to be in commission and at sea—whilst any questionable case, real or pretended, is abstracted from our own list, which is represented to be concocted and published for purposes of deception;—so much of this virulent partizanship having been recently displayed, it appears to us that nothing short of the statement that will soon take place in Parliament can serve to remove the delusion, and expose the un-English attempts that, on this and other occasions, have been made to prejudice the public against those who direct our national resources.

The argument of advocates engaged in this patriotic undertaking assumes to be this—that whilst the Navy of England is declining in numerical force and efficiency, and hastening to decay, the Fleets of rival States have progressively and proportionally increased in these essentials, and they cite the case of France especially in proof of this assertion.

Now, it is but a week or two ago that we published the official report of the Minister of Marine, and other subsequent statements, to prove, that so far from any increase having been made to the French Navy, the reverse is the fact; for whereas their Fleet amounted in 1814, at the close of the war, to 73 ships of the line, they only numbered 49 in the present year! Of this latter and lesser number, moreover, only 22 were afloat, and a moiety of the 27 building, not even in frame.

The United States of America commenced constructing line-of-battle ships in 1812, and launched one (the Independence) in 1814. In 1830 Captain de Roos enumerates their Navy as seven sail of the line afloat, and five building—total twelve. Since that time they have launched their only three-decked ship, Pennsylvania—the others still remain, and are likely to remain, upon the stocks; but, having converted the Independence into a frigate by razeeing, they have removed her from the list of line-of-battle ships, which now amounts to eleven only. So much for Jonathan progressing.

The Russian Navy is unworthy to be spoken of in comparison with these, and we may merely state that, in numerical force, it is smaller than it was fifty years ago! or at many periods since, and although it boasts some half-dozen tolerable ships, the majority are clumsy, frail, and rickety. The Russian Fleet has, in fact, been in all respects most preposterously and ridiculously exaggerated.

In the face of these facts, which any candid examiner might ascertain,—and which it is the duty of every one to ascertain who addresses the public upon the subject—in the face of this, and with the knowledge that we have 89 sail of the line in a condition for service, independent of a score or two more, which would be as efficient for guardships as Royal Billy, Namur, and Salvador del Mundo of olden memory—that 21 sail of the line are actually in commission for sea service—(we do not reckon the Ordinary and Receiving Ships, or the Gunnery Ship)—that 16 more have every article of furniture prepared, and are ready for commission immediately—still, with all this clearly explained, sometimes actually set forth in their own columns, as if for the purpose of stultifying their leading remarks, we find Journalists insisting that the Naval force of France, and of America also, is equivalent or superior to our own. This is a presumption upon the credulity of the public, that, was not the gullibility of John Bull proverbial, would never have been attempted.

But, it has been said, the ships possessed by France and America, although inferior in numbers, are superior in force, and thus the disparity is counteracted. This we again deny. We have more ships of equal force than either power, and if the excess of ours are inferior in that respect, who is to blame for this? Not the present Board of Admiralty, but former Boards, who pertinaciously persisted in building a class of vessels, and multiplying them upon us year after year, in spite of constant remonstrances, and with the full knowledge that our maritime rivals had long ago abandoned the construction of anything less than an 80-gun ship for line of battle. We have a few good ships, however, of the Rodney class, ten or a dozen of the Canopus class, the Vanguard in commission, and others building of the new class, and each and all these are equal to any two-decked ships of France or America. Our three-deckers are also fully equal to theirs; and, although it behoves us to increase the number of our heavy two-decked ships, rather than incur the expense of repairing inferior ones, we have nothing to apprehend from war with France or America, or both united, with Russia to back them, if it occurred to-morrow; for our peace establishment, of 21 sail of the line and 35,500 men, is a large one, of force superior to that of any former period and fully equal to the protection of British interests in all parts of the globe; and the crews could be made up to the war complement, even on foreign stations, in less than a week.

Leaving this subject for the present, we shall turn to the improvements which have already been accomplished in our Naval Departments, and others which we hear are contemplated.

The regulation lately adopted, of admitting five apprentices into the Dock-yards for every shipwright's vacancy as it occurs, and some other measures for facilitating the improvement of that useful body of men, have given great satisfaction; and we are glad to find that the full peace establishment of 7000 artificers will soon be completed.

The appointment of Naval Instructors, and more recently the establishment of an Institution for instructing and qualifying our young officers on subjects of science, is also matter of congratulation, and will tend greatly to encourage and facilitate that growing desire for knowledge, proficiency in mathematics, and the higher elements, which marks the superiority of the present young race of officers over those of the old school. It is questionable whether, at the commencement of the late war, the Navy possessed half-a-dozen men who could go through the process of disparting a gun; and it was proverbial, that many who had the reputation of excellent seamen could scarcely do more than take the altitude of the sun at noon, and perform a common day's work in navigation.

The entry of boys, with the understanding that, as they qualify and vacancies occur, they are to be rated men, is also a good regulation; and the perseverance in rearing merchant-seamen apprentice will produce a continual supply of seamen in quantity and quality sufficient for the demand.

Several other measures are, we understand under consideration. One is, to increase the proportion of seamen in ships' crews, and to decrease the Marines; to garrison some of our foreign arsenals with Marines, and thus, whilst every ship will afford seamen to form the nucleus of two crews in case of war, to render two or three more regiments of the line available for reliefs. We have heard also that it is intended to pay ships off all standing after a three years' tour, and to recommission them immediately—re-enter such of the men as are inclined, and then grant them reasonable leave of absence. By this means a great saving of stores will be effected, and the Petty Officers and best men retained, to the rejection of others. The general arming of ships, of every class capable of bearing them, with guns of larg calibre for throwing shells horizontally, has been already commenced, and many other improvements are meditated, or in progress, which want of space precludes us from adverting to at present.

The hopes of the veteran officers are centered in the Commission, and we trust they will not be disappointed. Upon the whole, spite of all the detraction that has been circulated to the prejudice of the Navy—much of it, we regret to say by Naval officers, or persons who assume that character—we think we may fairly congratulate the service on the improvements effected in the past, and many others which are contemplated, and will no doubt be effected, in the present year.

THE Army is recruiting successfully, and from all quarters we hear that a very good class of men are offering their services—chiefly men out of employment, but a few with the hope of rising from the ranks to be commissioned officers. At no period was there such an opening as at present for promotion from the grade of non-commissioned to that of commissioned officer, and we trust that the system now pursued may induce many more young men of character and ability to enter the service. Nearly two-thirds of the vacancies in the rank of Ensign are now conferred on Serjeant-Majors, Quartermaster-Serjeants, Colour-Serjeants, and even Serjeants. Any young man now of character and superior qualities as a soldier, may be certain by steady and zealous discharge of Military duty to become an officer, and placed in a position ultimately to become a General. Though we confess ourselves little disposed to think that the life of a private soldier is a good school for the future officer, we also freely admit that the present experiment is well worth trying. We do not anticipate that by opening promotion from the ranks we shall obtain a more efficient, better instructed, or more gallant body of officers, but we readily concede, that by the certainty of some rising to the rank of an officer, we may obtain a superior class of recruits—men whose good sense and self-knowledge will convince them, after knowing the service, that they are excellent materiel for the non-commissioned ranks, though utterly unfit for those of the commissioned. We do not think that the visions of elevated rank entertained at enlistment by a young man, however those visions may be dispelled by experience in his profession, and by a correct estimate of himself, are at all calculated to render him a listless or discontented soldier during his Military service. The entrance of a superior class of men, and their consequent advancement to the rank of non-commissioned officers, will ultimately force an improvement in the pay and position of that invaluable class, and thus render those ranks desirable objects of ambition to the middle orders of society. Large prizes induce many to venture in a lottery, who, though they miss the great gains for which they aspired, yet frequently obtain the minor prizes, which confer competence, but which would never have induced the holder to venture on obtaining. It is in like manner in the Army. Many may be induced to enlist with the hope of rising to the rank of officer now, who would not have before enlisted for the prospect of becoming Serjeant,—yet we doubt not that many will be found well satisfied with the improved and improving situation of a non-commissioned officer, though they may miss the grand prizes in the Military lottery—an Ensigncy, with 5*s.* 3*d.* per diem!

WE insert this week another page from the NEW ARMY LIST, the 27th Regiment. The great utility of this work, and the advantage which the Army at large is likely to derive from such a statement of their services and claims, are too self-evident to require dilating upon. It will, however, fully dispel the delusion that the Army are the best-paid servants of the Crown, which has been so often said, both in and out of Parliament, to answer party purposes, by the Economists.

The NEW ARMY LIST will exhibit such a full statement of every Officer's services, that it cannot be long before Parliament see the necessity of placing increased means in the hands of the Secretary-at-War and the Commander-in-Chief, so as to enable them to make an ample provision for old Officers, who are worn out by length of service, wounds, and infirmities, which have been contracted in conquering and guarding distant and unhealthy Colonies, from whence Great Britain derives her chief wealth.

We consider that every Officer in the Army, from the Commander-in-Chief downwards, owes a debt of gratitude to the compiler of this valuable, useful, and, at the same time, interesting publication. To the Secretary-at-War, the New Army List cannot fail to prove invaluable. Returns which have been called for by Parliament, from time to time, and refused on the sole ground of expense and length of time required to compile—in many cases stated to require months and years,—may now be prepared in a few short hours.

The manner in which the heroes of the Peninsula have been distinguished in the New Army List is truly gratifying to us, their claims having been so long and so warmly advocated in our columns.

No Officer who feels interested in his profession will, we are persuaded, be without a copy of the New Army List.

FACINGS, BUFF. Agents:—Cox & Co.

N.B.—The P. before the name denotes that the officer served in the Peninsula. W., medal for the Battle of Waterloo. P. before the date will show that the commission was purchased.

* Sir Lowry Cole commanded a division in the Peninsula and in France, and has received a cross and four clasps for Maida, Albuhera (wounded), Salamanca (severely wounded), Vittoria, Pyrenees, Nivelle, Orthes, and Toulouse.

† Col. Hare, previously to entering the regular Army, was an Ensign in the Tarbert Fencibles, from which he volunteered, to serve in the expedition to Holland, and was soon after gazetted to an Ensigncy in the 27th reg. In August, 1800, he embarked with his regiment in the expedition under Sir Jas. Pulteney,—joined the Army of Sir Ralph Abercromby, at Gibraltar, with which he served the Campaign of 1801 in Egypt. He was afterwards at the taking of Ischia and Procida in 1809, and at the battles of the 13th and 18th Apr., 1814, at Biar and Castalla; the siege of Tarragona; the blockade of Barcelona; and, finally, at the battle of Waterloo, where he was wounded.

§ Captain Smith was severely wounded at Waterloo.

IN recurring to the extraordinary transactions disclosed in the late investigation at Ipswich, we cannot sufficiently commend the admirable temper, gentlemanly-like bearing, and legal acumen, with which Sir Charles Dalbiac carried through a difficult and delicate duty. The whole case has clearly proved that the soldiers of the 4th Dragoon Guards might with good reason have been plaintiffs instead of defendants on the occasion, and that neither police nor magistrates had a leg to stand on. The Times of Saturday last, in its leading article, entered very fully into the real merits of the case, and we feel gratified that a journal read wherever English is intelligible, has done justice to the British soldier. In yielding our tribute of praise to the Times, which has always been just to the Army, we cannot but observe on the strict silence maintained by the Dispatch, Spectator, and others, on this investigation. Had the military been to blame, we should have been stunned with loud and continued deprecations of "military despotism," "military interference," "military espionage," &c. But in the late disagreement between the soldiers and the Ipswich police, the soldiers were those "sinned against," and consequently no notice is taken of the matter, or only mentioned without comment. Silence is often expressive!

THE correspondent in the Spectator, who signs his lucubrations on "Army Abuses" with "X.," has last week hashed up, from old and rather refuse materials, a farrago to suit the beggarly tastes of the economists. That "X." has merely reiterated his statements of last year in another form, we need only remind our readers of the alleged abuses into which we then examined, and which, we think, were proved not to be the abuses imagined by the visionaries of the economic school. In his letter, "X." stoutly maintains that in the British Army the officers are too numerous for the privates—proposes the French Army as a model of perfection—suggests combining every two regiments into one—calls for a reduction of ten extra companies in the 1st Foot Guards, and throughout, of all Subalterns extra to one per company—declares that gross abuses exist in the sale of commissions—assumes that there is too great facility in retiring on half-pay—and, finally, deprecates the employment of any but veteran officers as Paymasters. To refute all that "X." asserts, would be to reprint our articles of last year on the several points above enumerated; and we have as little space to do so, as our readers perhaps have patience to re-peruse them. If "X." has nothing more practical and practicable to propose than he has hitherto submitted in the pages of the Spectator, we can assure him that there is small chance of his seeing any of his schemes, however temptingly economic, adopted or even tried, at the great risk of present and future inefficiency.

THE "Flag-Officer," in publishing an edition of his pamphlet, (a copy of which we beg to acknowledge), has had the grace to qualify his statement respecting the amount of the French Navy, excusing his exaggeration in the following terms:—"In the former statement it was said that France had fifty-seven ships of the line in commission or ready for it, and their names were given. This account was furnished by a French to an English Naval Officer, both in command, not long ago, in the Mediterranean; but it appears to have been increased by four or eight ships of the line. The Morning Chronicle gives (as from Baron Tupinier) the list of the French line-of-battle ships as forty-nine, none under eighty-two guns, but does not report the number of frigates."

Now, if we recollect rightly, our exposé of the "Flag-Officer's" exaggeration preceded the Morning Chronicle's by a few days, (in fact was copied by our contemporary with due acknowledgment); but let that pass. We have quoted the above paragraph for the purpose of showing how easily a mistake of merely eight ships out of fifty-seven is rectified, and contrasting the behaviour of a French and English Naval Officer as regards the national feeling displayed. The one commits a highly dishonourable act in palming a false list for a true and substantial account; but this is excusable in comparison with the conduct of the gallant Admiral, who adopts the contrary course of holding up to public view, and monstrously exaggerating, everything he chooses to consider amiss connected with his profession. It appears to us remarkable, however, that a French Officer should furnish an account enumerating twelve ships which had disappeared from the list, some for several years, whilst the names were never restored, and omit the names of four ships that did really exist. The excuse seems to carry some suspicions with it; but exaggeration upon every subject is what the "Flag-Officer" indulges in. The forty sail of the line at Spithead, in 1790, were ordered to be assembled, it is true; but although put in commission, and partially fitted at the expense of three millions, they never did assemble to that amount or anything approaching it, but as he begins, so he ends, with a fallacy—to say nothing of those plentifully studded in the body of the pamphlet. In the concluding paragraph he states, "the Canopus was taken at the Nile, forty years ago: we have only built the Asia and Ganges, and perhaps a couple more after her." Our Naval readers are doubtless well informed on this point, but to enable others to test the value of the gallant Rear-Admiral's authority, we may just state that the following ships have been built on the lines of Canopus, and that they are all at present in existence, and even Canopus herself might be repaired for service with little cost or labour:—Asia, Bombay, Calcutta, Clarence, Formidable, Ganges, Monarch, Powerful, Thunder, and Vengeance, all of 84 guns, launched between 1821 and 1862.

It is reported to be the intention of the Board of Admiralty to place the Ordinary Establishment, at Portsmouth, Plymouth, Sheerness, and Chatham, on board a sea-going ship of first or second rate, and to keep several hundred disposable supernumeraries on board these ships and the flag ships, which, together with the vessels usually fitting for reliefs, will present, on emergency, a fleet of eight or ten sail of the line on the home station. This simple measure is quite sufficient to relieve any uneasiness on the score of the Russian fleet; but we confess, looking at the position of matters, the able, vigorous, and powerful policy of the Governor-General of India, and the turn which affairs have taken in the East, the easy suppression of the several outbreaks in the Canada provinces, now effectually protected by regulars and well-trained militia,—all these and other matters considered, we are at a loss to conceive what cause can arise, and from what quarter, to occasion war, unless we chose to declare it ourselves, in order to give our "young blood" a little of that experience which may be useful to them hereafter.

As the calumniators of the Navy have been indefatigable in asserting that the Dock-yards are deficient in stores, we have made inquiry on this head in quarters from whence authentic information is to be procured, and we can assure our readers, that there is ample store in reserve of every essential article required for fitting a fleet that cannot be readily obtained in the market, and which it would be wasteful to stow away to perish. Of masts in particular (about which some ridiculous statements have been made, because the Marquis of Anglesey could not obtain a Riga spar for the mast of his cutter yacht) we find that, independent of those prepared for the usual purposes of supply, and for all the demonstration ships, there are spars now in store in the several Dock-yards more than sufficient for the masts of one hundred sail of the line! These spars are principally brought from the South Seas, are of good quality, being proved quite equal to the Riga or American, and considerably cheaper.

We are gratified to learn, that the enlistment of seamen during the past month has been most successful; already upwards of 1000 have entered; and no doubt is entertained but that, by the end of the present month, the full number of men, under the vote for the year, will be employed. This has been effected without the offer of bounty or gratuity of any kind, merely by making known to the men the advantages they are entitled to, by means of the Blue Bills posted up about the haunts of seamen.

The sneers which have been occasionally indulged in respecting the probable effects of these invitation Blue Bills, remind us of those sapients, who passed opinions equally valuable on Suwaroff, when training his soldiers against figures of straw preparatory to the storming of Ismail, "by way of lesson against actual Turks."—

> "At which your wise'acres sneer'd in phrases witty:
> He made no answer—but he took the city."

The fact is, these Bills were exhibited originally in 1836, they were successful then, and have been posted up at the different rendezvous ever since. By multiplying them, and employing some resident officers at the principal ports to enter volunteers, seamen can be procured so readily, it is the best answer to those who are continually instancing, as one cause of our Naval decay, our inability to man the fleet. We are of opinion, that when it becomes necessary to offer bounty or gratuity, plenty of men will be obtained; and that they are obtained now with greater facility than heretofore, and that the limit of service, and other advantages made known to them, have their effect, may be proved by contrasting the present period with 1816, when, although thousands and tens of thousands of seamen had been recently paid off, and were actually begging in the streets, Lord Exmouth's fleet could not be manned until a gratuity of two months' pay was offered.

At present the merchants afford full employment to all the seamen they can obtain; and the building of hundreds of new ships on the Mersey, the Wear, and the Clyde, which will of course require crews in the spring, is proceeding with a vigour unparalleled since the war. As these invitation Bills attract the seamen, even under such circumstances of competition with shipowners, it is plain that the Board of Admiralty, who ordered them to be posted, know more of the disposition of the men, than those who are constantly cavilling at their measures.

On Saturday despatches were sent from the Colonial-office for the Governor of the settlement at the River Gambia, and for Sir A. Woodford, Lieut.-Governor of Gibraltar. Despatches were received from the Governor of the Bahamas, Prince Edward's Island, and Bermuda. On Monday despatches were received at the Colonial-office from Capt. Prescott, R.N., Governor of Newfoundland; and from Maj.-Gen. Middlemore, Governor of St. Helena. On Tuesday despatches were forwarded from the Colonial department for the Governors of Jamaica and Barbadoes, and for the officers administering Her Majesty's Government in the Windward and Leeward Islands. Despatches, dated Oct. 16, were received in Downing-street, from the Cape of Good Hope, and at the India Board from the officer commanding at Singapore. On Wednesday despatches were received at the Colonial-office, from Sir W. Nicolay, Governor of the Mauritius. On Thursday Mr. James S. Stopford left town for Marseilles and Malta, with despatches from the Foreign-office. Despatches from Sir G. Arthur, Lt.-Governor of U. Canada, were received, and despatches were sent off from the Colonial-office for Sir J. Colborne, Governor of L. Canada; and for Sir G. Arthur, Lieut.-Governor of U. Canada. On Friday despatches were sent off from the Foreign office, for the Marquis of Clanricarde, Ambassador at St. Petersburgh.

General Lord Hill, Lord Fitzroy Somerset, and Sir Henry Hardinge, have been staying the holydays at Sir Robert Peel's seat, Drayton Manor.

The Commander-in-Chief, Lord Hill, arrived at the Palace, Brighton, on Wednesday on a visit to the Queen. His Lordship left for London on Thursday.

The Port Admiral, Sir Philip Durham, and the Governor of Portsmouth, Sir Thomas M'Mahon, dined at the Palace on Wednesday. Sir Philip Durham and the Governor left Brighton on Friday on their return to Portsmouth.

Colonel Sir W. Gosset, K.C.H., Sergeant-at-Arms to the House of Commons, has met with a serious accident. Sir William and his family are passing the holydays with the Marquis of Anglesey, at Beau Desert, Staffordshire. On Monday se'nnight, as Sir William was leaving his dressing-room, and proceeding down stairs, his foot slipped, and he was precipitated to the bottom with such violence that his collar-bone was broken, and otherwise slightly injured. We are happy, however, to add that he is going on favourably.

The brothers and sisters of the present Earl of Clarendon, Ambassador at Madrid, are to be raised to the precedence of Earls' sons and daughters. One of the latter is married to Mr. Lister, Registrar-General of births and marriages, brother to the late Lady John Russell.

An encampment of Knights Templars was last week held at the Tiverton Freemasons' Hall, when Sir Knight the Rev. John Huyshe was re-elected Eminent Commander of the Royal Sussex Encampment for the year ensuing, and two Companions of the H.R.A. Chapter, attached to St. George's Lodge, No. 129, were installed.

Marshal Soult, on his way to Paris, was attacked by four highwaymen, who were resisted and beaten off by the valet and other domestics of the Duke, who was, during the entire of the affair, enjoying a profound slumber in his carriage, and only learned the danger he had incurred when he awoke at the end of the stage.

Last week a large shipment of arms was made to Leghorn per the Gulnare, Capt. Vaughan, viz., 800 boxes, each containing ten, equal to 8,000 muskets and bayonets.

Mrs. Maclean (L. E. L.), wife of George Maclean, Esq., Governor of Cape Coast Castle, died suddenly on 15th October last, from mistakingly swallowing an overdose of prussic acid. It seems but the other day that she left England to follow the partner of her fortunes and hopes to another land. The qualities which gave to "L. E. L." so proud and permanent a claim upon public admiration, were not those which constituted the chief charm of her character in the estimation of her more intimate and deeply-attached friends. Brilliant as her genius was, her heart was after all the noblest and truest gift that nature in its lavishness had bestowed upon her—upon her, who paid back the debt which she owed for these glorious endowments of heart and mind, by an indefatigable exercise of her powers for the delight of the public, and by sympathies the most generous and sincere with human virtue and human suffering. More perfect kindness and exquisite susceptibility than hers was, never supplied a graceful and fitting accompaniment to genius, or elevated the character of a woman.

We regret to announce the death of the Dean of Exeter, Dr. Landon, for many years Provost of Worcester College. Dr. Landon was the uncle of the lamented L. E. L.

The Archbishop of Cashel (Dr. Laurence) died on 28th ult., at his town residence, Upper Merrion-street, Dublin, after a few days' illness.

M. Van de Weyer, the Belgic Minister, will receive, with the hand of Miss Bates, daughter and heiress of John Bates, Esq., one of the leading partners in the firm of Barings and Co., a fortune of 800,000*l.* The young lady is in her 19th year; his Excellency 45.

An attempt has this week been made to murder Lord Norbury while his Lordship was walking through a shrubbery on his estate of Kilbeggan, county Meath. The assassin lodged several slugs in his victim's breast. His Lordship survives, but his recovery is considered doubtful. Various rumours prevail as to the cause of the outrage.

The legal advisers of the Canadian prisoners have effected an arrangement with the authorities of the Treasury, for the prisoners to be brought up from Liverpool on a writ of Habeas Corpus.

Mr. Stephens is committed, and held to bail in 1,000*l.* and two sureties in 500*l.* each.

The Court.

The Queen and her august Mother continue in the enjoyment of excellent health. Her Majesty has rode out on horseback every day of the week. On Tuesday next the Queen and the Duchess of Kent, with their respective suites, will take their departure for St. James's Palace.

The Marchioness of Breadalbane has succeeded the Countess of Durham, as Lady of the Bedchamber to Her Majesty.

Theatres.

Olympic.—On Wednesday night this theatre was crammed to suffocation to the ceiling. The Bengal Tiger was first despatched, and then came the Blue Beard and the Vestris. The greeting was enthusiastic. The audience rose, hats and handkerchiefs were waved, flowers were thrown on the stage, shouts of "Welcome" reiterated, and the scene prolonged until it almost appeared to become oppressive and embarrassing to its objects. Whatever mortifications Madame may have endured at the other side of the Atlantic, she was amply compensated for by the enthusiastic reception she met with from her old friends in her own house. The burletta of Blue Beard is a genuine Christmas drollery, full of fun and frolic. It belongs to the most enjoyable species of burlesque. The travestie grows naturally out of the pomposity of the original. It is the trumping of a grave exaggeration by a comical exaggeration, and it wins the odd trick.

Adelphi.—Mr. Bihin, a Belgian giant, made his appearance in London, on Monday, at this house. A burletta, entitled The Giant of Palestine, served to introduce the new-comer, who was warmly welcomed. The piece is well arranged as a vehicle for showing the powers of the giant. The character of Armida, the heroine, was assigned to a young lady named Fortescue, who made a most favourable and promising first appearance on the occasion. Though new to London, she has evidently had considerable practice on the stage, and will certainly be an acquisition to it. Her talents are of a superior order, and her person is in every respect adapted to the line she has chosen. She also possesses the charm of a most attractive voice; her action is easy, natural, and appropriate; and there is a liveliness and vivacity of expression in her countenance which show that she feels all she utters. We have seldom seen a more favourable debût.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

Russia.—The ceremony of the betrothal of the Grand Duchess Maria of Russia to Duke Maximilian of Leuchtenberg, took place at St. Petersburg on the 18th ult.

Canada.—The Court-Martial at Kingston commenced its sittings on 28th Nov. in Fort Henry. On that morning, Daniel George, of Jefferson county, said to have been Paymaster of the American forces, was put on his trial, which closed on the following forenoon. On the 29th, Noll S. Von Shoultz, the Polish General, was brought up, and pleaded guilty to the charge brought against him. Another American brigand, Dorotheus Abbey, was put on his trial on St. Andrew's day. On the 4th Dec. the prisoners began their defence by handing in a protest, denying the competency of the court to try them, which was rejected by the president, Major-General Clitheroe. The evidence is clear against all but three; sentences not yet pronounced. Sir John Colborne will revise the proceedings before final judgment is passed.

A considerable sensation had been produced at Toronto on 30th Nov., by the arrival of an express from the west, bringing despatches from Colonel Airy, at Amherstburgh; that the 85th regiment, who were for three days previous under orders to be in readiness, were immediately despatched to London; and that the 32d regiment would be removed direct to Amherstburgh.

Turkey.—Constantinople, 7th Dec.—The accounts of the successes of the Lesguees against Kubba and Shekhee are confirmed; and the Lesguees, with the assistance of the inhabitants, have succeeded in surprising and capturing the fortress of Derbend. The Lesguees continue to occupy the districts of Shekhee and part of Sheerivan; and the Russian forces which had been hastily collected in that part of the country, having marched against the Lesguees, have been repulsed with considerable loss.

The Paris National Guard has had three Commandants-General since 1830. The first, General Lafayette, could scarcely hold on horseback; two or three servants were required to get him upon his charger, and when he was in the saddle his friends were in perpetual fear of his parting from it. In the last months of his command he issued his mandates from a safer station—an open carriage. His successor, Marshal Lobau, was much steadier in the stirrups, but he was so deaf that his infirmity gave rise to ludicrous blunders. The third and present Commandant, Marshal Gerard, rides tolerably, hears well, but is so short-sighted that he cannot distinguish a sentinel from his box at a distance of ten paces.

Literary Notices.

The Widow Barnaby. By Frances Trollope, Author of The Vicar of Wrexhill, A Romance of Vienna, &c.—3 vols. R. Bentley.

A novel of the good old class, full of glorious comedy, and vigorous and contrasted portraiture. The heroine, Mrs. Barnaby, a plump, husband-hunting, showy, mean, and vulgar adventuress, is one of the most dramatic and effective delineations which has ever proceeded from Mrs. Trollope's pen; while her may-pole maid, Betty Jacks, makes as capital and droll a companion to her in her manœuvres as Sancho Panza did to Don Quixote. As a set-off to these humorous characters, we have the meek, lovely, and much-enduring Agnes Willoughby, niece to, and especially oppressed by, the course and selfish widow. The base vice of selfishness has, indeed, never been displayed in more striking colours than are exhibited in the elaborate portrait of Mrs. Barnaby. The following significant passage shadows out pretty plainly the course of the story:—

Mrs. Barnaby had once heard it said by a clever man, that human wishes might oftener be achieved, did mortals better know how to set about obtaining them.

'First,' said the oracle, 'let him be sure to find out what his wishes really are. This ascertained, let him, in the second place, employ all his acuteness to discover what is required for their fulfilment. Thirdly, let him examine himself and his position, in order to decide how much he, or it, can contribute towards this. Fourthly, let him subtract the sum of the capabilities he possesses from the total of means required. Fifthly, let him learn by, with, and in his heart of hearts, what it is that constitutes the remainder; and sixthly, and lastly, let him gird up the loins of his resolution, and start forth DETERMINED to aquire them. Whoso doeth this, shall seldom fail.' It was upon these words that she now pondered. Her two elbows set on the open bureau, her legs stretched under it, her lips resting upon the knuckles of her clasped hands, and her eyes fixed in deep abstraction on the row of pigeon-holes before her, she entered upon a sort of self-catechism, which ran thus:—

Q. What is it that I most wish for on earth?
A. A rich and fashionable husband.
Q. What is required to obtain this?
A. Beauty, fortune, talents, and a free entrance into good society.
Q. Do I possess any of these? . . . . and which?
A. I possess beauty, fortune, and talents.
Q. What remains wanting?
A. A free entrance into good society.

'Then!' she exclaimed aloud, 'it is that I want, and it is that I must procure.'

Remarks on the Connexion of the Wellington Memorial and the Waterloo Model, with a suitable Elevation. By F—S—T.

This little brochure follows up the suggestions we put forth in our Gazette of the 8th September last, that the Waterloo Model should constitute a portion of the National Memorial to the Duke. Since our suggestions, the Model has been visited and admired by thousands, and from the opinions we have heard, we are confident that the public generally would approve of an arrangement by which this beautiful work of art should occupy the basement of the monument. The subject is of such interest to all military men—indeed, we may add, to every one who is proud of being an Englishman—that we must make room for an extract of some length:—

"It is a subject that can never lose its interest in this nation. Thousands will inspect it from patriotic feeling, and thousands from the best and most sacred sympathies of our nature. Many are the encomiums passed by Officers who were engaged upon the field; and frequently, during my visits, have I observed that tears are shed at the remembrance of departed friends, 'who slept in death as evening closed on Waterloo.'

"But the model has higher pretensions than mere exhibition. The contemplation of such a disposition would not have stimulated the author to commence a work entailing such expenditure, nor would such a probable mode of remuneration have supported him during the tedious details of a seven years' task. It has a national value, and will become a means of historical reference. The amount of talent therein displayed merits our commendation; whilst the strict regard to truth, divested of prejudice or jealousy, bespeaks a noble cast of mind, too confident in the accumulation of its mass of facts to lend itself to envious wishes, or to bend to partial views. Information relative to the situation of the various forces employed upon that day, and at the particular hour, appears to have been collected from every authentic source, and this combination of truths offers so full and so complete an evidence of the soundness of the military tactics of the Duke, that I hesitate not to predict that this model will be the means of harmonising the conflicting opinions which have for so long a season agitated the military world; and will so explain and simplify the operations and the movements of 'the royal game of war,' that even civilians,—loving and honouring, as we do, the Duke, and desirous, as we are, of upholding all our national and well-earned reputation for manly conduct in the field—will be able to give a reason for our pride of arms—to show a worthy object for our praise—and thus, with positive demonstration, refute the insinuation of our enemies, 'that our immortal Wellington' is but the hero of 'the chance-obtained victory of Waterloo.'

"In this respect, coming, as the model does, just as we are about to render the Duke a mark of distinction, the most honourable that has fallen to the lot of any subject of this or any other nation, it is most valuable and important. Some there are who wish to detract from the merits of the Duke, by mentioning the timely arrival of the Prussian troops as an accidental circumstance, which changed the features of the field, saving the British from disastrous defeat, which their temerity deserved.—Others, again, wish to conceal the presence of this force, and labour much to prove the completion of the victory unaided by that power. This had truly been a miracle! The field might, and probably would, have been ours. The enemy was already baffled, weakened, and dispirited; but the total overthrow, the almost utter annihilation of 70,500 men, having an immense and overwhelming artillery force, all men of one nation, engaged heart and soul in the cause of Napoleon, could not reasonably have been anticipated as capable of accomplishment by an allied force of 69,900 troops—men of various nations, 17,500 of whom had not the confidence of the Duke, could not be placed in active opposition to the enemy, and were more than suspected of a readiness, upon the first reverse or fitting opportunity, to augment the opponent's ranks.

"Now, both of these attempts to mislead the public are alike foreign from the facts shown by the model, and utterly inconsistent with the well known character of the Duke. No man depended less upon chance or miracle than Wellington. The arrival of the Prussian troops at a certain point, and at a well-computed time, was, in fact, the consummation of a preconcerted plan; the delay or non-arrival of that force would have been the accident.

"This awaiting of a portion of the Prussian Army formed the peculiar feature of the day, and enforced upon the Duke the necessity of a steady and continued defensive operation, the most harassing to the mind, and the most trying to the courage and spirits of our men.

"The first gun fired by the Prussians, far off, upon the extreme left of the Duke's position, was heard by him. His expectation, and the dependence placed upon the character and co operation of Blucher, thus was realised; but hours elapsed ere yet the arrangement was fulfilled, and ere the position was complete.

"From time to time evidence was given that the Prussians were forming on the field. The operation of their force upon the extreme right of the French line completed his preconcerted plans, and then it was, certain of victory, the French Army and the person of Napoleon almost within his grasp, that Wellington first moved from a position so admirably chosen, that it left not, for his adversary, a solitary point for satisfactory selection.

"In this there was not seen the reckless sacrifice of human life prominent in the progress of Napoleon, and there was none of the impetuous bravery of the French, who carry all things by a coup de-main, or break away in hasty and disorderly retreat, but there was the steady determined endurance, and the strict enforcement of a well-organised plan, upon which his troops well knew they must and could depend.

"The maintenance of a well-chosen position during the eight preceding hours, beneath the ravages of a well-directed and destructive fire, followed by the most desperate attacks that the most desperate measures could induce—saved the British troops from utter annihilation; whilst the simultaneous burst, when permitted to advance, of pent-up spirits burning for the attack, swept, like an overwhelming flood, the wavering, the disorganised, the disjointed remnants of the opposing host, no longer found 'Invincible,' and shows in the most conspicuous light the character of the Duke, and of the troops then subject to his command.

"I will not now indulge in farther comments on the character of the leaders or the troops engaged upon the field, lest envy, ever ready to detract, might thence infer that such an essay had become desirable. I leave the Duke to reap the certain honours of that day, and to accumulate esteem for honesty of principle in his political career. The name of 'Waterloo' I find engraved upon the heart of every one who feels himself an Englishman, and thence I argue, or infer, that I need not trumpet forth the merits of a work admired and praised by all, and inseparably connected with the brightest passage of our British history. I seek, in this feeble exposition of facts, the opportunity of making known a plan which has already been proposed, and is now silently, and without effort, stealing into general esteem, awaiting only the announcement, in a business form, to find supporters in all ranks, and zealous advocates in parties hitherto adverse, who here will find a new and neutral ground, which they, with honour and consistency, may occupy.

"This model is the only work which yet has shown the merits of the field. It is the only model whereby civilians can be made to comprehend the circumstances of a day in which, as English men, we are deeply interested and concerned, the duties—the glories—and the dangers of which have been left untold by all the despatches we have ever read, and have been doubly confused by all the pictures we have ever seen.

"If we secure this work, and annex it to the statue of the Duke, we shall form a memorial both instructive and interesting. If, on the other hand, from parsimonious views, we fail to embrace the opportunity, a national disgrace will be entailed upon us, and we shall stand chargeable with want of love for every thing but wealth, and with burying all our zeal beneath our hoards of gold."

Since the foregoing was in type, we have seen the United Service Journal for this month, and in that valuable publication we find some remarks (with a slight alteration) we beg to introduce:—

"We avail ourselves of the suspension of hostilities between the contending parties respecting the site of the Wellington statue to offer to their notice a tertium quid, in the shape of a suggestion, which may produce a compromise between their conflicting opinions. Capt. George Smith, late of the Excellent, an officer who has already invented an original and most appropriate design for the Nelson Memorial, has been kind enough to show us a sketch, which we consider equally marked by propriety as the former. Captain Smith, arguing that similar objects should, for obvious reasons, be situated rather in places of recreation than of business, proposes that the statue of the Duke of Wellington should be erected in Hyde Park, opposite the Grosvenor Gate, and on the spot where the Sovereign has of late years been in the habit of reviewing the troops. The statue faces down the mall, that is, towards Apsley House, so that its front would be presented to promenaders, and, when marching up, to the Military; while a fine side-view is obtained from the east and west. The pedestal, on which the equestrian statue immediately stands, rises from the centre of a massive square base, enclosed at top by a railing, and containing an area for standing within the railed space. The four faces of the base are sculptured in bas-relief, to represent a square of Grenadiers repelling Cavalry, as at Waterloo, in the centre of which the statue may be supposed to stand. Thus placed, the illustrious warrior is imagined on such occasions to support with his right arm the Royal Standard floating over the Monarch, posted within the railed space beneath, and engaged in reviewing the troops, who cannot fail to be inspired with a higher degree of devotion to their Sovereign and country by the image and office of him who was so glorious and devoted a champion of both. Such is an outline of a design which we consider better calculated to meet the object in view than any other of which we have yet heard."

The site suggested by Capt. Smith appears to us the best adapted in every respect; his design has also our fullest approbation; it would associate Wellington with the British Army for future ages. The model might occupy a portion of the basement.

Finden's Royal Gallery of British Art. Part II. F. G. Moon.

We have before us the second part of this truly beautiful and national production, which, thus far, more than realises the high expectations we had formed of it. The three plates of which it consists may perhaps be considered as of about equal merit; but the one which, if we mistake not, will most please all classes of observers, from the most classical to the most common-place, will be Mr. Uwin's Neapolitan Peasants. It is in fact one of the most charming productions of our day; and it is in the perpetuation and dissemination of works like this that the Royal Gallery of British Art will perform its high and important office. There is a charm in the composition of this picture, which is more rare in English art than the high position which it holds in Europe would entitle us to expect. The conception and arrangement of the whole group are at once consummately skilful and scientific, yet perfectly natural, easy, and free from the pedantry of art. The engraving has been beautifully executed by Sangster, and forms a gem that is scarcely exceeded in brilliance and purity by any modern work of its class. The other two plates consist of Wilkie's well-known Smugglers' Intrusion, and Linton's charming and classical landscape composition, The Ruins of Carthage; the latter engraved by Wilmore, the former by Bacon. These works are so well known and so justly appreciated as high evidences of the position of British art in our own day, that we need not refer to them in detail. We have only to add, therefore, that the three plates forming this part are not merely perfect in their respective kinds, but they offer together a noble testimony of the unrivalled condition of art among us in both its leading departments.

We observe with pleasure that the size of these plates has been greatly enlarged since the first number; and we understand it is the intention of the proprietors to continue them on this increased scale—a pecuniary sacrifice which they are enabled to make in consequence of the extensive patronage the work is already enjoying.

Standard Library. W. Smith.

Since our last notice some further excellent reprints have appeared in this cheap and beautiful edition, viz., the "Memoirs of the Life of Colonel Hutchinson, Governor of Nottingham Castle during the Civil War," St. Pierre's "Paul and Virginia," and Madame Cottin's "Elizabeth." The works for the Standard Library are so judiciously selected, that they cannot fail in commanding, what they deserve, a very extensive sale. The type and paper are suitable for the best libraries, and they will therefore supersede all the spurious editions, whether English, French, or American.

The English Bijou Almanack, for 1839. By L. E. L. A. Schloss.

This unique curiosity, embodying a calendar, verses and portraits, eclipses all the Almanacks of the season. In size it is rather less than half an inch, but the typography is clear and distinct, and the portraits are gems. At this moment the sympathy of the public generally is awakened by the melancholy death of L. E. L., and we cannot do better than recommend this Bijou as a fitting memento of that accomplished lady.

EXTEMPORARY LINES

On Reading in the Papers an Account of all that will happen to England if she has not 1,000,000,000 ships afloat, toute de suite, to make a wooden wall all round her stores.

Oh, alas! what sad times do we live in,
Enough all old women to frighten;
Some folks have a serious misgiving,
That our Queen will be stolen from Brighton

By a Yankey ship—bless us, how shocking!
I really do hope it won't happen though,—
Only fancy her "throwing the stocking"
With Mr. Van Buren or Papineau.

That the Russian fleet will be paraded
Thro Thames, as Van Tromp's did of yore,
And the ports of Old Albion blockaded
By foes whom she walloped before.

That her fleet, by the Egyptian defeated,
Will pass through Gib's gut in hot haste;
Poor England, how very maltreated
You must be, on paper at least.

But rouse thee, thou old English Lion,
Look forth as of old on thy foes;
They fancy, old chap, thou art dying,
And misunderstand thy repose.

Show thy teeth, shake thy mane in thy ire,
Give a growl and a glance once again,
And see if they'll stand the eye's fire
Of the monarch at rest in his den.

Oh, no! like the Lamb thou art quiet,
As peaceful as infant asleep;
Disturb thee,—who dares, let them try it,
Thy waking shall trouble the deep.

Then Russian, Egyptian, and Yankee,
If you value your bones, do not come;
For favours intended we thank ye,—
The Lion's awake and "at home."

And England, the birth-place of Beauty,
The home of the Brave and the Free,
Will find every son do his duty,
For Nelson still lives on the sea. W. P. N.

THE LATE GENERAL SIR SAMUEL HAWKER, G.C.H.,

Colonel of the 3rd Regiment of Dragoon Guards.

This officer, whose lamented death we noticed in our last, commenced his military career in May, 1779, as a Cornet in the 16th Light Dragoons, and particularly exerted himself in the neighbourhood of Hastings by the suppression of smuggling; he was promoted to the rank of Lieut. in the same regt., after serving with it during the riots in London, in 1781, and succeeded to a troop in 1792; in the following year he embarked for the Continent with the Duke of York's army, and during the first campaign was present at the battle of Famars, the siege of Valenciennes, on duty with the supporting body of Cavalry in the storming of that fortress, and in every attack (with the exception of the affair of Lincelles); he likewise was present in each action, and at the repeated attacks under the walls of Dunkirk. Upon the opening of the second campaign, in 1794, he commanded the 16th Dragoons in a general battle, in an attack of the Allied Army upon the whole of the enemy's posts and entrenched works in the neighbourhood of Landrecy, upon which occasion he received the personal commands of the Duke of York, during the action, to attach himself to two squadrons of the Esterhazy Huzzars, and attack the left of the enemy's position on the heights of Vaux; which was executed in a charge upon a nine-gun battery, with the success of taking every piece of Artillery, together with defeating the whole of the enemy's troops supporting the battery. For this success he had the honour of receiving the approbation of his Royal Highness, delivered to him in the most flattering terms by his Colonel, Earl Harcourt; and likewise that of the Emperor of Germany, delivered to him by Major Lepert, Commanding Officer of the Esterhazy Huzzars. He commanded the same regiment in the memorable battle of Cateau, and in the battle of the 10th May of the same year, on the plains of Cysoings (where he was severely wounded in the breast by a grape-shot); he served in the campaign of 1795, and was present in the actions of Boxtel and Oudenarde, and in various other actions and attacks of that period; he served in the severe winter in Holland of the same year; and after the campaign of 1796 in the North of Germany, he embarked in the Elbe and sailed for England. He was appointed to the rank of Major 6th April, 1797; and to that of Lieut.-Colonel 1799, when he received the command of the Sussex Regiment of Fencibles, and in which he continued until the reduction of that corps. Having had the good fortune to recover the latter regiment from its lost state of discipline, His Majesty was pleased to honour him with the most flattering marks of his approbation, in the presence of the Prince of Wales, Dukes of York, Kent, and Cumberland, and many General Officers; and at the same time (1801) personally appointing him to the Lieutenant-Colonelcy of the 14th Light Dragoons, on account, as His Majesty was pleased to express himself, of that regiment being in equally as reduced a state of discipline as the Sussex Regiment when Lieut.-Colonel Hawker was appointed to the command of it. In 1806 he was appointed Aid-de-Camp to the King.

In 1808 he embarked with the regiment for the Peninsula; and during his services of that year, and the three following campaigns in that country, he was present, with few exceptions, in every action, and every affair that occurred, including those of Albegaria, Nosa, and Grijon, on the advance of the army to Oporto, 9th and 10th May, 1809; at the capture of Oporto, 11th May; at the affair at Salamonde, 15th May; and the pursuit of the French Army, under the command of Marshal Soult, into Galicia; and at the battle of Busaco, 27th September, 1810. He was wounded at the battle of Talavera, at the conclusion of the action. In the defeat of the enemy from the lines of Torres Vedras, and his entire expulsion from the kingdom of Portugal, he was second in command of the Cavalry; and was placed at the head of a brigade consisting of the 1st Royal Dragoons, 14th Light Dragoons, Major Bull's troop of Horse Artillery, and occasionally of the 16th Light Dragoons; during which time he was present (in advance) in every action, and every skirmish.

In 1811, on receiving the rank of Major-General (4th June), he was unavoidably obliged to return to England. In November of the same year he was honoured by the Prince Regent appointing him to the Staff at Woodbridge; but on the breaking-out of the disturbances by the Luddites in Nottinghamshire, in January, 1812, he was ordered to take the command in that county, where he continued a year and a half; and, by his energetic conduct, effectually restored quiet in that part of the kingdom: he resumed his command at Woodbridge, where he continued until the great reduction of the Staff removed him, in September, 1814. The 19th July, 1821, he was promoted to Lieutenant-General, and 28th June last to General; 22d April, 1831, he was appointed Colonel of the 3d Dragoon Guards, and previous to obtaining this regiment he was Governor of Yarmouth Castle, Isle of Wight. General Sir Samuel Hawker was a Knight Grand Cross of the Guelphic Order, and he had the honour of wearing a medal for the battle of Talavera.

The General was knighted by his late Majesty, but declining to pay the fees, was not gazetted, and his rank consequently not acknowledged in that wonderful publication, the Army List, "published by authority."

An absurd notice having appeared in the "Times," and which of course will go the round of the papers, we think it right, in this place, to observe that the General was never in the East Indies, and that Mr. Hawker, who was accidentally killed about 18 months since, was not Sir Samuel's son. The rest of the paragraph is equally untrue.

MUSIC AT SEA.

The booming wave is still—
The night-watch now is set;
And sailors midst the calm
Their foregone toils forget.
But a tender strain is heard,
Once breathed in land afar,
When young hearts loved and pledged
Beneath the evening star—
Far, far away!

Now does a flood of memory swell
Within the watcher's mind;
He hears no more the flapping sail,
The whispers of the wind;
For 'neath those aged oaks
Where love's first word was spoken;
He's sitting near that fond true heart [broken—
That may, ere now, have
Far, far away!

Another—bolder song!
It is the battle's call;
A trumpet-note, that says,—
"Come on,
To win, or bravely fall!"
There is a pacer of that deck
Who hears, yet groans to hear,
The clarion charge that stirred his soul
To contest dread, yet dear—
Far, far away!

Thou spirit-breathing hymn,
From the bright unseen shore
A mourner drinks thee in Whose life of life is o'er.
He's at the distant grave,
Where "dust to dust" was given;
He hears once more the words
"Thy dead are safe in Heaven!"
Far, far away!

CAPTAIN SLEIGH ON NAUTICAL DISCIPLINE; AND PROPOSAL FOR MANNING THE FLEET WITHOUT IMPRESSMENT.—Continued from p. 838.

How discouraging is the conduct above adverted to, and how palpable the evil consequences to individual interest and national benefit! The unmodified and unrestrained system of nautical insurance—a speculative hazard almost amounting to gambling—is equally infatuating and alluring, by giving room, if not for wicked practices, at least for paramount neglect; thus the sailor, who possesses some inducements, in England may plod his weary way, from year to year, enriching but not enriched, encouraging but not encouraged. Perhaps during the anxious and protracted absence from his native land, his country has become engaged in the struggles of war; and whilst he is yet anticipating, during his near approach, meeting the object of his attachment, probably the sole cause of his constancy to his country,—whilst contemplating with bounding heart the inexplicable joy of returning the caresses of affection—as

> "Even they th' impressive dart of Love can feel, > Whose stubborn souls are sheathed in triple steel;"—

and whilst gazing with pleasure at the fair outline of his native land—suddenly a conviction of the fatal truth flashes upon him; he perceives, with distended eye, the bulwarks of his country upon the wave, responding to the nation's call, preparing at the mandate of the Sovereign for this deadly combat. The importance of the exigency demands that the nation's fleets be manned, and the mariner's aid is required from peaceful toil and commercial trade to pursuits of other danger and of blood—he is summoned to use his energies, at his country's bidding, in strife and warfare,—to turn for perhaps many a weary year from his own shores to distant seas—to bury the remembrance of domestic happiness, and of all those beings so fondly cherished in his affections. Thus are the ties of nature severed, the sailor's only hope destroyed, he is banished even without the possibility of again seeing those in whom he is interested, and whom he had so lately contemplated in the security assumed by delusive expectation. Should, upon the contrary, Fortune look less adverse upon his course, and peace continue to bless his country—even upon the borders of that land which gave him birth—where all his pleasing anticipations, the objects of every hope, exist, he may have all his brilliant anticipations blasted, his laboriously earned reward forfeited, by circumstances over which he can have no control, still, at the mercy of that element with which it is his allotment to contend, and on the perils of which he must calculate, the tempest may dash his bark a wreck upon its parent soil, and disperse alike upon the ocean, as the fragments of his vessel, the recompense of the voyage. It is lost to him; he suffers for what he knows not; as should the ship in which he sails be wrecked, the whole of his pay is forfeited. In this respect the law is as absolute as the storm, whose fury he cannot baffle, is relentless. Then follows sorrow, impoverished means, a broken constitution in manhood, occasioned perhaps by excessive labour and lingering sickness, the fatal result of having been denied proper medical aid, and poverty in old age. These are only a few of the causes which alienate and injure the trading banishing the mariner from our shores. Is there no particimarine, and destroy the nucleus of the Royal Navy, by pation on his sense of injustice? Is there no remedy to be provided for necessities so momentuous? Surely there is; if the powerful and wealthy shipowner of Great Britain, and those whose interests should be co-equal with his, continue, in defiance of reason, equity, and patriotism, to act according to the dictates of self-interest, to turn away from conviction, and close their ears against the appeal of the seamen and the warnings of caution, it will only remain for our Government (which has hitherto been but too considerate in its measures for the undivided interests of the former), in the wisdom of its councils and the fulness of power, to prescribe such enactments as will render justice to the mariner, and secure his aid for the service of his country, and to expunge those customs so prejudicial to the nation and hazardous to its renown. If the wrongs, the neglect, and sufferings of the mariner did not extend tenfold beyond this delineation of his condition, with consequences far less plausible, do they not merit attention?—do they not call for alleviation? The tortures of an O'Driscoll, and other less recent but more aggravating oppressions, call loudly for redress. How can we calculate upon the spontaneous offer of service in war, of men who are neglected by those whom they serve during peace? how rely upon their fidelity? or how can we ever calculate upon using compulsion with success? The sailor is a man of impulse, of powerful passions, of enthusiastic action; he will not take time for discrimination between serving his nation and being a slave to individual avarice, with the wrongs he has endured in peace in the trading marine fresh in his recollection; he will be found to resist alike the advantages which may be proffered and the constraints attempted in time of strife; ignorant of the comforts and superiority of the Navy, he will cling to the former service or flee from his country, in order to avoid impending compulsory servitude, rationally deeming it, as hitherto, consequent on war, and seeing no provision made during peace to obviate the recurrence of such unconstitutional evils, he is confirmed in his opinion by the remembrance of various traditions of the "press-gang,"—the embellished tales of impressment,—and the "horrors of a man-of-war."—He prefers banishment or starvation (allowing himself to be solely influenced by comparison where there should be none), or terrified by misrepresentations, is deterred from volunteering into the latter service. It is, indeed, at the present period only necessary to announce a vague report of apprehended war, to throw the trading mariners into a state of ferment; and many have been known, upon similar reports, to abandon their ships, and flee into the country. All these conspicuous evils will rise up in the hour of need against the country, and tarnish our reputation for wisdom, if not for glory, even as they press upon the fortunes or happiness of the mariner of commerce; so the first who may expect to feel the calamitous effects of his neglect and injustice to recoil, will be these shipowners and employers of the trading mariner, who ought to have been the foremost interested in his condition for the security of the State. It cannot be supposed that the regard which they cherish for their individual wealth can screen long-continued neglect from reproach, or injustice from condemnation; nor can their vaunted importance to the nation ward off the due and requisite interference of a wise, prudent, and liberal Government, if deemed expedient in behalf of a wronged class of men—a class which must ever form the rallying point and energetic arm of the nation—the procurers and protectors of our nautical commerce.—To be continued.

Moustachios.—I was eighteen when I first observed my growing moustachios. My mother said they became me, so I wore them on a lip never touched by razor. My father said that men should wear something else than down, and gave me a pair of razors. But I would not use them, for both the valet and the chambermaid admired my upper beard as much as my mother. The first scene or adventure, caused by my moustachios, occurred at a watering-place of some notoriety in England. There was a ball, and I had tried most of the evening to show off with a certain damsel, the queen of the night, but some how or other, my addresses did not take. I was too eager or too unfortunate. She was always engaged; I felt mortified, and perhaps showed it by resorting to the twisting of the end of my moustachios. Well I recollect it. Thus I stood abashed, and encountered more than one glance of ridicule from groups of young men from whom I had kept myself aloof. I could bear it no longer, my blood was up, my vanity was wounded. "She shall dance, by Jove!" She was then just quitted by her partner in the former dance; still she was reluctant; what could it mean? Still engaged! At last I made her consent, and took her arm in mine. We joined the giddy votaries of Terpsichore, but here again was her hand claimed, but she remained true to me. "Moustachio'd dog!" caught my ear, as the disappointed suitor turned on his heel. I startled, she reddened, but 'twas too late; the dance had begun and I had to follow her. He'll repent that expression whispered I to her, as I felt the insulted moustache bristle on my lip, aye, even the Charlie or imperial started on end. For Heaven's sake, heed not the imprudent young man, said she as she looked imploringly in my face. Nay, promise me, she added, in the sweetest kindest accents, accompanied by a beseeching look. Curses on the fellow, thought I; what's to be done? "Beautiful Matilda, trouble not yourself about a silly word, time enough when the dog bites to cry hurt." The dance over, I hurried to my young man. "You understand me," said I, as I slipt my card into his half unwilling hands, and retired to arrange the meeting with my friend. We met in the morning, but I would then receive no proffered apology. Then to business said my adversary. Bang went the pistols,—both stood unscathed. Now I have done my duty said my opponent. Oh, no, replied I, boiling with rage. Once more; there were two insulting words applied. Now for the moustachio again, said I, biting my lip half through; it must be done; he who was so bold in the ball-room surely cannot prove a coward in the field. Ah! coward, saidst thou? I thank thee for the word, come on. The signal made, the pistols flashed, for an instant my adversary stood still, then with a groan he fell and never spoke more. The fire of passion quenched, then came the sickening consciousness of wrong,—the horror, the self-shrinking horror of having shed blood. I was rivetted to the spot, till roused by a voice which whispered in my ear, fly, unhappy man, fly. 'Twas Matilda! I had slain her cousin. Towards evening I entered my father's grounds, he was absent, but my mother saw that all was not right. To her importunate enquiries all I answered was, these cursed moustachios! and begged her to have the chariot ordered without delay. What needs it to relate the parting with my mother, to-morrow, said I, you will know it all, dear mother, and off I set for the coast. When reflection came to me in the silence of night, alas! what horrible agony was mine! Only those who have been similarly circumstanced can imagine the burning anxiety of mind, the smothering load at heart, the self-accusing voice of conscience as it cried—Thou art a murderer.—Calcutta Literary Gazette.

East India Intelligence.

Bengal Medical Department.—The authorised list of full surgeons on the establishment amounts to 120, of these, 93, we believe, should be allotted to regimental posts, because there are ten regiments of cavalry, three brigades of horse artillery, seven battalions of foot artillery, one European regiment, and seventy-four regiments of native infantry. But by reference to the present state of the medical list, we find there are only 57 individuals of this grade actually present with their respective regiments in India.—Alexander's East India Magazine.

Our impression is, that the Army now assembled on the Indus will not be permitted to execute its ulterior objects. It is said that an illustrious authority has remonstrated against the advance of a British Army at the present season into the mountainous and difficult defiles which would lie in its line of operations, where a check might compromise it, and defeat be fatal to our supremacy in India.—United Service Journal.

Military Items.—H.M. 16th Lancers and the 2d Light Cavalry were to march for Meerut 30th Oct., and be at Delhi 4th Nov. The Queen's 44th had received orders to hold themselves in readiness to march towards the Nepaul frontier early in November. The 37th N.I. marched from Agra 6th Oct., and the European corps on the 8th. Lieut.-Col. Buckley would command the station of Agra upon the departure of Col. Roberts. The 5th and 31st N.I. had reached Cawnpore in a wretched plight, owing to great rain, and there was much sickness and desertion in the ranks. The 33d N.I. was to leave Jubbulpore on the 3d Dec. Col. Simpson passed through Sasseram, seventy miles below Benares, on 11th Oct. A Court-Martial was under orders to assemble for the trial of Lieutenant Darby, 52d N.I.

Mr. E. Grant, of the Bombay Civil Service, put a period to his existence on 8th Oct., at Ahmedabad, by shooting himself through the head. He had just received notice that he was suspended from the service, pending the decision of the Court of Directors upon some malpractices of which he was accused. He committed the deed immediately after writing the word "injustice" upon the document in question.

Shah Soojah.—The Agra Ukhbar states, that on the 13th October Shah Shooja was proclaimed King of Cabul.

The Nawab of Moorshedabad.—The Nawab Nazim died on the 3d Oct., at his palace, Moorshedabad, somewhat suddenly. He was very rich; his sole executor is Dr. M'Pherson, Civil Surgeon of Berhampore. His successor is a boy of about ten years of age; his income will be 60,000 rs. per mensem. Three English gentlemen are appointed his guardians. His uncle, who has a pension of 1,500 per month, has arrived in Calcutta to dispute the succession; but the right of the youth having been some time ago recognised by the Indian Government, his opposition will be futile.

Change in the Supreme Council.—The term of the Hon. Alexander Ross's services in Council of five years having expired on 15th Oct., the Hon. Col. W. Morison, C.B., that day took his seat as President of the Council and Deputy Governor. W. W. Bird, Esq., also took the oaths, and his seat as Member of the Council. The Deputy Governor has appointed the Hon. J. C. Erskine to be Private Secretary, and Capt. J. E. Landers to be Military Secretary and Aid-de-Camp.

The 1st regiment of Shah Shoojah's Cavalry, under the command of Lieut. and Adjutant Nicolson, marched from Delhi Oct. 2d, in progress to Loodiana. Under the unremitting exertions of this meritorious officer the regiment has been raised in an incredibly short period, and we believe is now more than complete in both men and horses.

Her Majesty's 13th Light Infantry is warned for both escort duty and field service. At present the Governor-General has postponed his visit to Rajpootana, but will visit Agra, to the Governorship of which Mr. Macnaghten is talked of as successor. The native regiments warned for field service are, the 2nd, 5th, 16th, 27th, 28th, 31st, 35th, 37th, 42nd, 43rd, 48th, and 52nd. Some of these regiments have to march from Benares and Lucknow, at so unhealthy a time of the year, that it is conjectured they will reach Ferozepore with so many sick as to require other regiments on the frontier to take their place. Two old officers having refused the command of Shah Soojah's levies, to whom it was offered, the command rests with Col. Charter. Some new regiments, it is said, will positively be raised.—Agra Ukhbar, Oct. 4.

We understand that the Governor-General will not quit the hills before the 17th or 20th Nov., and that his Lordship intends so timing his march as to meet the field army at Ferozepore on the 28th of that month, before which date the troops will not be assembled there. Runjeet Sing is to meet Lord Auckland at Ferozepore, where, it is expected, Sir Henry Fane will manœuvre the whole of the field army before the Maha-raja.—Delhi Gazette, Oct. 3.

An express lately arrived here, conveying information to Shah Soojah that 2,000 of Dost Mahomed's men, with two cannons and thirty camel guns, had reached Jellalabad, and were proceeding to occupy the Khyber pass.—Agra Ukhbar, Oct. 13.

The great rendezvous of the Bengal and Bombay troops has been fixed, there is now no doubt, at Shikarpoor, on the Indus, where it will take place in November. From hence the invading army will proceed in two divisions, through Candahar upon Cabul, where it will form a junction, and some reports say it will penetrate through the valley, with a view to some operation beyond its eastern frontier. Capt. Burnes proceeds in advance [illegible] purposes.—Agra Ukhbar.

Ing. If, on the other hand, from parsimonious views, we ran to embrace the opportunity, a national disgrace will be entailed upon us, and we shall stand chargeable with want of love for every thing but wealth, and with burying all our zeal beneath our hoards of gold."

Since the foregoing was in type, we have seen the United Service Journal for this month, and in that Number, and the force, under Sir Henry Fane, will march about the 5th Dec., in progress to Shikarpore, where it will arrive by the 25th January next. Preparations will be then and there made for advancing on Candahar and Herat; and from the latter place the troops will move upon Cabul, and reseat Shah Soojah on the guddee. Capt. Burnes has proceeded to Methunkote for the purpose of throwing a bridge of boats across the river there, and a commissariat officer, from Kurnaul, has gone down to Shikarpore to collect grain and supplies for the army. Shah Soojah's regiments will, it is said, proceed in advance of our own troops to Shikarpore, and there await the arrival of Sir Henry's army.—Delhi Gaz., Sept. 26.

The Private Soldiers of the British Army.—I am a soldado; and having always received my full or half-pay, though little at best, with the most punctual regularity, may be allowed to speak well of my profession, even if it should slightly contrast with others. The private soldiers with whom I served, who built huts, cut wood for me, and lent me ready aid in many an hour of toil and danger, are the only persons on the world's surface to whom I owe, or ever did owe, any obligation equal in value to the sheet of paper on which I write, so that I may speak my mind of them without being ungrateful to any other class of the community, either high or low, civil or military; and doing so, have no hesitation in declaring my conviction, that the world cannot produce a braver, better, kinder, more cheerful, generous, and tractable set of men than the private soldiers of the British Army. I have known them at home, in the field, and in the colonies—have seen them in danger, suffering, and idleness—and have never, from first to last, had cause to change my opinion of them. The "gentlemen of England, who live at home at ease," may talk of generosity, kindness, nobleness of spirit, and many other fine things; but, long as I have lived in the world, I should never have learned the meaning of the words had I not been a military man; for in civil life I have never once seen a particle of these fine qualities practised, unless, perhaps, by women, and their sphere of action is naturally a confined one. "Jew Rothschild and his Christian fellow Baring" would have a different tale to tell, no doubt, and we each speak of the world as we find it. That there are plenty of rascals in the Army need not surprise, as where do we find thousands without them? The wonder is, that patriots, economists, and the War-Office—I mean the Secretary-at-War's department—an office through the dull and frosty atmosphere of which no ray of intellect or noble feeling was ever yet enabled to penetrate—should not have made rascals of the whole. —Fraser.

MOXON'S

EFFERVESCENT MAGNESIAN APERIENT, decidedly the most generally useful Medicine ever offered to the public.

The unrivalled efficacy of the Magnesian in all Disorders of the Stomach and Bowels has obtained for it the uniform recommendation and approval of the Faculty.

This unique preparation unites all the active powers of the most approved saline purgatives with the palateable qualities of a glass of soda water. In torpid state of the liver and bowels, bilious affections, cholera morbus, pains in the head, or disordered state of the stomach, nausea, and violent sickness, it will be found a safe, speedy, and effectual remedy. It gives instantaneous relief in the heartburn, is of great service in preventing piles, fistula, and gout, and in alleviating the febrile symptoms attendant on the latter affection. Derangement of the stomach and head, &c., arising from too free indulgence in the gratifications of the table, is speedily removed by a tea-spoonful taken early in the morning.

Prepared only by BENJAMIN MOXON, Chymist, Hull.

Wholesale Agents—Barclay and Sons, London; J. and R. Raimes, Edinburgh and Dublin. Sold wholesale at all the Medicine Warehouses in London, and retail by all Venders of Medicines throughout the kingdom, in bottles at 2s. 9d.; 4s. 6d.; and in family bottles at 11s, containing the quantity of five of the 2s. 9d size, a saving of 20 per cent. to the purchaser.

N B.—Be careful to observe that "Moxon and Smith, Chymists, Hull," is engraved on the stamp, without which it cannot be genuine.

May be had as above, that very popular and much-esteemed preparation of Sarsaparilla, the

CONCENTRATED COMPOUND DECOCTION,
Prepared by B. Moxon, Chymist, Hull.

"One table spoonful added to a pint of pure water readily forms a pint of the Compound Decoction, and, in justice to the preparers, we must say, appears to be more impregnated with the virtues of the ingredients than the decoction made in the usual way."—See Gazette of Health and Practical Medicine for January, 1829.

In bottles at 1s. 6d., 12s., and 22s., the latter equivalent to 32 pints of the Compound Decoction of the London Pharmacopœia.

BARFIELD'S DIAMOND PLATE POWDER, warranted not to wear the Plate.

It instantly clears tarnish and dirt, and magically produces a most inimitable polish upon Gold, Silver, Plated Goods, Brass, Tin, Copper, and makes British Plate Zinc, and Pewter, look as white as the best Silver.

AGENTS WANTED for every Town in the Kingdom.

N B.—Plate cleaned with this Powder will not again tarnish.

PATRONISED by the ROYAL FAMILY.

THORN'S TALLY-HO SAUCE for FISH, imparting a zest unequalled to Game, Wild Fowl, Chops, Steaks, enriching Gravies and all Made Dishes, in Bottles, 2s. and 4s. each.—Also, THORN'S POTTED YARMOUTH BLOATERS, confessedly the greatest relish and most useful preparation for Sandwiches, Toast, Biscuit, and Wine, in Pots, 1s. and 2s. each, wholesale, retail, and for export, at his Italian Warehouse, 223, High Holborn, London, and of all Oilmen, Grocers, Druggists, and Fishmongers in the United Kingdom.—Beware of fraud; neither genuine, or will keep, unless signed ALEX. THORN.

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

WITHIN a period of Two Months upwards of Three Hundred Patients were successfully treated at the Metropolitan Hospitals with FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

By JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London;—

"I have made a trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba.

(Signed) "JOSEPH HENRY GREEN.

"46, Lincoln's-inn Fields, April 15, 1835."

This invaluable Medicine is confidently recommended in all cases of Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Urethral Discharges, Spasmodic Strictures, Irritation of the Kidneys, Bladder, Urethra, and Prostate Gland; its purifying effects upon the general health render it particularly applicable in all cases of relaxed fibre and nervous debility.

Prepared only by GEORGE FRANKS, Surgeon, 90, Blackfriars Road, London; and may be had of all Wholesale and Retail Patent Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom, in Bottles at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d, and 11s. each.

MR. FRANKS may be consulted daily until Two o'clock.

CAUTION.—The Public are protected against Counterfeits by the name "George Franks, Blackfriars Road," being engraved on the Government Stamp attached to each Bottle.

GEARY'S NEW INVENTED STAY.

BY SPECIAL APPOINTMENT,
STAY AND CORSET MAKER TO HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY, QUEEN VICTORIA, to HER MAJESTY, ADELAIDE, the QUEEN DOWAGER, and to Her Imperial Highness the PRINCESS OF ORANGE, and to her daughter, the PRINCESS SOPHIA.

MRS. NICHOLAS GEARY, COURT STAY MAKER, 61, St. James's-street, has the honour to lay before the Nobility, Gentry, and Female community at large, the following high testimonials in favour of her highly celebrated and newly-invented Stays, exterminating all that pressure which prevails in all other Stays, and producing a figure of such symmetry, that attempted by any other Stay must amount to suffocation.—

"I have much pleasure in stating, that the Stays invented by Mrs. Geary will obviate all the inconveniences of those commonly employed."—C. J. B. Aldis, M.D, Old Burlington-street, March 6th, 1837.

"It appears to me that Mrs. Geary's Stays are much superior to those in ordinary use."—B. C. Brodie, Feb. 18th, 1837.

"I have examined the Stays invented by Mrs. Geary, and think them admirably adapted to give salutary support to the body without that injurious pressure which renders ordinary Stays so extremely prejudicial."—J. T. Conquest, M.D

"In Mrs. Geary's Corset for Growing Girls the pressure on every part of the Chest is slight, and by exerting no pressure on the edges of the hip, it does not (by forcing these edges to grow inward) diminish during youth the cavity of the pelvis, or hazard the suffering which must attend that malformation in mothers."—Extracted from Mr. Coulson's Work on "Deformities of the Chest and Spine." Second Edition.

"I am so satisfied of the superiority of Mrs. Geary's Stays and Belt for pregnant Ladies, that I shall make a point of recommending them whenever I may have an opportunity."—James Eyre, M.D., 15, Lower Brook-street, March 22, 1837.

"The Stays invented by Mrs. N. Geary, from the ingenuity with which they are constructed, are eminently calculated to allow of that ease and freedom of motion so essential to elegance and health. They appear, therefore, likely to prove far superior to stays in common use, which contribute to the production of much deformity and many serious diseases."—G. F. D. Evans, M.D., 21, Hill-street, Berkeley-square.

"It is in the complete Corset that the genius of Mrs. Geary has had full swing. The problem to be solved was, to support the figure, yet not to diminish freedom of motion, and to conceal the size of the abdomen when too large."—Extracted from Dr. James Johnson's "Medico-Chirurgical Review" for Jan. 1837.

"I have examined Mrs. Geary's improved Stays, and I have no hesitation in saying I think them infinitely superior for the purpose of support to any now in use. I consider the Belt also, invented by the same lady for pregnant females, devised upon an exceedingly good principle."—Francis H. Ramsbotham, M.D., 14, New Broad-street, March 21, 1837.

"Mrs. Geary's Stays of all kinds present a new and rational principle in the construction of these most important portions of dress. The formation of the bosom, and of all the parts adapted to prominences, is a matter of great ingenuity and extraordinary beauty."—Extracted from "Female Beauty," by Mrs. A. Walker.

"The Exercise Corset, invented by Mrs. Geary, is absolutely necessary in all exercises of the arms, and especially in the Indian exercises, for which they were constructed."—Extracted from "Exercises for Ladies," by Donald Walker, 2nd Edition.

The following Medical Gentlemen are of opinion that Mrs. N. Geary's Stays, in consequence of the great improvements they present—their capability of adaptation to every variety of form—their removal of all unequal pressure—and the proper employment of elastic materials—are deserving of the strongest recommendation:—

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:—

"Sheffield, Oct. 11th, 1837.

"DEAR SIR,—Will you send me twelve dozen of Solvent; I find my sale rapidly increasing. The superiority of the Rotterdam Solvent over all other preparations for the entire removal of Corns and Bunions, is becoming generally known and appreciated. Sir, since I last wrote to you, I have heard of several remarkable instances of its efficacy. One I may give you, as I have the permission so to do. Mr. Whitham, a respectable manufacturer, residing in Bridge-street, Sheffield, has been a great sufferer from Corns for the last fifty years; hearing of the Rotterdam Solvent, he was induced to try it, and from the great benefit and relief experienced from its first application, he resolved to persevere in its use, and, in a comparatively short time, was completely cured, and continues so to this day. This gentleman will be happy to give any information to those who may personally apply. I am, dear Sir, yours truly, T. LOFTHOUSE."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Prepared and sold by J. A. Sharwood, 55, Bishopsgate Without, London, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each; and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; and by most Medicine Vendors.—Any Vendor not having it will procure it on its being ordered.

A CARD TO THE NOBILITY, GENTRY, AND PUBLIC AT LARGE.

THE opening of a New Year naturally excites the proudest emotions of gratitude for the unprecedented patronage with which Messrs. ROWLAND & SON have been honoured with respect to their celebrated articles, viz. ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, for the HAIR,—ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, for the SKIN, and ROWLAND'S ODONTO for the TEETH, each of which have obtained a celebrity pre-eminently great.

Messrs. R. & S. while they respectfully solicit a continuance of that patronage, earnestly Caution the Public against Imitations of each.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR has the Name and Address of the Proprietors, on the Government Stamp, and in Red, on the Wrapper ROWLAND'S ODONTO has the same on the Government Stamp which is affixed on each box, and the MACASSAR OIL is distinguished by the Names on the Label, in Red, thus

J. DELCROIX AND CO., Perfumers to Her Majesty Queen Victoria, &c. &c.

No. 158, NEW BOND STREET (opposite Stevens's Hotel).

The great superiority of J. Delcroix and Co.'s Perfumery has been so incontrovertibly established by the distinguished patronage of her Majesty Queen Victoria, the Queen Dowager, the various Members of the Royal Family, and by the Nobility and Gentry generally, as to render it unnecessary for J. Delcroix and Co. to do more than enumerate their leading articles, viz.

BOUQUET DE LA REINE VICTORIA, a new perfume, prepared expressly for her Majesty.

HIS LATE MAJESTY GEORGE IV.'S PERFUME, BOUQUET DU ROI, prepared expressly for that Sovereign.

ESPRIT DE LAVANDE AUX MILLEFLEURS, so universally admired in every quarter of the habitable globe.

DELCROIX'S VEGETABLE EXTRACT, for cleansing the Hair, &c.

POMMADE REGENERATRICE, for the growth and preservation of the Hair.

VEGETABLE CREME des SULTANES, for preserving, beautifying, and whitening the skin.

DELCROIX'S celebrated POUDRE UNIQUE, for dyeing the hair, &c.

PATE D'AMANDE A LA REINE, so justly esteemed for its healing and softening quality.

The TRUE OPIATE of the Circassian Ladies, for the preservation and embellishment of the Teeth.

TO LADIES.—POUDRE SUBTILE, for removing superfluous Hairs.

DELCROIX'S ANTI-SCORBUTIC ELIXIR and ANTI-SCORBUTIC TOOTH POWDER, for preserving the Teeth and Gums from decay, and curing the Toothache.

TO GENTLEMEN.—For the comfort of easy shaving, they can, with every satisfaction, recommend their Vegetable Polish Soap Paste, and Pasta del Castagna.

ALMOND OIL SOAP, for Rough or Chapped Hands, and for softening and improving the Skin.

Also, Farina's Genuine Eau de Cologne—Eau Aromatique—Real Swiss Arquebusade, and all other articles of Perfumery of the very best description.

 J. Delcroix and Co. respectfully request that attention be particularly paid to the address upon their labels, No. 158, New Bond-street. No others can be warranted genuine.

PATRONIZED BY THE ROYAL FAMILY AND NOBILITY.

SHARP'S ROYAL BRITISH CERATES and LINIMENT.—These valuable medical applications, long privately known, and highly appreciated, by some of the most eminent Medical men in the metropolis, constitute, in their various modifications, rapid and effectual remedies for Gout—in some states, Rheumatic Affections, Lumbago, Glandular Swellings, many instances of Scrotulous Sores and Swellings, Tumours, Relaxed Sore Throats, Swelled Face or Gums, some cases of Deafness, Inflammation—in all its shapes, Boils, Ulcerated and other Wounds, Sprains, Bruises, and Burns, Scalds, Erysipelas, Venomous Stings, Itch, Ringworm, Scaldhead, Grocers' Itch, Chilblains, Bunions, Corns, Tender Feet, Paralysis of a local character, and Tic-Douloureux. As no class of society is exempt from the liability to some or other of these attacks, so to every rank must access to such a powerful series of simple, but effectual, remedies be highly desirable. The series consists of a Liniment, with the Plain, and four combinations of Cerates:—Namely, No. 1, Plain; No. 2, Camphorated; No. 3, Emollient; No. 4, Balsamic, and No. 5, Sulphurated; severally applicable to the cure of the above diseases and injuries, in the manner clearly laid down in the printed directions which accompany each packet.

The Proprietors give their solemn assurance, that there is not a fact stated, with respect to the powers of these substances, which is not fully established in every class of cases, in the private practice of medical men of great respectability in the metropolis, and that each of the preparations, although most effectual in its remedial character, is in the highest degree innocent in its entire composition, and may, consequently, be used with perfect safety.

The ROYAL BRITISH CERATES are made up, in all their modifications, in Boxes of four sizes, at 1s.—2s. 9d.—4s. 6d.—11s. each; and the LINIMENT in Bottles of three sizes, with ground-glass Stoppers, at 2s. 9d.—4s. 6d.—and 11s. each Stamps in all cases included. Sold by the Proprietors, SHARP and CO., 159, Fleet street, London; by all the Patent Medicine Venders in and round the metropolis; and by one or more Chemists, Druggists, or other licensed Venders in every town in the three kingdoms, from all of whom the most full and ample printed directions for use, in every class of disease or injury, may be obtained.

MATHEMATICS, NAVIGATION, FORTIFICATION, SURVEYING, & the USE of the GLOBES. Mr. E. CLIFFORD acquaints the Nobility and Gentry that he gives private Lessons in the various branches of the MATHEMATICS:—Arithmetic, Algebra, Euclid, Trigonometry, Analytical Geometry, Conic-Sections, Spherics, Fluxions, Mechanics, Astronomy, &c. Scientific Geography, Determination of Latitudes and Longitudes by Astronomical Observations, Trigonometrical Surveying, &c. taught. Gentlemen prepared for the Universities, Military or Naval Colleges. Those designed for Engineers, Architects, Surveyors, may receive that instruction which constitutes the requisite scientific knowledge in those Professions.

42, Old Bond-street, & Raven Cottage, Waltham Green, Fulham.

METCALFE'S NEW and ORIGINAL PATTERN of TOOTH-BRUSH, made on the most scientific principle, and patronised by the most eminent of the faculty. This celebrated brush will search thoroughly into the divisions of the teeth, and will clean in the most effectual and extraordinary manner. Metcalfe's Brushes are famous for being made on a plan that the hairs never come loose in the mouth. An improved clothes brush, that cleans in a third part of the usual time, and incapable of injuring the finest nap. A newly-invented brush for cleaning velvet with quick and satisfactory effect. The much approved flesh-brushes, as recommended by the faculty. Penetrating hair-brushes, with the durable unbleached Russia bristles, and combs of all descriptions, at METCALFE'S, Oxford street, opposite Harewood-place, (two doors west of Holles-street.)

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Bouilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, No. 72, Welbeck street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sams, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c. &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading or any other Sauce.

BRETT'S LIQUEUR GINGER BRANDY. This exquisite Stomachic Cordial, in itself a perfect Liqueur, is confidently recommended for its peculiar efficacy in the Relief of Spasms, while, in dilution, it produces an agreeable beverage, free from acidity, and, consequently, more wholesome than Malt Liquor. In sealed pint and quart bottles, 2s. and 3s. 6d. each, bottle inclusive, or 18s. by the imperial gallon, on which terms our IMPROVED BRANDY continues to rival the choicest productions of Cognac, and to defy the best efforts of British distillation.

HENRY BRETT & CO., Old Furnival's Inn, Holborn Bars.

WHITE'S ESSENCE of EGLANTINE.—A highly fashionable and peculiar HANDKERCHIEF SCENT, possessing extracts from the most fragrant flowers, and forming a perfume at once sweet, agreeable, and refreshing.

Prepared only by Thomas White, Chemist, 24, Cornhill, London. In bottles at 2s. 6d. and 4s. 6d. each. Also by the following Agents:—Mr. Binnington, 35, Haymarket, Mr. Wagstaff, 122, Piccadilly; Mr. Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Mr. Burfield, 180, Strand, Mr. Huntsman, 309, High Holborn; Mr. Vinson, 124, Leadenhall-street; Mr. Sarel, 5, St. James's-street, Brighton; Messrs. H. and E. Greville, Northampton; Mr. Drury, Lincoln; Mr. Taylor, 8, St. Ann's-square, Manchester: Messrs. Butler and Colquhoun, 24, Castle-street, Liverpool; and by all respectable Chemists and Perfumers in the kingdom.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA,

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfume, superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 3s. 6d., 7s., and 18s. each.

Printed by WILLIAM THOMAS, of No. 13, Gloucester Terrace, Old Brompton, in the County of Middlesex, Printer, at the Office of Messrs. BRADBURY & EVANS, Lombard street, Fleet-street, in the Precinct of Whitefriars, in the City of London, and Published by him at Whitney, two days after his arrest, he told him "he would shoot him also as soon as Capt. Lynch, if he had an opportunity." The prisoner was found guilty, and sentenced to be transported as a felon for life.

19th—Lt. and Adjt. Franklin is on leave. Ens. H. B. Stoney has joined from leave.

21st—Maj. Beete, and a draft of this regt., will embark for Madras in course of the next month.

22d—Lieut. R. W. Kyffin is appointed to the Recruiting Department at Newry.

23d Depot—Three officers, and 60 r. and f., from Armagh to Carrickmacross, Jan. 7th and 8th; in aid of the civil power on the 9th, to return when dispensed with.

27th Depot—A detachment, consisting of 2 Serjts. and 100 r. and f. are ordered to be in readiness for embarkation to join the service cos.

31st—at Dinapore, Bengal, have subscribed one day's pay, 34*l* 8*s*. 1*d*. to the Wellington Testimonial.

34th—The company from Killenaule to Templemore, Jan. 8th and 9th.

36th—On Saturday 10th Nov. this truly gallant and distinguished corps embarked on board H.M.S. Hercules, en route to Halifax. Few regiments, if any, have conducted themselves through a long service of nine years in the West Indies, in a more praiseworthy or orderly manner than the Old Firms; and they carried with them the sincere regret at their departure of every inhabitant of Barbadoes, coupled with hearty good wishes for their health and happiness. Their excellent and talented Lieut.-Colonel filled the situation of Senior Officer of the troops for a considerable time, with an ability and decision that was only to be surpassed by his kindness of heart, conciliating manners, and rigid uprightness of conduct—and Colonel Maxwell has the best reward in knowing that he gave general satisfaction, not only to the "powers above," but to every one who served under his command. A considerable damp was thrown over the departure of the 36th by the sudden and lamentable death of Maj. Robert Noble Crosse, K.H. This gallant veteran marched at the head, and embarked with his regiment on the 10th, felt himself a little unwell on the Monday following, the 12th, but was on deck; and on Tuesday morning he was a corpse, carried off by an attack of yellow fever. On Tuesday evening he was interred with the usual military honours. 200 r. and f. of the 62d regt., under the command of Maj. Blois, formed the funeral party. The officers of the garrison, and the soldiers off duty of the 69th, 74th, and 1st West India regiments, attended on this melancholy occasion, in every respect the deceased gentleman was a soldier, and a soldier's friend; and had been in his regt. since 1808. The following appeared in General Orders, on the day previous to the embarkation of the corps:—

"G. O., Head-Quarters, Barbadoes, 9th Nov, 1838.—The 36th regt. being about to embark for Halifax, in obedience to the Orders of the General Commanding-in-Chief, Sir Samford Whittingham takes this opportunity of congratulating Lt. Col. Maxwell, and the officers and non-commissioned officers of that veteran regiment, on the high state of efficiency in which it will proceed to America, after a period of nine years' service in the West Indies. The Lieut. General had great pleasure in witnessing, at his late inspection, the healthy appearance of the men, and their steadiness under arms. It is now upwards of 30 years since the Lt.-General had first the honour of serving with the 36th regt., then commanded by Lt.-Col. Burns, and he has great pleasure in being able to state, that every succeeding campaign has crowned with fresh laurels this truly gallant corps. The Lt.-General begs Lt.-Col. Maxwell will accept and communicate to the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men, of the regt. he so ably commands, the expression of his best wishes for their health and happiness, and his conviction that the officer they are tried in the field of battle, the greater will be their accession of glory and honour.—By command, E. R. KING, Captain, D. A. A. General, for the D. A. General.

The Limerick Chronicle states that "Quarter-Master W. Hall is reported to have died of yellow fever at Barbadoes, when the regt. was embarking for Halifax, about the same time as Maj. Crosse," but as our letters from Barbadoes do not make mention of this, we trust the report is unfounded.—ED. N. & M. G.

46th Depot—Lieut. Davies is appointed Acting Paymaster.

48th—Maj. Bt. Duncan has proceeded to Cork from Fermoy, intending to embark for Gibraltar, to join the service cos.

51st—This detach. has been ordered to furnish all the men of each guard over convicts for Van Diemen's Land, and it is supposed that the whole now at Chatham will be embarked about the end of April next.

52nd—H.M.S. Hercules was signaled on the evening of the 5th Nov., and this regiment was disembarked on the afternoon of the 6th. Great praise has always been given to this corps, and their appearance, dress, appointments, and general bearing fully justify it. The unsettled state of the weather prevents His Excellency the Lt.-General commanding from making his inspection of the regiment. Amongst the deaths by fever in St. Ann's, Barbadoes, after landing from Gibraltar, we regret to find Lt. E. Gough, and Paym. Winterbottom and wife. Lt. Gough was the son of Maj. G. Gough, of Woodsdown, and nephew of Maj.-Gen. Sir Hugh Gough. He was interred with military honours on the evening of the 20th Nov., fourteen days after he landed in Barbadoes. The Paymaster was an old Waterloo officer. Capt. French and Lieut. Twopeny proceed to Europe, for the purpose of retiring from the service.

54th—It is said that some doubts still exist of the return of this regt. from India, during the present year. As a large proportion of the officers are at home, we do not think it probable that Government would incur the expense of sending them out for so short a period as must elapse before the return of the regiment.

58th—Capt. John Sargent, late of this corps, is appointed to a Staff situation, at Trincomalee, held by the late Capt. Wynn, who died at sea, on board the Wolf, 1st June.

"We do not remember an instance of a regiment arriving at Quebec by sea so late in the season as this gallant corps; and the absolute good humour evinced by the men on landing, with the thermometer several degrees below zero, excited our highest admiration, for we were well aware the battalion had but a few months before been stationed in the West Indian Islands. The route to Canada pursued on this occasion was altogether new for troops, and reflects the highest credit upon all parties concerned. We believe the suggestion emanated from that truly energetic and gallant General at present administering the government of New Brunswick; he being fully aware of the total impracticability of the line by the Temiscouata Portage at this season of the year, when the rivers are not frozen.—From all we can hastily gather on this subject, it appears that the despatches carried express from Sir J. Colborne were delivered by Lt. Ingall, 15th regt., to Sir J. Harvey, at Fredericton, after midnight of 4th Nov. The next morning the regt. received orders to embark on the 8th for St. John's, and at that port were transhipped into large steam-vessels for the Petticodine River, and landed at what is termed the 'Bend,' above Dorchester, on the 11th."—Montreal Gazette.

65th Depot—A company from Templemore to Killemaule, Jan. 7th and 8th.

67th—under the command of Col. Bunbury, are in good health at Demerara. It is a singular and highly creditable fact, that the monthly returns of Courts-Martial, from this corps, are generally blank—verbum sat.

68th—The detach. of 100 men to join the service cos. from Fermoy to Cork, Jan. 3d and 4th. The depot now muster only 70, mostly recruits.

69th—The different detachments (six) marched in from the out stations to the head-quarters at St. Ann's, Barbadoes, on 15th Nov. The regiment, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Monins, expect to proceed to America in the spring of this year. Capt. O'Halloran fills the situation of Deputy Assistant-Quartermaster-General, vacant by the removal of Capt. Trollope, 36th regt.

70th—This corps has suffered severely from fever at Grenada, both in officers and men; a change, however, has taken place, and disease is rapidly on the decline.

74th—under the command of Colonel Mein, continue in good health at St. Lucia; the left wing at Dominica are also well. As these are two of the most noxious islands, those cheering accounts must be attributed to that excellent measure of the Lieut-General commanding,—giving the fag of the garrison duty and night work to the black troops.

74th Depot—Brevet-Major Crawley, Lieut. Edwards, and Ens. Walsh, proceed to the West Indies.

75th—The detacht. from Sligo to Boyle, Jan. 5th to 7th.

76th—All well at Demerara, under the command of Major Dansey, Bt. Lieut.-Colonel.

76th Depot—Ensigns Simmons and Rutherfoord being sick will not proceed in the Barossa.

87th—One Officer, 1 Serjt., and 30 r. and f. from Castlebar to Sligo, Jan. 3d to 5th.

89th—Lieut. Blunt died of yellow fever at Trinidad. This regiment has suffered severely at Trinidad. Capt. Pearson died after two days' fever. Several officers were unwell, and only one Subaltern fit for duty: the regiment is under the command of Major Pearse.

91th—in the Apollo, on passage to the Cape, was met at sea, on 10th Nov., all well, and had a prosperous passage.

Rifle Brigade, 1st Batt.—Last week a Court-martial composed of the officers of the batt., was held for the trial of private Edward Sears, for sundry breaches of military discipline. The charges were proved against him, and the Court sentenced Sears to four months' imprisonment in Millbank Penitentiary.

1st West India Regiment—The head-quarters, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Bush, K.H., at Morne Fortune, St. Lucia. One company, under the command of Major Chads, at Pigeon Island. Major W. M. Mills proceeds to Europe, for the purpose of retiring from the service, having served in the West Indies since 1803; the corps sustains a great loss in this truly worthy and meritorious officer. Lieut. Beecher died at Barbadoes on 27th Oct.; he was out on Thursday, and a corpse at 12 o'clock on Friday night; and Lieut. Minty died at St. Vincent; making the fifth Lieutenant that has died within the last nine months!! On the 6th Nov. His Excellency Lieut.-Gen. Sir Samford Whittingham, K.C.B. and K.C.H., inspected the detachment under the command of Capt. L. S. O'Connor, consisting of 3 Serjeants, and 160 r. and f. The divisions having marched past in slow and quick time, were wheeled into line, and went through the manual and platoon exercises; several manœuvres were performed, and at the close His Excellency was pleased to desire Capt. O'Connor to convey to the non-commissioned Officers and men "his approbation of their appearance and steadiness under arms, and that their improvement in their exercise was only to be surpassed by their good conduct in garrison." One comp. of this detacht. are the chief mutineers of the 18th June 1837; the other comp. landed, fresh-caught, from Africa, in Jan. last; the detachment furnishes one half the garrison duty at St. Ann's, a vast relief to the European soldiers; that it agrees with the black troops is evident, as there are only three men in the hospital out of 171.

Royal Artillery—It is generally understood at Woolwich that one of the companies will be sent to Halifax in the Spring, to replace those moved up to Canada. By pass order an extra Acting Bombardier has been appointed to each comp. The detachments at Dominica and Grenada have lost almost all their men. Lt.-Col. D. Story is at present the Senior Officer of the troops at Barbadoes. He proceeds to Europe at the close of this year (1838).

Royal Engineers—Lt. Reilly, 1st W.I. regt., is appointed Acting Engineer at Tobago: Lt. M'Kenzie, of the same corps, Acting Engineer at Dominica.

A piece of plate, valued at 150 guineas, has been presented by the gentlemen Cadets of Woolwich Academy to Dr. Gregory, Professor of Mathematics, on his retirement from that office. The circumstances of the presentation must be the more gratifying to Dr. Gregory on retiring from his long career of official duty, as this is the only testimonial of the kind which has ever been presented to a retiring professional during the existence of the Academy.

The freight ship Etheldred, at Cork, is to receive on board the detachments of the 14th and 70th regts. for Barbadoes; and the freight ship Hopewell is to embark the detachments of the 56th, 64th, and 68th regiments for Jamaica.

Sir Jas. M'Gregor, in a letter to Dr. Shiel, of Ballyshannon, disapproves of the conduct of Ass.-Surg. O'Donnell, who has undertaken the apothecary business, and is Postmaster of Ballyshannon. The Inspector-General says that his conduct is discreditable to the Medical department of the Army in circulating hand-bills.

In Dublin garrison, H. M'Alpin, 42d, A. Stevenson, 79th, W. Dobson, 7th, are sentenced to seven years' transportation; T. Hodgkinson, 17th Lancers, to 200 lashes, for robbing an officer; and Gunner Long to three months' imprisonment, for drunkenness.

* Ordered Home.

The Barossa, with drafts for the 64th, 14th, 56th, 68th, and 76th regiments, rode out the gale most gallantly at Cove.

The inhabitants of Athlone are about to present an address to Major-General Sir J. Buchan, on his retiring from the command of that district.

Animal Magnetism.—Dr. Elliotson has given up his professorship at the London University, in consequence of the authorities interfering with his magnetic experiments. A majority of the pupils, with whom he was a great favourite, are irate at his resignation.

ZEPHYR st v, Lieut -Com. James Small (1825), Holyhead.

PORTSMOUTH, Jan. 11th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Commander-in-Chief returned to his post on Friday, and the flag was again hoisted in the Britannia. Electra arrived from South America on Monday, and was towed into harbour the following day; she quitted Rio Janeiro on the 22d November, leaving there the Stag, Actæon, Spider, Sparrow, Stakesby transport, and Independence American frigate. Actæon was ordered to the River Plate to relieve Calliope; the latter to go to Rio. Sparrowhawk ordered from the River Plate round the Horn, to take the place of the Harrier. Spider was about to proceed to Buenos Ayres, and Sparrow to resume her station at the Falkland Islands. Stakesby, after landing her stores, was to go to St. Helena, then to Ascension, and afterwards to England. Actæon made the passage to Rio in thirty-nine days. Orestes had not arrived, but was daily expected. Electra brought to Spithead a freight of about 300,000 dollars; on 1st Dec. she captured a slaver called the Diligenti, having 302 slaves on board; the vessel and cargo she sent back to Rio for condemnation. On the 28th Dec., the Electra spoke the Alert packet off the Western Island; a dock having been cleared for the Electra, she was taken in this day, and her copper will be taken off and minutely inspected, to endeavour to ascertain the cause of defect which has caused the vessel being ordered to England. Partridge sailed on Wednesday for the coast of Africa. Ganges is at Spithead, she will be paid advance wages next week, and then proceed to the Mediterranean, calling at Lisbon. The Acheron steamer called in on Thursday on her way to Falmouth. Daphne is to go out of the basin next week, the Admiralty have ordered her complement of seamen to be increased 20; she now has a crew of 165; her destination is the Mediterranean, calling at Lisbon. Cameleon will go to Spithead to-morrow on Monday. There is nothing doing in the port. The people of the Dockyard are actively employed on the Royal Frederick and Indus, to get them ready for launching as soon as possible. The men engaged in breaking up the Prince George have been allowed 17 days to do it in, and it is as much as they will be able to do in the time; the weather has been unfavourable, and there is an astonishing number of bolts to be driven. Horatio transport came from the eastward this afternoon, to take some stores and a strong detachment of the 98th Regt. from Gosport to Jamaica. Ships in Port—Ganges and Horatio transport at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Daphne, Electra, Cameleon, Emerald yacht, Messenger steamer, in Harbour.

PLYMOUTH, Jan. 10 h.—(From our own Correspondent.)—8th—Sailed Megæra, st.-v. Lt.-Com. H.C. Goldsmith, for Malta, touching at Gibraltar, on her way out; also sailed Devon lighter for Portsmouth, with supernumeraries for the Ganges; and the Goodwill lighter with stores for Sheerness and Chatham Dock-yards. 9 h—Sailed Inconstant, 36, Capt. D. Tring, for Cork, to take on board detachts. of troops for Halifax. 10th—Arrived Rolla, 10, Lt.-Com. C. Hall, from Cork, with 63 newly raised men for the Navy. Bramble cutter, 10, is ordered to be brought forward for commission. It is said the Acorn, 16, will be commissioned in a few days, and it is reported that Com. G. St. Vincent King, who lately paid off the Champion at this port, is to command her. Letters have been received from Lily, 16, Com. J. Reeve, announcing her safe arrival at the Cape de Verd Islands, all well. Hind cutter has been towed into Catwater, for the reception of newly raised men for the Navy which may arrive by private steamers, &c., from Liverpool, Scotland, and Ireland. In Harbour—Royal Adelaide, Son Josef, Hercules, Malabar, Opossum. In Barnpool—Nightingale. In the Sound Rolla.

DEPTFORD.—Sailed the Horatio transport, Lt. Chapman, to take the Arab's troops; arrived and fitting, the Glasgow for Cape of Good Hope. Remain Arab, Lt. Lister, to be discharged, Whitby and Waverly to take convicts from Ireland, Brunswick for Malta, Hopewell for West Indies, and Amity for Bermuda.

MALTA, Dec. 12.—On Wednesday last the Queen Dowager visited H.M.S. Asia, 84, Capt. W. Fisher, and the Wolverine, 16, Com. the Hon. F. Howard; and on Monday Her Majesty went on board the Bellerophon, 80, Capt. C. J. Austen, the Minden, 74, Capt. A. R. Scarpe, and the Barham, 50, Capt. A. L. Corry. Her Majesty was received on board each ship with the yards manned, and the honours due to her exalted rank. The officers had the honour of being presented by their respective Captains, and the Queen went round the ships, and expressed her admiration of the order and regularity everywhere observable. Ships in Port—Princess Charlotte, 104, Ceylon, Asia, 84, Vanguard, 80, Bellerophon, 80, Dido, 48, Hazard, 11, Wolverine, 16, with the steamers Hermes, Volcano, and Firefly. Rodney, 92, and Pembroke, 74, just coming in from the Dardanelles.

H.M.'s brig Termagant captured a slaver (328 slaves) off Prince's Island, on 9th Oct. 1838, and carried her to Sierra Leone, crew all well. Melville was expected in the Bights, for the purpose of visiting the squadron, about Christmas. Lynx was off Lagos; officers and crew healthy. Pelican was heaving down at Prince's Island, to be re-coppered; crew healthy, expecting to return to England in Feb. Bonetta was employed in the River Bonny; crew all healthy. Viper and Dolphin are employed in the Bight of Benin. Brisk was off Sierra Leone, and had taken two prizes. Forester and Nautilus were on the E. Coast and off the Cape of Good Hope. Pylades all well, expecting daily to return to England. Columbine all well, arrived at Prince's Island on the 9th October, and sailed for the Cape of Good Hope. Fair Rosamond was at St. Helena on 3rd Nov., having proceeded to that island to recruit her crew after their late sickness. She was shortly to proceed to Ascension, refit, and return to the Coast. The other vessels of the squadron are to follow in turn the same round, to re-establish the health of their crews, after the sickly season. Fair Rosamond had lately captured, while at anchor at Accra, the beautiful schooner Constitucau, fitted for carrying slaves, with a crew of 39 men, and mounting three long 18-pounders, one on a pivot. She was under Portuguese colours, but her Spanish papers were found, which condemned her, together with her cargo, worth 4000*l*.

Officers on the Navy List of January in each year, mentioned, from 1816 to 1839:—

We noticed last week the presentation of a cup to William Jennings, Coast Guard Service. Since which the following has been addressed to the Editor of the Devonport Telegraph:—

"Having observed in your former paper the deserved and just encomiums on Jennings, the Coast Guard man, I also think it but just to inform you of the handsome conduct of the inhabitants of East and West Looe towards myself and shipwrecked crew; certainly no persons could use greater exertions, and no person's feelings could be more intense, while we were on the wreck, and until we were landed. Captain Walcott, the Inspecting Commander, followed Jennings to the rock from whence he threw the rope, and remained there wet up to the neck until we were all landed. Mr. Bolt and Mr. Parrett, both officers of the Coast Guard, exerted themselves both to save us and the wreck, as did all that were there; and all the inhabitants vied with each other in showing us attention and making us comfortable after we were on shore; and also got up a very handsome subscription, viz. 28*l.* to divide among the sailors, to replenish the clothes the poor men had lost, and to reward the poor fellows who carried the boat from Looe to the wreck, a distance of about two miles.

"Yours respectfully, WM. C. LAIDLER.

"P.S.—Lieut. Wm. Nicolas, R.N., brother of Capt. T. Nicolas, of H.M.S. Hercules, was the first promoter of carrying the boat round, which was of essential service in getting from the wreck to the shore."

H.M.'s STEAM VESSEL EXPERIMENT:—

"Prescott, Nov. 20th, 1838.

"SIR,—We, the undersigned, beg leave to hand you the enclosed expression of the feelings and gratitude of the clergy, magistrates, and inhabitants of this place, for the gallant conduct of Lieut. Fowell, R.N., when in command of the armed steamer Experiment, on Monday 12th inst., together with Mr. David Elliott (Mate) and crew of said vessel, in preventing the landing of the pirates and rebels at this place from on board the steamer United States and two schooners. We have, &c.

"A. JONES, J. P. WM. J. SCOTT, J. P.

"To Capt Sandom, R.N., Commanding, Kingston."

"We, the undersigned, clergy, magistrates, and inhabitants of the town of Prescott, feel it our bounden duty to express to you in the highest terms our gratitude for, and admiration of, the gallant and judicious manner in which Lieut. Fowell, and Mr. D. Elliott (Mate), R.N., together with the crew of the armed steam-boat Experiment, repelled the repeated attempts of the four piratical vessels—the steam boats United States and Paul Pry and two schooners—to effect a landing in this town on Monday 12th inst., as we consider the preservation of Fort Wellington and the town on that day wholly attributable to their exertion.—Prescott, Nov. 20th, 1838."

"H.M.S. Niagara, Kingston, Nov. 21st, 1838

"GENTLEMEN,—I have received with infinite satisfaction the respectable and flattering testimon) you bear to the services rendered by the officers and crew of H.M.'s steam vessel Experiment, on the late attack upon Prescott, and shall avail myself of it to draw the attention of my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to their meritorious conduct, which I feel assured will call forth some mark of their Lordships' approbation. I have, &c. WILLIAMS SANDOM, Capt. Com. on the Lakes

"To the Clergy, Magistrates, and Inhabitants of Prescott."

The sum of 70*l.* 1*s.* has been remitted to Sir F. M. Ommanney, on account of the Dreadnought hospital ship; the same being the amount of donations received from persons visiting the Britannia during the past year.

Lieut.-Col. James Nicholson, of the Woolwich Division of Royal Marines, who had only the previous morning been walking on the parade with his brother officers in his usual health and spirits, died suddenly on Wednesday. The Dockyard guards which pass the villa of the lamented officer, have been directed to proceed in silence, so that the instrumental music of the band may not break upon the mournful feelings of those contemplating the earthly remains of one universally regretted and respected by every rank, naval and military, in the garrison.

NAVAL AND MILITARY COMMISSION.—Reports have been for some time prevalent, in the best-informed circles of the United Service, that a serious misunderstanding has arisen between some of the most distinguished members of the commission, the precise nature of which has not transpired; but it is generally rumoured that it appertains more particularly to the Navy, and the system adopted towards the old and meritorious officers, excluding them from employment, or under such disadvantages that few of old standing can & will accept employment; in addition to the cruel situation their widows are placed in by the existing regulations. This may be a ruse of some of its members to carry out the views of our economising Government, for we cannot forget with what ill grace it was received when forced upon it by the liberal Members of the House. A short time will, however, put Ministers to the proof of their sincerity upon the point.—Herald.

H.M.S. Hermes, Gibraltar, Dec. 20*th*.—We have just arrived here from Malta, which we left on the 13th, the whole of the fleet, except Talavera which was at Athens, Talbot at Tenedos, Tyne at Constantinople, were at Malta. Rhadamanthus had the previous day returned from Tunis, where the Minden was expected to go on the arrival of the mail from England. The Queen Dowager held a levee on the 12th, when all civilians who had access to the Governor's house were presented, as well as the officers of the Army and Navy; this measure had afforded the Maltese great pleasure, being the first of royalty that have placed foot on their shores. Sir Henry Bouverie gave a splendid ball the same evening, at which all Her Majesty's suite were present.

THE NELSON MONUMENT.—Extract of a letter from an officer at Malta.—"I think if you published in your widely-circulating Paper weekly, a certain number of the subscribers to the Nelson Monument (alphabetically), it would draw the attention of many and induce them to come forward and contribute their mite. We are all happy to notice you espouse the cause so warmly."—[This is a matter dependent upon the Committee, whom we cannot compliment for energy in the cause.—ED.]

The Arrow, Devonshire, Wellington, Tremendous, Defence, Black Prince, and Redoubtable, 74's, are transferred from Sheerness to Chatham to equalise the ordinaries, as also are Tweed and Venus frigates.

The Adelaide revenue cutter has recently been twenty-three weeks in this harbour refitting, in which time she was re-coppered, and supplied from London with a new set of rigging. A continuance of such gross robbery on the Government ought immediately to be remedied, and these craft should be sent to the Dock-yard for stores and repairs in future. Had this been the case in the present instance, the vessel in question would not have been delayed more than 10 days or a fortnight.—Hampshire Telegraph.

Mr. Francis Higginson, Mate of the Ranger rev. cutter, off Dover, has recently saved the life of a boy at Dover, under circumstances of the most daring and praiseworthy kind; he had to dive off a wall fifteen feet high to accomplish his humane purpose, and his exertions in the face of greatest danger has gained him the respect and esteem of all who witnessed his humane exertions. We understand this officer is most zealous and highly esteemed for his services and conduct as a Revenue Officer, and rigid performance of his duties.

The Buffalo store-ship is to be laid up in ordinary at Chatham.

Report states that the Winchester and Thalia are to be commissioned at Chatham; they will be armed with long 32-pounder guns.

Com. Charles Robinson, R.N. (1794), has been appointed to the out-pension of Greenwich Hospital, vice Brett, deceased.

A TOUCH AT JOEY,

On reading Admiral Coffin's Letter

A Gallant Member in debate,
One well known throughout the war,
Seems certain he is not dead weight,
Notwithstanding Loblolly's jaw.
Bravo, Sir Isaac! Brave Long Tom,*
How dare he guess your weight when living!
Had you this earth departed from He'd then not think your weight worth giving
Why not have stuck to pestle—mortar—
And spoke of things he understood?
He well deserves the gunner's daughter,
Her dowry—a dozen—for his good.
If you were present at his marriage,
Her dowry, then, you might increase,
And when he left the bridal carriage
His opposition, no doubt, would cease,
And Navy Items pass in peace. W.

* So nicknamed at Portsmouth.

CAPTAIN SLEIGH ON NAUTICAL DISCIPLINE; AND PROPOSAL FOR MANNING THE FLEET WITHOUT IMPRESSMENT.—Continued from p. 838.

We have thus viewed the mariner through the common career which he runs in the most flattering position he is doomed to enjoy in the trading marine, without descending minutely to particularise some of the oppressive and petty tyrannies imposed upon him, while aloof from the interference and aid of his country or its service. But speaking, in this treatise, from a love of constitutional freedom, a zeal for the country's good, and a regard for the mariner's sufferings, it becomes a duty to promulgate the knowledge of those evils, with a view to remedy them. And if it has been considered prudent to dilate upon these defects, let it not be unworthily or detrimentally assumed that it has emanated from a wish to diffuse discontent among those hardy and gallant men, who, devoted to laudable toil and danger, have never disgraced themselves by illegal combination, before or since the unfortunate period of Parker, who paid the just penalty of a mutineer, or the less momentuous time of Christian. With regard to the opinions herein expressed, they are founded upon that evidence which admits of no controversy—facts, which can, if necessary, be referred to, although the evils are so manifest, and of so glaring a nature, as to require no private sources of information to be laid open, the cruelties and injustice recorded, the cases which are continually brought before the magistrates of different sea-ports, carry in themselves sufficient conviction to satisfy any inquiring mind. Indeed, the testimony of ordinary experience, of common every-day observation, without quitting the track of usual life, would be found equal to attest the petty oppressions to which the unfortunate seaman is subject from the time he first sets his foot on board a trading vessel, until the close of his eventful career. Let the internal arrangement and domestic economy of the trading-vessel be next examined, and we shall find how complete is the disregard manifested of the sailors common and essential comforts. From an inordinate desire of gain upon the part of the shipowner, we see him unjustly and inconsiderately debarred from mere animal comforts, or the means of obtaining natural rest. The portion of the vessel which is allotted to him being, in all cases, wretchedly contracted, is frequently taken from him, if not invariably curtailed by appropriating it to cargo, thus leaving him, through a lengthened voyage, exposed to the inclemency of climate and weather. Every part of the vessel is filled with freight, allowing only a hole not sufficiently large to admit a third part of the crew for the ship's company to use. This occurs particularly in the homeward voyage, when even the mates, as well as a portion of the seamen, are obliged to sleep on deck. Notwithstanding these circumstances, in addition to the labour of night, in performing that duty for which double the number would be requisite, they are forced to work the whole day, every alternate night bringing with it but four hours rest. Thus exposed to the elements, together with a bad description of salt provisions, and impure water being issued, and the necessary ardent spirits to counteract cold being withheld, together with unceasing toil, after a relaxing and unhealthy climate, soon works its end on the mariner—illness ensues, but no repose is allowed; medical assistance, if any there be, is perhaps denied (it being unfailingly considered a pretext for rest). This frequently occasions discontent; the agonized wretch is compelled to work, and should he refuse, when commanded, a blow from a handspike brings him to his duty, and forces him to continue whilst he can linger on deck. If the person be a young seaman, or boy, a rope's-end starting is resorted to, both to prevent cessation from labour, and to expedite its performance, even where the slightest neglect has been committed. When in a foreign port, the labour is carried on to an excess, regardless of the climate, amid the fatal dews of midnight, under the broiling mid-day sun, or the perpetual torrents of rain, which fall at periodical seasons, when even the negroes are permitted a respite; the sailor, upon the most frivolous pretence, is kept employed, without an opportunity being afforded him of changing his drenched garments, regardless of all consequences. Hence one of the chief causes of the great mortality which prevails in the trading-marine in tropical climates. In the North America trade the seamen work on the rafts up to their middle in water; and in the fall and spring voyages the labour is intolerable at Quebec and St. Johns, New Brunswick. In the unclement northern regions the sailor's treatment is equally rigorous, where, being unduly exposed to the elements, his clothes become one mass of ice in the unremitting occupation of his arduous duty. Indeed it appears as if the intention were to destroy him for some ulterior end. Far from being astonished at the numerous deaths, it should rather surprise that so many escape under the tenfold disadvantages and aggravated treatment they endure. This continued labour is forced without permission being granted for recreation on shore, so requisite to invigorate and encourage after a long and tedious voyage; nor is the Sabbath itself exempt from toil, unless there be an absolute dearth of employment. This treatment and these practices are more frequently perpetrated by individuals under the first denomination, and by those who, from selfishness and ignorance of the seaman's true character, know not how to appreciate his worth; or by the second class, who, termed by their employer, endeavour to extort labour beyond bounds, fearful of sacrificing their appointments, if a surplus quantity of work should not be performed during the voyage. The toilsome duty and the perilous occupations which are incidental to, and inseparable from the mariner's pursuits, and which cannot in a measure be avoided, would be rendered more supportable were the too frequent cruelties already spoken of suppressed, for toil and danger alone never render a true seaman dissatisfied, but oppression, needless and vexatious work, a refusal of privileges, and an inattention to his future support, discourage and wean him from his native shores, and attract him to the service of other countries. Such are the acts of injustice which press upon him in our trading-marine, and plunge him into distress, the never-failing cause of that wandering already adverted to. Dismissed his vessel immediately upon arrival, and forced to wait perhaps a considerable time before he receives his pay, or at least until the cargo shall be discharged, the mariner not being permitted to avail himself of that and other descriptions of work, equally applicable to his calling, (as the work is reserved in accordance with the agreement made with the rigging contractor for his men), being unprovided for and unceremoniously cast off, becomes a prey to the crimping vampires of wickedness and design, and is compelled to live on credit until the vessel is unloaded, when he receives his wages, which, from usurious interest, is, of course, deeply mortgaged to the insidious crimp, alike of his body and resources, who never quits his victim until his means are at the lowest ebb, nor permits him to follow the dictates of his own feelings by at once seeking a vessel, as by the sailor's immediate employment the crimp would lose the advance of pay upon engagement, which he also acquires before he relinquishes his hold. The sailor frequently seeing no immediate opportunity of "shipping," and aware from experience of the practical designs of his persecutor, by whom he has so often suffered, is anxious to join his country's Royal Service, where he knows there is always an opening; this desire he unthinkingly imparts to his mentor, who fails not to disapprove of it. He threatens to commence legal proceedings against the sailor for debt (perhaps an imaginary one), and does not fail to represent the Navy, with all the assiduity of interest, and the malignancy of hatred, as a perfect hell, a floating inquisition, as the opposite of everything it is. Little would it please the procurer to find the mariner resolved in so wise and prudent a course; he would forfeit his anticipated gain, and lose the advance of pay from the trading-vessel, which the sailor is always supposed to receive, but seldom or never enjoys. Hence the character, domestic reputation, and foreign renown of our unequalled navy is vilified and traduced by the insidious endeavours of mercenary wretches, operating as much to the detriment of both services as injurious to the nation at large. The causes are briefly enumerated, emanating as they do from the neglect of shipowners and employers of the mariner, and resolving itself into the want of proper encouragement offered in the trading-marine. Or can there be a reasonable hope for any description of indulgence where consideration is not evinced by the employer on behalf of those employed. When once the mariner is engaged to perform a certain service, the contract is unchangeably binding upon him, under any circumstances, however momentuous or afflicting they may be: nothing can effect the stern law under which he engages, soften the heart of him whom he agrees to serve, or induce a relaxation of it. "The articles once signed," the seaman's liberty becomes forfeited should he violate them, whatever imperative calls interest of associations, or any other cause may have upon him. No excuse is permitted, the voyage must be performed; "all lawful orders must be obeyed." These laws, important as they are to a certain extent, cannot be avoided, and should not be infringed; but surely equity dictates that the terms of agreement should be equally binding upon both contracting parties,—show contrary the fact! The shipowner, upon mere caprice, upon any slight pretext, however trifling and unimportant, may give up his projected plan of proceeding upon the voyage, and dismiss the sailor without regarding or compensating for the disappointment and loss occasioned; but, should the seaman withdraw from his part of the stipulation, he is considered by the law as a criminal, and punished accordingly. Comparatively speaking, the magnitude of the seaman's preparations cannot be great, but they operate upon him in a corresponding degree. This is another species of partial legislation, equally repugnant to common justice and wisdom. Passing over in silence the oppressive measures which are so constantly in operation against the trading-mariner, which have been previously touched upon, yet many others there are of a no less glaring nature, which remain unnoticed, even so that it would be almost an endless and afflicting task to dwell upon them. Many of these we find enumerated in the reports of maritime trials, whilst others are kept from the public eye by the powerful influence of gold, by which the seaman's wrongs are silenced and evidence perverted, in order to thwart, evade, and destroy the ends of justice.—To be Continued.

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

BAYONET FENCING AND SWORD BAYONETS

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—As the bayonet, and its better use by fencing, not only continues a favourite theme, but enlists weekly new and experienced correspondents for your widely-circulating paper, all agreeing on one point—that the bayonet, although bravely used by our troops, might have been so more effectively still (for I can only chime in with the latter part of Chevron's pithy sentence, when, in your No. 308, he says, that "the bayonet has hitherto been useless—the fire-lock little better"); and as my humble opinion has been invited, I thus straitingly, yet with deference, declare it to be decidedly against sword-bayonets, hand-rifle, or any other, fashion; and certainly not because I am the inventor of the patent bayonet, but because, not only perfectly coinciding with Arthur's opinion, "that bayonet and sabre had better remain distinct," I have had constant proofs before me, whilst disciplining riflemen as their Adjutant, that sword-bayonets are VERY top-heavy, wherefore they would be the very worst weapons for bayonet fencing, since thrusts with them can easily be parried, to be followed by a sluggish recover, and which I found to be the case, even after ordering the men, when at sword-bayonet drill, to fill the traps of their rifles with bullets. As to cutting some inches from the musket barrel, and adding as much to any kind of bayonet, it will not afford any relief as to weight worth notice, on the contrary, and especially if briquets, or similar side-arms are to be worn, I should say, rather shorten the bayonet, for then it can be made lighter without losing strength, and add as much to the musket-barrel; it will suit better for bayonet fencing, and the weight together will be much the same. Perhaps I should not extend this change to the flank companies; for, by not shortening their bayonets it will prevent skirmishers and escaladers from being inconvenienced in their particular duties, by the addition to the musket's length. If I did not cherish a strong hope that the adoption of the waist-belt will prevent what the most careful adjustment of a sword worn in a cross-belt can scarcely obviate, I should add, that their sabres should not be allowed to keep tapping the calf of the right leg, as if to urge it on in running to keep up with the left, as used to be generally, and in some instances now is, the case; not to speak of consequent and not unfrequent stumbles, all occasioned by swords worn in the fashion of what German soldiers rather inelegantly call A—r—g—l, signifying a bolt for a nameless part. The hollow in the handle of a rifleman's sword is a great impediment to self-defence, &c., by sword in hand; since it cannot be used with the same vigour as the short sabres of the German Infantry are, much less for hutting, or making fascines, or a brushwood abatis; for the cut in the handle bruises the coarsest hand when chopping sharply with these bayonet-swords, and tends greatly to give to cuts a false direction.

That riflemen, when forced into open ground, and devoid of the support of Cavalry, are a weak force, especially when harassed by Cavalry, I never presumed to deny, when I had the enviable distinction of being allowed to submit my humble ideas on Military equipments and changes, &c., to an illustrious Duke, and afterwards to the first personage in these realms, as stated in a former letter; but it made me submit a plan at that time, illustrated by several drawings, of forming rifles three deep; the third rank to carry lances or pikes, instead of rifles, and the whole to be allowed one short belt or life-pistol. The use of the pikes obviously to be most for close order, or retreating squares. Besides becoming useful in cases of climbing, and as a leaping-stick occasionally, I hoped to make the lance a stimulus to improvement in superior shooting; for I proposed that men who failed at ball practice to class themselves, should continue in the lance rank until they did qualify thus; I also showed how even a rifleman could carry a rifle AND a lance, supported from the waist-belt by a small leathern bucket, and held by a loop above.

I will not encroach more on your columns now, but, with your coveted encouragement, will add further explanations on this subject hereafter; as also how Arthur's excellent idea of carrying the knapsacks in carts, one for each company, can be carried into additional effect, and with an increase of strength instead of loss. Extraordinary epochs require extraordinary measures: he that hesitates to adopt them gives away a chance which tells doubly against him if an enemy avails himself of them; and especially mortifying it must be, when, beaten into conviction of the utility, he has to adopt, last instead of first, what he despised, as the Austrians did Bonaparte's now, and as they said, unsoldier-like manœuvres. I have the honour to remain, Sir, your obliged and entertained subscriber, DE BERENGER.

Stadium, Cremorne House, Chelsea, Jan. 2d, 1839.

P.S. I propose to give you some observations on the bayonet fencing drill, by the Maitres des Armes, who surely must have kept a good reserve.

THE NEW ARMY LIST.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—The publication of an Army List such as your last number has announced to be forthcoming will no doubt be satisfactory as well as useful to the military part of the community; but, as people may be led into error with regard to the merits and claims of Officers by such a document, you would do well to guard your readers against forming too hasty a conclusion respecting the claims of Officers from the length of time it may appear they have been in the receipt of full-pay. The Army List of which you have given us a specimen may perhaps afford a good general data, but there are so many different kinds of Officers, and so many different ways of serving on full-pay, that it requires more than the sum total of years an individual has been on either full or half-pay to arrive at any just estimate of the value or importance of his military services, or of his claims on the country. There is the steady-going, plodding, hard-working, never sick, never-on-leave kind of Officer; but there is also the accomplished humbug, old as well as young, always on full-pay, and always shuffling and scheming. There is a kind of Officer, of a naturally delicate constitution, totally unfit for service, but always on full-pay, who, after having been several months on the sick list, is sent off by a Medical Board for the recovery of his health—after some months' absence, returns, to go on the sick list, until the Medical Board sends him away again. Then there is a kind of Officer, who, either from political connexions or the military influence of his father and friends, and the good nature of the Horse Guards, not only is always on full-pay, and never with his Regiment, but generally in the receipt of some handsome Staff emoluments on a good station, while his brother Officers (with whom he is, of course, a great favourite,) are doing his share of the Colonial slavery—the badge of the British Army. Again, while, through the oppression and injustice of some plebeian tyrant, by nature only fitted to wield a pitchfork, one Officer is perhaps driven to half-pay to arrange some private business, when he might have been spared such a sacrifice by a few months' leave of absence; another, through the patronage of his Commanding Officer, gets every now and then his two or three years' leave of absence, and as much of the depot as he likes; and whilst some unfortunates, after several years' service abroad, are refused a short repose; at the depot, on the other hand, numbers of birds are for ever bolstered up in some snug berth or another, on a good station. Taking these things into consideration, surely every one will admit that, in many instances, so far from length of service on full pay giving any additional claim, it only proves that the individual has already received too much, and in some cases twenty years' full-pay upon paper will be found to bear no comparison with ten years' active and zealous service.

[Our correspondent overlooks the fact, that, in addition to dates, there will be explanatory notes, relative to Officers' Services. The New Army List must be of incalculable service to the hard-working and meritorious Officer, whilst the Old Army List makes no distinction,—in fact, does infinite injury to the old deserving Officer, by placing the young above him, without any notification of their respective services and claims.—ED.]

TRISTRAM CONCLUDING HIS PONDERATION ON COMMANDER INMAN'S COURT-MARTIAL.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—The seaman in that case is justly and legally punished, according to the authorised custom of the Naval service, by the order of his Captain, who is governed by honour and justice. The officer in this case is tried by five Commanding Officers—not by their measure of honour—not by their opinion of justice—but upon their sacred oath, "Duly to administer justice according to the articles and orders established by an Act of Parliament for the Government of Her Majesty's ships, vessels, and forces by sea, without partiality, favour, or affection; and if any case shall arise which is not particularly mentioned in the said articles and orders, then also duly to administer justice according to their conscience, the best of their understanding, and the custom of the Navy in like cases."

Vindex, in the third paragraph of his opinion, submits, that, "Supposing that any Military offence had come out in the evidence, not specified in the indictment (the three letters), the Court had no legal right at that time to pass a sentence of punishment for it." Mr. Inman does not want his character to be saved by a flaw or a quibble; if he do, then I will repeat what I said in one of my letters on Naval Courts-Martial (which he should read, in the N. & M. G., No. 147, Nov. 21, 1835), "blasted still is that officer's honour, ashore or afloat, which is saved only by a 'flaw in the indictment,' or by a lawyer's quibble!" Vindex's opinion is artfully given; it may persuade—not convince. Art may pervert truth itself. "I am," says Chesterfield, "no skilful casuist, nor subtle disputant, and yet I would undertake to justify and qualify the depredations of a highwayman, step by step, and so plausibly as to make many ignorant people embrace the profession as an innocent, if not a laudable one, and to puzzle people of some degree of knowledge to answer me point by point;" but Vindex is no Index, so I shall steer by my own compass. "How is the wind, Tristram?" "South." "What course art thou steering?" "North."

> "The needle, faithful to the North,
> Will show of constancy the worth,
> A curious lesson teaches man."

Mr. Inman's conduct on the 12th of August is charged (indicted) by the Admiralty, the court ordered by their Lordships "to try him for the same," and Mr. Inman actually defended his conduct on that and the six following days! He is, therefore, according to the custom of the sea service, legally charged (indicted) for his conduct whilst in bed with his servant-boy; and had a breach of the 29th Article been proved in the evidence, sentence of death might have been passed, and legally carried into execution; but as the crime could, possibly, be proved by implication only (as adultery is considered proved if a wife is discovered sleeping with any man but her husband), his life could not be effected, but his character and commission for ever forfeited, and his person incarcerated, for perhaps two years, in the Marshalsea for a breach of a part of the 2nd Article of War, viz. "uncleanness in derogation of God's honour and corruption of good manners;" but for the peace of mind, and the honour of himself and his respectable family, there is no evidence whatever to satisfy the Court, or any one else, that he was conscious of the boy being asleep by his side. Wine inebriates the senses, while sleeping, to a deadly loss of action, feeling, or propensity even in dreams. In fact, when Mr. Inman came on board at half-past twelve, he was not sober; he retired to rest, during which he could not be aware of a living animal sleeping by his side, whether in the shape of boy, belle, or boa-constrictor. He is thus cleared even by implication, or suspicion, of any unclean act or inclination, because every faculty was dead from about 2 A.M., when the boy was seen sleeping on his master's trunk, till between 7 and 8 A.M., when he was made sensible and informed of his being under arrest, and his cabin converted into a dungeon, for a capital offence, implied by circumstantial evidence.

A prisoner's defence is generally so formed as to extenuate, not aggravate! but here Mr. Inman was necessitated to prove a crime—drunkenness; to prove drunkenness, also, in his servant-boy—yet a child of tender years—aged 14—under his care and instruction, to save himself from the ignominy of an implied disgusting crime, in derogation of Divine law and Christian humanity. He clearly disproved the possibility of the commission of that crime, but clearly proved an offence against himself, which is unpardonable in an officer, viz. drunken torpor for six or seven hours.

From all these concurrent circumstances we may be certain the Court thus deliberated:—"The prisoner is undoubtedly unconscious of the boy being asleep in his bed, but he is seen between 12 and 1 o'clock on the morning of the 12th of August, by the officer of the watch, not sober, as his countenance indicated—he was observed to stagger across the quarter-deck,—he is not disturbed or awakened by the steward shutting his door at 2 o'clock, nor by the motions of his servant-boy getting into bed by his side, nor by the boy's appropriating his master's only bed-covering, the blanket, to his own use,—he is insensible to the call of the officer of the watch, for duty or orders, at 4 o'clock, again at 5, when he and his servant were publicly exhibited in bed, by an officer, to three of the ship's company; in fact, he did not recover his senses from his Bacchanalian trance till nearly 8 o'clock; and his having absented himself on the same day, whether by the connivance of authority or advice of friendship, when he declared his innocence (or rather unconsciousness of any offence but senseless inebriation), was a great error in judgment, and very reprehensible;"—from this impartial and due deliberation, after having heard his defence of his conduct on the said 12th of August and six following days, comes this just and legal sentence,—"the whole of which conduct he on highly irregular and unbecoming the character of an officer, the Court, pursuant to the orders of the Admiralty, to try him for his conduct on the said 19th day of August, doth, without partiality, favour, or affection, duly administer justice according to its conscience, the best of its understanding, and the custom of the Navy in like cases, sentence the said Commander Richard Inman to be dismissed Her Majesty's service."

Sentinel's opinion continued—"I am deeply impressed with the conviction that the Court of Queen's Bench have the power, and if applied for will grant a mandamus, to compel the Court-Martial to do justice to this innocent gentleman. The present Lord Chief Justice is a judge before whom the Board of Admiralty quail, (indeed!) for they well know that their commissionerships are not above the law; though they affect to dispute the power of the Crown, their Lordships tremble at the bare idea of the direful truth being disseminated, that there is a tribunal which can wrench stern justice from their hands."

Now it so happens that I have in my possession the opinion (in 1822) of the present Lord Chief Justice upon a similar case, viz., the dismissal of a Naval Officer of rank by Court-Martial, in which his Lordship submits, that unless the prisoner was imprisoned by an incompetent jurisdiction, or had suffered by the malice of the Court, the Court is not amenable to civil law. "But the censure is a censure of misconduct from (then) His Majesty's Service, which, if pronounced without authority, should have no effect whatever, and which in that view derived its whole effect from the subsequent confirmation of it by the Lords of the Admiralty."

"I am aware that it may be said with truth that a dismissal is a much severer injury than either fine or imprisonment, and if brought about by individuals assuming but not possessing the authority of a Court-Martial, in consequence of this voluntary reprehension of conduct not legally brought within their cognizance, they might perhaps be made accountable in an action for a libel. I confess, however, I cannot advise such an action to be brought; for as the issuing of the several censures would be strictly possible, and in execution of official duty, so I apprehend that it would be entirely divested of the character of malice, by being proved to have been bonâ fide the result of an inquiry, conducted before Naval Officers really believing themselves to be not only authorised but compelled to undertake the functions of a Court Martial."

But allowing the Court which tried Mr. Inman to have been illegally constituted, which I submit it was so (Capt. Glascock * is of the same opinion), Commander Searle not being in separate command of one of Her Majesty's vessels †, and that the Court of Queen's Bench, by (in that case) its undoubted authority, declared the proceedings of the said Court-Martial to be null and void, yet that Court has no control over the prerogative of the Crown, which could and would be exercised against the Commission which Mr. Inman held from the Crown. The Sovereign rewarded him with rank for good conduct—the Sovereign can take it away for proved and acknowledged misconduct. The Queen's will and pleasure would be thus declared under such circumstances. The services of Commander Inman are no longer required.

To conclude this ponderation, I think it was most injudicious in Mr. Inman to appear so sore in his defence against the prosecutor, who was obliged to prefer the first charge, as Mr. Inman was found in bed with his servant by an officer, who called witnesses to the fact, and to placing such a stress upon his arrest by his Commander, when his own messmate, Lieutenant Tracey, was the first person who put him under arrest. Commander Reeve acted, as every other officer would have done under so distressing a dilemma, for the good and credit of the service.

Mr. Inman appears to have been wrongly advised, or to have acted unadvisedly from beginning to end. Their Lordships will, I have no doubt, reinstate his unsullied name on the List of Commanders, for the honour of his profession, of himself, and of his connexions, his indiscretion having arisen from an unguarded enjoyment of wine, at a parting dinner and supper with his friends, the officers of another ship; provided he claps a stopper on those quibbling productions in certain party gazettes, which so acrimoniously attack the Admiralty, the Court, the prosecutor, and the Naval laws, without reason, excuse, or authority. Thus pondereth, under every charitable feeling, Mr. Inman's and thy friend, TRISTRAM

Lieut.-Colonel Gurwood, if possible, next week. Also "Chevron." "One of the Old School" will forgive us suspending his letter for the present.

In our observations on Promotion from the Ranks, last week, we find an error escaped correction, which it may be of importance to rectify—we stated that "two-thirds" of the vacancies in the rank of Ensign were filled by Serjeants, &c. We should have said "one-third."

The "Weekly Dispatch," as usual, has been treating its readers to the "Horrors of the Lash." Truly the writing on this subject is about as disgusting trash as we have read in our vocation. These horrible articles much remind us of certain paragraphs headed "Horrid Murder." The account is very minute, very horrid, and very disgusting—it only needs one essential ingredient for an article of news—truth.

The plan for placing petty officers of the first class in a separate mess, similar to Serjeants in the Army, has been long since proposed; but although any Commander of a ship may, if he pleases, adopt it, we believe no one had yet thought proper to do so. We have frequently recorded our opinion that this and other indulgences, calculated to exalt this class of men, would be powerful inducements for seamen to enter in inferior ratings, just as young recruits do in the Army, when they are certain of attaining positions within their reach by good conduct.

The gunnery instruction ship Excellent, at Portsmouth (a former one of that name), was established under Capt. (then Commander) George Smith in June, 1830, when Lord Melville was First Lord of the Admiralty. The establishment was enlarged, and the arrangements placed on the present plan in April, 1832, when Capt. Hastings was appointed; and this was under the administration of Sir James Graham. The Marine Artillery was reduced in the beginning of the year 1831, a very few weeks after the change of Government occurred, and the measure was therefore probably decided on by the former Board of Admiralty, but of this we cannot give "Navalis" the assurance he requires. When Sir James Graham took credit, in his speech at Glasgow, for establishing the gunnery school, of course the Honourable Baronet meant the present extended establishment. The Naval School of Architecture was abolished during the time the late King presided at the Board. We hope that we have now satisfied our correspondent's inquiries.

We originated the publication of a Distribution of the Troops and Companies of the Royal Artillery, and some of our contemporaries copied our return without acknowledgment. We this week again put forth a correct Distribution.

Admiral Sir Isaac Coffin's letter, in reply to "Nehemiah Grindstone," reached us as we were at press.

We thank "Namur;" but our statement was quite correct; it is he that is in error. "Canopus" is the very ship captured at the Nile, and not another built after her model. She underwent a thorough repair in 1814, and probably not many of her orignal timbers remain; nevertheless she is the identical ship.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 12, 1839.

We have seen letters dated the 2d of November from Bombay, and they make no mention of the arrival of Her Majesty's 18th Regiment from Ceylon at that Presidency. The force under Sir John Keane destined for Shikarpoor on the Indus was encamped on the esplanade at Bombay, and divided into brigades, &c. The whole were to embark on the 15th Nov. for Kurrachee Bundur, and to proceed up the Indus. The negotiations with the Umeers of Sinde had not succeeded, and from the unfriendly tone assumed towards Colonel Pottinger, the British Envoy Extraordinary, it was generally supposed that the Bombay force would be refused a pacific passage up the Indus. This barbarian state suffered Colonel Pottinger to be insulted with impunity; several stones were cast at him on his entrance into Hyderabad, and, through Persian or Russian influence, the Sindian rulers appear to have assumed a procastinating and braggadocio tone, well becoming the most cowardly and treacherous Court in all India. One who knows Sinde well, and the politics of Hyderabad, assures us that the only way to negotiate with the Sindians is "à la Napoleon," with an Army as the Envoy's suite. All that consummate skill in diplomacy, and adamantine firmness of character, combined with honesty and frankness, can accomplish, will be effected by Colonel Pottinger; but the experienced wisdom of Machiavel himself, with the tried integrity of Aristides, would little influence and meet little respect in a Court of folly and fraud. The free navigation of the Indus is equally essential as that of the Ganges, for the security of our military positions, and the extension of our commerce. This half-savage State of Sinde denies us the navigation of the Indus, and forbids our passing its territory. With equal justice might Great Britain refuse to nations the navigation of the Mediterranean because Gibraltar is a British fortress.

A rumour has been current that the Duke of Wellington has been consulted on the state of affairs of India, and that his opinion has been opposed to the measures taken by the Governor-General relative to Cabul. We doubt the correctness of the rumour as far as the latter part of it is concerned, but think it probable that his Grace's opinion was taken. The whole tenor of the Duke's Indian Despatches, and the opinions expressed in them, rather incline us to think that the movements in India have been in consequence of advice previously given by his Grace, and that the strange report now flying about originated in this circumstance. Nous verrons.

We learn, from an old friend and correspondent of our Journal, that the great improvement of the Black troops at Barbadoes, in their exercise and duties as soldiers, is solely to be attributed to the admirable and well-digested plan for their organisation and guidance, laid down by the Lieutenant-General commanding the Forces in the West Indies, and to the rigid attention with which it has been followed up. Sir Samford Whittingham appears to have possessed an intuitive insight into the African character; from fags and orderlies he raised them to the rank of soldiers—he pointed out and expected from them the same duty as that performed by the regiments of the line—he elevated them in their own opinion—he made them of consequence—he roused their ambition—held forth inducements for exertion—and he has now brought them to what they are—orderly, steady, attentive, and trustworthy soldiers.

Ignorant of the English language, torn from his native deserts—the child of nature, the wild untamed savage—is changed into the quiet and well-disciplined soldier, to the well-behaved and orderly member of society, free from many of the vices that are the bane, the poison, which sap the roots of the British Army! At first, the negro soldier learns by signs; he imitates what he sees performed by others: but the words of command soon become harmonised to his ears, and then he progresses rapidly in the knowledge of his exercise.

Here, again, the Lieutenant-General adopted the most effectual and simple measure of speedily rendering the Black troops effective soldiers; he mixed them with the European troops; he had all the guards equally made up of White and Black soldiers—the latter are perhaps the best mimics in the world—and they rapidly followed the deportment, style, and manner of the Europeans. By this wise and excellent plan, the West India regiments learned at Barbadoes, from seeing, more in one week than if they had been instructed orally for a year; they not only strove to copy but excel their fellow-soldiers of a lighter shade, and recruits of some ten months' standing—creatures who, a brief year ago, were feeding upon whatever prey Providence and their own exertion procured for them—are now performing the garrison duty at the head-quarters of the command in a manner creditable to any troops. We repeat that this great and extraordinary change is solely to be attributed to the sound policy adopted by Sir Samford Whittingham.

We direct the especial attention of the "Flag-Officer" to the following speech of Captain Berkeley, at a public dinner at Bristol, on Monday last, in which he not only totally confutes the "Flag Officer's" exaggerated statements, but expresses the true feeling of a British Officer, confident of our ability to meet and subdue any foe that may have the temerity to render it necessary. What a contrast does the conduct of this gallant sailor present to the miserable party spirit of the un-English clique, who are ever ready to decry the British service and to extol that of other nations!

"Captain Berkeley said, it was so much the fashion of the present day for the Tory press to vituperate Lord Minto and that Board of which he (Capt. Berkeley) was a member, that he could not think but that in the great city of Bristol, whose property was floating by steam and otherwise to all parts of the world, he should fail in doing his duty if he did not attempt to rescue from that vituperation Lord Minto and the Board of Admiralty—those who ruled over the Naval service of this country—(cheers). He would first allude to a pamphlet which had been recently published under the signature of 'A Flag Officer,' with reference to which he could only say, that that officer, if officer he were, had suffered his fears so completely to blind his judgment—he had so perverted facts, and magnified dangers—his alarms had so blinded him, and caused him so to overrate other powers, that he (Capt. Berkeley) sincerely trusted that as long as he had breath in his body the British flag would never be entrusted to his guidance—(cheers). It had been said, and never had it been more truly evidenced than by that pamphlet, that of all passions fear was the grossest instrument of delusion (cheers). The Tory press had attached great blame to Lord Minto and the Admiralty Board, because they had sent ships to sea less manned than they were in the time of war—(hear). He (Capt. Berkeley) would readily admit that when one of our ships left our shores she should be as near perfection as human skill and human means could make her. He was free to say, that the British fleet ought to be put upon a new and better footing as regarded the manning of the ships. He was convinced that they should do all they could do to encourage the voluntary enlistment of seamen. They should do all they could to give to the men that moral feeling, and courage, and confidence that would ensure them victory in the time of war—(cheers). All this he would admit, but then he must tell them that the present system was not of Lord Minto's introduction—it had been the system as long as the Admiralty Board had existed (hear); it was the intention of Lord Minto to alter it as soon as possible, but in the mean time the blame should not rest on the present Administration (cheers). But the Admiralty Board was blamed by the Tory press because they had vessels that were not equal to those of foreign powers. Surely it was too much to charge this on the present Administration (hear); it was a disgraceful legacy left them by their Tory predecessors, who towards the end of the war contracted for the building of forty 70-gun ships, the whole of which were of such inferior character that throughout the service they were denominated "the forty thieves" (laughter). Lord Minto could not burn or destroy these vessels; and it was unfair to charge their being in the service upon him (cheers). But there was another disgraceful legacy left them by the Tories—several frigates equally bad in their construction, and which had been universally called donkey frigates that could neither fight nor run (laughter and cheers). Would it not, then, be too unfair to charge the bad qualities of these vessels upon Lord Minto and the present Board (cheers)? He (Capt. Berkeley) had been latterly rather surprised at reading a speech of the late First Lord of the Admiralty, Sir James Graham (hear, hear, hear). He (Capt. Berkeley) was ready to yield to Sir James Graham all due praise for the efforts to correct abuses made by him whilst he was at the Admiralty Board, but at the same time he begged leave to tell Sir James Graham that Her Majesty's fleet was as efficient now as when he left the Board, although it pleased him to deal, not in open charges against his successor, but in insinuations; and he would further tell Sir James Graham that he made two blunders whilst he was at the Board, striking so directly at the efficiency of the Navy that it could not now be recovered; and he could tell Sir James Graham further (notwithstanding his boasting at Glasgow that he would not hesitate to go down and ask for any sum of money that was required for the service), that he destroyed the Coast Blockade service—a service which always contained 3,000 men and officers at all times available by the Admiralty Board—a service which would have enabled that Board to fit out seven sail of the line at a moment's notice (hear, hear). Sir James Graham in destroying that body—he wished to gain a name for decreasing the Naval expenditure, and so he destroyed the Coast Blockade. But, mark this! the same body was still kept up under the Treasury as the Coast Guard; and mark, too, the difference—the service was now no longer available by the Government for the purposes of the Navy (hear, hear). By this one blunder, Sir James Graham had entailed a loss upon the service of 500 men annually. Capt. Berkeley then went on further to allude to this subject, and contended that Lord Minto had greatly increased the efficiency of the service in having, since his accession to office, added but 5,000 men and eight sail of the line. The Board had at present more ships to fit out than they could find men to man them. The system of manning the Navy must be altered (cheers). During the time Sir James Graham was in office, a report had been made by most able officers, in which they pointed out the necessity for a change: and why had not Sir James Graham effected that change? Nay, more, Sir James Graham had reduced the number of men, and that was a grievance not easily to be remedied (hear). British ships of war should sail forth in their strength, like giants refreshed, the envy of the world, the pride of their men and officers. But it had been further charged against the Board, that a noble Marquess who, whilst sailing in his yacht, had carried away a spar, had not been able to obtain a Riga spar to refit. He (Capt Berkeley) admitted the fact. He was glad to say he could not get a Riga spar—the present Board having got rid of the necessity of going to the northern power by getting from New Zealand spars equally good, and of which they now had enough in their dock-yards to fit out 150 sail of the line (cheers). He laughed to scorn the idea that the British ships of war were rotten, and that they had not power enough to cope with any nation that might molest them (cheers). He laughed it to scorn, but at the same time he must say that it would be a great object to raise a nursery of seamen ready to man the ships, and then the British Navy would rise to the highest pitch of renown and glory. He felt that he ought to apologise for having detained them so long, but the subject was one nearest and dearest to his heart, and whilst he had the honour of a seat at the Admiralty Board, he would cut off his right arm before he would relax any effort to make the British Navy what it ought to be."

We are curious to know what sort of answer our old friends the ci-devant members of the School of Naval Architecture will make to the following letter, which appeared in the Times journal of Wednesday last. Finding the flourishes on penny trumpets of no avail, some unfortunate member of the body appears to have addressed a statement of their harsh treatment to the Editor of the Times, and it has provoked the pertinent reply which we annex. Thus, the merits of these gentlemen are fairly brought before the public, in a journal circulated far and wide, and we wish them joy of the event.

Some of the public may not be aware that the whole of these gentlemen are in the enjoyment of comfortable salaries; and it may appear to them, as it does to us, that it is the older and better artisans, who entered the service prior to them, who have been treated unjustly, and real claims prejudiced, in order to effect their advancement. Whilst they contrived to mix up political feeling as the cause of the injustice they represented themselves to be labouring under, they induced a few persons to advocate their cause; but this delusion is at an end, and, we opine, we shall hear but little more of the vast pretensions of the School of Naval Architecture. Although the conspiracy which we exposed is broken up, there still appears to be a restless spirit which will not allow them to avail themselves of the safe and comfortable maxim we have more than once in charity recommended for their adoption—to "eat their pudding and hold their tongues."

To the Editor of the Times.

Sir,—In your widely and extensively circulated paper of Friday, 21st Dec. last, there is an article headed "The Admiralty and the Members of the School of Naval Architecture," and as it is well known you have no other object in the diffusion of such papers than to elicit truth, I trust you will do me the favour to correct what, in my opinion, appears to be a palpable error. The gentlemen of this School complain of their not having a due share of promotion to the higher offices in the Dockyards. Now, I will venture to affirm, without fear of contradiction, that there is not an officer in that service, holding a situation superior to one of these gentlemen, who was not in the department previous to the establishment of their School, which took place in Jan. 1811.

And it was never the intention of the Government, nor was it stated by the King in Council, that these persons, who entered the service before that time, and who came into it with views and expectations to raise themselves to the higher offices, should be entirely set aside by the members of the new School.

The references and quotations they make from the Order in Council, which provides inferior situations for apprentices of the second class, only have relation to persons entering the service contemporaneously with themselves, and have no application to those whom the Admiralty have thought fit to prefer, and who were in the service before their School began.

Now, with regard to the construction of the ships of our Navy, they complain "that official countenance has been uniformly held from the School, that none of its members had, on any occasion, been suffered to be employed in the construction of ships of war."

Individual members have certainly not been so employed, nor was it ever intended they should be, until they became Surveyors of the Navy. But long after the School had been matured, and many of these gentlemen had finished their studies, they, with the collective wisdom of themselves and their professor, did construct several ships of war, but the Admiralty (not the present Board) and the whole service were so disappointed at their performance, the production of which they had arrived at from certain fixed principles, and from which there could be no deviation without proving the incorrectness of those principles, that it is no matter for wonder their not being called upon in their individual capacity, and in the junior stations they now hold, to construct ships.

It was in this particular branch of our service that some new light was expected from these gentlemen; but although 27 years have now elapsed since the foundation of this new order, not one single advantage in this way has been gained by it. And in order to prove that nothing new has been discovered by their mathematical research, or that the old constructors had misapplied the elements or knowledge they possessed, we need only state, that of all the members of this School who have left the Queen's service, and there have been several, not one of the members has followed ship building as a profession.

And the present period of enterprise, when our merchants are offering premiums for drawings of the most proper forms for steam-vessels, which will cost from 50,000*l.* to 60,000*l.* to complete them for sea, and where it is of the utmost importance to have the best possible models, do we find any of the members of this School competing with the old constructors? No; and yet one might have supposed they would have done so, if for no other purpose than to prove the superiority of their knowledge in this way, and to show the Admiralty, and public generally, how much they were losing by not accepting their services in this important branch of our department

These gentlemen, or their friends, have endeavoured to make this a political question, and great pains have been taken to mix it up in the public prints with articles of that character; but, depend upon it, they will have the same complaint to make, however the Board of Admiralty may be constituted

AN OFFICER OF THE DOCKYARD,
Dec. 26. who came into the service before 1811.

We often receive anxious inquiries respecting the Naval and Military Commission, to which it is quite impossible to reply. We believe, however, that its sittings will be soon resumed, and that, if practicable, the Report will be delivered before the close of the next Session of Parliament. The Duke of Wellington and the Members of this Commission have an irksome and invidious task to perform, but the Army and Navy repose implicit confidence in their honour and integrity of purpose. Many abuses, no doubt, will be pointed out for redress—among others, the invidious privileges of the Officers of the Foot Guards, who obtain rank in the Army superior to their regimental commissions, and having by this means arrived at high rank at an earlier period than their fellow-soldiers in the Line, come back again upon the Regiments, when General Officers, as Colonels, to enjoy the prizes of the Military Lottery. It would be more just that the Guards should be a separate Corps, as the Artillery, and Engineers, and Marines. Let the Officers rise in the Guards however high, and however rapidly, but let them continue Guardsmen, and not reap the harvest of the Line, in which they never toiled. That these and similar abuses will be candidly and carefully considered we cannot doubt; but that any measures, such as too many expect, which are to elevate them to the rank which their services and merits entitle them to, will be recommended by this Commission, we fear that the restriction of not incurring additional expense to the country must prevent. We would ill execute our duty if we were to hold out hopes which we believed to be delusive, and to expect that any material benefit to the services can accrue under the restriction of not recommending any increased expenditure is to build castles in Spain.

We do think that Parliament, on finding how little can be done for the Army and Navy without increased outlay, and receiving in the Report of the Commission full information of the hardships and depressions under which our soldiers and sailors are suffering, may come forward and offer to supply the means to Her Majesty of rewarding and promoting the defenders of this country by sea and land. More we dare not hope.

to remain, most respectfully,

ONE OF YOUR LORDSHIP'S ADMIRERS, AND THE SOLDIER'S FRIEND.

P S.—It may perhaps be thought advisable to send some of the regiments now at the Cape, and in Australia and Van Diemen's Land, on to India, and to replace them with these new levies. If a sufficient number of officers cannot be found for these regiments in the half-pay list, it would be a great bonus to those serving to be allowed to take a step in the new levies, by paying some reduced rate for their promotion.

We extract the following letter from the Hampshire Telegraph of last week, as the views of the writer (for the value of which our contemporary vouches) are in perfect accordance with the opinions we have frequently expressed on the subject of steam-vessels, as available for purposes of attack or defence. We imagine the "Stoker" has rated the number of steam-vessels capable of carrying heavy guns too high at 400; but half that number would be more than sufficient to destroy any fleet that could approach our shores, even if unsupported, as they doubtless would be by such ships as could be speedily available. The smaller steamers would, however, do good service by towing the line-of-battle ships into position, afford relief to the disabled vessels, and by removing prisoners before the enemy were sunk or blown up by the shot and shells which would be concentrated upon them from every point of the compass, whilst entangled in the shoals and narrows which render the approach to our principal harbours so difficult, particularly when the marks and buoys these:—Lieutenant Pottinger was travelling in the disguise of a horse-dealer (as Colonel Pottinger did in 1809), for the purpose of exploring the passes leading to the river Indus, and north-west frontier of India, when he accidentally approached the city of Herat just at the time of the siege, and instantly, on his own judgment and responsibility, offered his services to Prince Kamran; and, in every sortie, assault, and arrangement for the defence, has been first and foremost since!

The system of giving local rank to a number of young Officers, without having any claim to such distinction, in Persia and other countries, has been already extended much too far, and the Horse Guards will do well to look to this fact. All the old and distinguished Officers now proceeding with the Queen's and Company's Regiments, under Sir Henry Fane, will find themselves superseded by a set of young men, who, with the exception of Lieutenant Pottinger, have never seen an hour's service.

We heartily rejoice to find a Military Candidate for a seat in the East India Direction on the next vacancy, and we earnestly hope that every true friend of the Indian Army will come forward to support him. The qualifications of the Candidate, Colonel Sykes, who served twenty-seven years in India, are well described in the following Resolution, moved by Major-General Briggs, and seconded by Major-General Sir J. Sutherland:—

"That the early part of Colonel Sykes's military career, which was devoted to the attainment of an intimate acquaintance with the character and constitution of the Native Army—his proficiency in the native languages—and his constant intercourse for a period of years with the agricultural population of the Mahratta territories, whilst he held the important office of Statistical Reporter to the Bombay Government, enabled him to acquire that thorough knowledge of the resources of the country, and the social condition of the people of India, which peculiarly qualifies him for a seat in the East India Direction."

The departure of Sir James Carnac, and the state of the Indian Army, render it of the utmost importance to obtain seats in the Direction for Military Officers.

The Spectator of last week is quite determined that we shall have a war, because about 10,000 men have been added to the rank and file of the Army; for which credit was taken in the Estimates of last year. This small augmentation of the land force has been caused by the rebellion in Canada rather than by any apprehension of a sudden war.

"An Old East India Company's Officer" has our thanks. A packet from our valued friend, "Cormens," dated Barbadoes, 11th of Nov., only reached us on Tuesday, via Falmouth, with a very heavy postage. We cannot account for the delay, but it is better to send direct than to trust to private conveyance. The intelligence is of course unavailable.

Lieut.-Colonel Gurwood, if possible, next week. Also "Chevron." "One of the Old School" will forgive us suspending his letter for the present.

In our observations on Promotion from the Ranks, last week, we find an error escaped correction, which it may be of importance to rectify—we stated that "two-thirds" of the vacancies in the rank of Ensign were filled by Serjeants, &c. We should have said " one-third."

*The "Weekly Dispatch," as usual, has been treating its readers to the "Horrors of the Lash." Truly the writing on this subject is about as disgusting trash as we have read in our vocation. These horrible articles much remind us of certain paragraphs headed "Horrid Murder." The account is very minute, very horrid, and very disgusting—it only needs one essential ingredient for an article of news—*truth.

The plan for placing petty officers of the first class in a separate mess, similar to Serjeants in the Army, has been long since proposed; but although any Commander of a ship may, if he pleases, adopt it, we believe no one had yet thought proper to do so. We have frequently recorded our opinion that this and other indulgences, calculated to exalt this class of men, would be powerful inducements for seamen to enter in inferior ratings, just as young recruits do in the Army, when they are certain of attaining [illegible] public service, had their wretched pay muleted, as if they had less to do than if serving as Subaltern in a Company, or subject to less expense because deprived of the benefit of messing with their Regiments? We know that few acts of Her Majesty have been more just, or more thankfully received by the service, than this on which the Spectator is so facetiously sarcastic.

THERE is much weight in the arguments of our correspondent Arthur in favour of national regiments. Many distinguished officers have, from time to time, advocated them; nor have we ever seen any reasons advanced on the other side of the question. Sir Charles Napier, however, whose opinion is undoubtedly entitled to much respect, has, in his work on "Military Law," expressed a contrary opinion. His own idea is, that all regiments should bear the name of some county or district where they should be permanently quartered, and where the retired veteran would be certain of meeting with former friends or associates, but that the men shall, nevertheless, be mixed, as tending to make the regiment more effective. Yet as (rather singularly) he gives no reason for this opinion,—so widely different from that of Arthur,—we incline at present to side with the last, at least as to the general question. But regarding the details, few, we think, will be found to go the whole hog with him; for some of his propositions are too wild for the unromantic age in which we live; and whilst striving against the baneful and enervating tendency of its commercial spirit, we should be careful not too much to startle the sober sense (or even nonsense) of our citizens, or we may defeat our own purposes. For instance, when the tartan is seldom seen in the highlands of Scotland, it seems unreasonable to revive it amongst the Welsh, by whom it has been relinquished for so many centuries, that very few are aware that it was ever in use amongst them.

We may here make the passing remark, that we think Arthur rather exaggerates the physiognomical and other distinctions of the different races peopling these islands. His assertion, that "men's characteristics come far less from the country they cultivate than from the parents they represent" (understanding by parents, far-gone ancestry), is, at least, questionable. But when he contrasts "the red-whiskered Dane of Norfolk" with "the black-haired Normans of Salop and Chester," he not only exaggerates the general difference of complexion (if indeed there be any) of the people of those counties, but he forgets the ancient Danes and Normans were actually the same people—that a light-haired race at present peoples both Denmark and Norway, and that even the people of French Normandy at present are not much darker than the generality of the English.—In like manner, though the people of Kent are generally "blue-eyed" (though Mr. Alexander Walker, whose recent work we reviewed, asserts to the contrary), this cannot be said of them with more (perhaps with less) propriety than of most other English districts. And (although as having visited only a small part of the principality of which Arthur is a native, it may appear presumptuous in us to say so) we cannot help thinking that "the dark-eyed swarthy Welsh" form the minority in their country, although it is likely enough that people of that colour may be more common there than in most of the rustic districts of the kingdom. We would not mind betting that the majority of the natives of every parish in the British empire have grey or blue eyes of some hue; and that if an exception exists, it would be found in some of the London parishes east of St. Paul's *.

Since these observations first occurred to us, some of Arthur's propositions have excited the ire of An English Officer; and thinking that his extreme warmth arises from his having read the former's letter too hastily, we shall—hoping to escape the fate which proverbially awaits those who interpose in quarrels—endeavour to mediate between them.

At first sight, we confess we were ourselves startled by the passage which has particularly incensed An English Officer, and, [being "Saxons," should be most unwilling to hear their just merits detracted from. But that Arthur does not claim any superiority of valour for his countrymen over the other natives of Britain, is proved by his letter of the 29th ult, and also by that of the prior week, where, after characterising the various British races, and attributing to each "virtues of their own perhaps equal," he pronounces "the stout and sturdy Lancastrian" "sternest of all for hard fighting on level ground." He does not say that "A Welshman would maintain the combat (as the English Officer quotes it) when an Irishman would mutiny and a Saxon would throw down his arms;" but that his attachment to his native officers would keep him "devoted and true" under some circumstances, in which the others would act as above-stated. We therefore take these circumstances to mean famine, disease, or various temptations to desert; in a word, such circumstances as so long attended the British Legion in Spain, or do at present try the fidelity of Her Majesty's Army in Canada. We do not assert that Arthur is right in this belief; but we think it evident his meaning falls very short of a national affront. Neither does it appear to us that Arthur wishes to increase his native regiments "in preference" to others, nor "in a larger proportion," † although he has naturally enough commenced with them in explaining his views; and possibly he prefers leaving other officers to suggest similar plans as to the regiments of their respective nations. The English Officer also speaks of kilts, which, a little attention would have shown him, were never proposed by Arthur, but the trews or pantaloons. Yielding to no one in regard for the English character, and fully convinced that there is nothing to be ashamed of, per se, in the word "Saxon" (apply to whom it may), we think him wrong in stigmatising the Welsh as very ignorant, "permanently conquered," and descended from the "comparatively unwarlike Briton." If the Welsh are ignorant, they are contented, and crime is scarce amongst them, and their ignorance would be ill exchanged for the "intelligence" of a Manchester weaver. There is no wisdom in diminishing the fame of the aborigines of our island. If the ancient Britons were conquered, it was owing to fortune rather than to any superiority of valour in any of the races by whom they were overcome. This is amply proved by our most authentic histories,—nor have their descendants in Wales ever been wanting in Military qualities, in which there is, perhaps, little to choose between the four nations peopling our islands. It is, therefore, natural that a Welshman should dwell with peculiar satisfaction on the actions of his countrymen. Although the English, whether as leaders or followers, are, considering their whole history, at least second to none, yet Ireland has produced the most celebrated living heroes of our Army, as Scotland has (perhaps) of our Navy,—whilst several in both services are of mixed breed.

Since the above was in type, we have received a further communication from our esteemed correspondent Arthur, which shall appear in our columns next week.

WE beg to submit for Lord Hill's consideration the subjoined letter from a gallant Officer; at the same time, coinciding as we do with the general tenor of its contents, there are some parts where we must differ. In the first place, we cannot advocate the filching from individual Officers of a few paltry pounds, either on the plea of economy, or to increase the bounty to recruits; indeed, we do not think that an increase of bounty would operate to induce more men to enlist. We do, however, strongly advise its increase from 3*l.* to 4*l*, simply because 3*l.* is quite inadequate to supply the recruit with his regimental necessaries; and, as these must be supplied, the consequence is, that the recruit commences his new career under the most unfavourable auspices,—in debt! Reducing the standard from 5 ft. 6 in. to 5 ft. 5 in., and not requiring men to be twenty years of age for Regiments in India, would, we are persuaded, do more towards the success of recruiting than doubling, or even trebling, the bounty.

We are also led to presume that there are no Medical Officers, Paymasters, or Quartermasters, on half-pay whom it is intended again to call into active service, because there have been very lately numerous first appointments to these several commissions, without even a single one having been called from the Half-pay List. We do not say this in complaint; on the contrary, we are pleased to see that the Authorities appoint young men who are both able and anxious to serve, instead of disturbing old Officers who have been so many years on half-pay. For the same reason we are strongly against calling upon full-pay old Subalterns, excepting it be done with the view to their selling out. It is not to be expected that men, ranging from 45 to 60 years of age, can recommence military duty as Subalterns, either with pleasure to themselves or advantage to the service; indeed, we cannot help thinking it a breach of faith now to require these old Officers either to serve or receive a paltry commuted allowance for their commissions.

* Arthur would oblige some of us "Saxons" by giving us some concise information as to several of the Welsh heroes he enumerates, whose fame, however well-earned, has, as yet, been chiefly confined to their native mountains. We allude more particularly to Cromwell, John Owen, &c. We say this sincerely.

† At present there are only two regiments nominally Welsh—a small proportion.

We are well aware of the good that has been effected by commuting Officers' half-pay; several hundred Officers have been removed from the Half-pay List by it, and a very great annual saving realised; but it is now sufficiently evident that there are no more—no, not even one—who wishes to accept of it. Why not then immediately send a circular letter to all Subalterns on half-pay, informing them, that, without reference to age or length of service, they will be permitted to receive the full price for their commissions, and we doubt not that several hundred would gladly accept the offer. The Ensigns on full-pay who purchased these Unattached Lieutenancies should be required to pay the difference on being brought upon full-pay, and which should be as soon as possible; and the gentlemen who purchased the Unattached Ensigncies should, in like manner, pay the regulated difference on being appointed to Regiments, which should take place to all the first vacancies without purchase. Thus would a saving of many thousands annually be effected, without inflicting an injury upon a single Officer; besides, the difference between half and full-pay received from the Officers thus promoted and appointed to Unattached Commissions, would enable the Secretary-at-War to cancel upwards of a third of the commissions of the Officers selling out.

From the aspect of affairs, we should not be surprised if it were found necessary, eventually, to raise new Regiments; but we sincerely hope that every other means may be first resorted to, to augment in rank and file, and render efficient the regiments we already have. An augmentation of regiments in time of war renders a reduction of regiments necessary in time of peace; and this, by throwing so many Officers on half-pay, and pensioning off so many non-commissioned officers and soldiers, occasions a very great and lasting expense upon the country, besides afterwards depriving Officers on full-pay of their rightful promotion by the filling up of vacancies from the Half-pay List. The gradual reduction of the rank and file throughout the service may be so managed as to be unattended with the expense of a single shilling, and regimental promotion will not be interfered with by such a reduction.

The breaking up of the Four-company Depots, of all officers and no men, and further increasing the rank and file of all Regiments, will, we hope, prove adequate to our increased wants. We should hail with unfeigned pleasure the augmentation of one Captain to all Regiments in India; and, indeed, to all other Regiments on foreign service, provided the Four-company Depots join their Service Companies; but any increase of Subalterns we consider quite unnecessary,—indeed, Regiments in India have already too many Lieutenants.

To the Right Hon. General Lord Hill.

My Lord,—The rebellion in Canada, the discontent in Ireland as well as in many parts of England, and the threatening aspect of affairs in almost every colony we possess, must, I think, convince every man, whatever his politics, that the military force of this great country is now too small, and quite inadequate to the defence and maintenance of our numerous colonies at the present crisis; nay, it is acknowledged not only that we have no troops to send to the succour of our army in India, threatened as it is with war on all sides, but that we cannot even relieve several regiments which are worn out by more than twenty years' service in that enervating climate.

Assuming this to be an admitted fact, and concluding that something must immediately be done to increase our military force, I beg leave, without further preface, to suggest a plan for your consideration, by which eight or ten thousand men may soon be raised without putting the country to any expense, except for arms and clothing, and so as to effect a great saving by the reduction of the half-pay list, at the same time that it will render an incalculable service to such officers as are fit and willing to serve, whilst it will relieve those now on full pay from the cruel and discouraging grievance of having officers (under the plea of economy) appointed from the half-pay list to fill perhaps the greatest number of vacancies occasioned by deaths in regiments serving even in our most distant and most unhealthy colonies, thus depriving those who are serving in such situations of the only stimulus and advantage which has heretofore been almost invariably accorded them, and by this means I must be permitted to say, the Queen's Service in India is now become so disgusting, that no men, who can possibly avoid it, can be induced to risk their health, and to submit to a banishment of twenty years—and probably for life—in a country where they are deprived of almost all hope of honourable reward or promotion.

If an officer falls in action, the next in succession naturally expects, and if there be no fault in his character or conduct, I believe always does succeed to the vacancy, and would consider that a great slur was cast upon his character if he was superseded. But where is the man, much more the soldier, who would not much rather be shot at than exposed to the loss of health, and to the often lingering and unhonoured death occasioned by a noxious climate? I ask, then, can anything be so discouraging, or so injurious to the service, as this economical plan of filling up almost all the death vacancies which now occur in the Army? Is it to be expected that men will submit to banishment, and to all the evils of a pestilential climate, without hopes of obtaining either honours or reward?

Pardon this digression, and the warmth of my remarks upon these grievances. Good sometimes comes out of evil, and the present lowering aspect of our affairs, in my opinion, offers an opportunity of relieving the Army from a burthen which oppresses it so sorely.

Let us then raise eight or ten regiments or battalions of infantry, each consisting of at least eight companies of 100 men, expressly to go to India, as well to augment our force in that country as to relieve those regiments which have been cruelly kept there so long; and let the officers for this force be taken from the half-pay list in such manner as the Commander-in-Chief shall judge fair and expedient; and let them pay such a price for their restoration to full-pay as shall altogether create a fund sufficient to give a handsome bounty to the recruits necessary to form these regiments. The Army List tells me that the regulated difference in value between full and half-pay in regiments of the Line is as follows:—

For a Lieutenant Colonel	£1,314
— Major	949
— Captain	511
— Lieutenant	366
— Ensign	150

Now, I would propose that the officers appointed to these regiments shall be required to pay according to their respective rank, each about half the above difference for restoration to full-pay, and that the money so raised shall immediately be expended in giving bounties to the recruits required. Thus, supposing each regiment or battalion to consist of eight companies, the officers wanted for it will be one Lieutenant-Colonel, two Majors, eight Captains, sixteen Lieutenants, eight Ensigns, one Adjutant, one Paymaster, one Quartermaster, one Surgeon, one Assistant do; and supposing, instead of the difference in value of their commissions between full and half pay, as stated above, they are required to pay as under,—

		Total for the Battalion.
A Lieut. Col.	£700	£700
Two Majors	500 each	1,000
Eight Captains	300 each	2,400
Sixteen Lieuts.	150 each	2,400
Eight Ensigns	80 each	640
		£7,140

The Adjutant, Paymaster, Surgeons, and Quartermaster may them to labour at the wages they had fixed, and which the negroes had refused.

Mexico.—The French blockading force succeeded, after a cannonade of four hours, and the loss of six men, in reducing the Castle of St. Juan de Ulloa. Considering the length of the siege, the immense strength of the fort, the inconsiderable loss of the besiegers, and the proverbial character of Spanish Governors and Generals, [illegible] of the Commander-in-chief, that they cannot find the money required to be paid, and even in that case, though it would perhaps be dealing out too hard measure to deprive them of, possibly, their only support, I think they should be told that they must not expect to be restored to full-pay again upon any terms.

Now from this fund of 7,140*l.*, which may be raised by the sale of commissions as above enumerated, a bounty of 8*l.* a-man may be given to recruits, the half of which will supply his necessaries, and a surplus of 740*l.* will remain to each battalion, which may be applied in the formation of a bank, or in any other way the Commander-in-Chief may think proper. The [illegible] that place into a state of defence, and aims at getting possession of one or more conductas with specie, which were daily expected. The merchants to whom the property was consigned have endeavoured to save it, by allowed the bounty of 8*l.* each, the same as is to be given to recruits. In this manner, as it appears to me, 800 or 8000 men may very soon be raised, without putting the country to any expense except for their arms and clothing; and if eight regiments or battalions are thus raised and officered, the saving of half-pay will be more than 30,000*l.* a-year, and almost half the full-pay of all the officers, including the Staff, so restored.

If the plan, as above explained, is found worthy your Lordship's consideration, the utmost ambition of an old soldier, who has not sufficient vanity or confidence in his own opinion to give you his name, will be completely gratified; if it is not, I only hope, for the sake of my country, you may, without delay, discover a better, and one that is really more economical. The occasion is pressing, for no one will deny that the surest way to avert war is to show you are prepared for it. I have the honour to remain, most respectfully,

One of your Lordship's Admirers, and the Soldier's Friend.

P.S.—It may perhaps be thought advisable to send some of the regiments now at the Cape, and in Australia and Van Diemen's Land, on to India, and to replace them with these new levies. If a sufficient number of officers cannot be found for these regiments in the half-pay list, it would be a great bonus to those serving to be allowed to take a step in the new levies, by paying some reduced rate for their promotion.

We extract the following letter from the Hampshire Telegraph of last week, as the views of the writer (for the value of which our contemporary vouches) are in perfect accordance with the opinions we have frequently expressed on the subject of steam-vessels, as available for purposes of attack or defence. We imagine the "Stoker" has rated the number of steam-vessels capable of carrying heavy guns too high at 400; but half that number would be more than sufficient to destroy any fleet that could approach our shores, even if unsupported, as they doubtless would be by such ships as could be speedily available. The smaller steamers would, however, do good service by towing the line-of-battle ships into position, afford relief to the disabled vessels, and by removing prisoners before the enemy were sunk or blown up by the shot and shells which would be concentrated upon them from every point of the compass, whilst entangled in the shoals and narrows which render the approach to our principal harbours so difficult, particularly when the marks and buoys are removed. We presume the moorings recently laid down in the Medway are in readiness to receive such ships as might, by possibility, escape the fate we have alluded to, and become prizes to be towed into port.

The allusion to the "Flag Officer's" long residence in France will account for the un-English feeling which pervades his statement, and also for the sources of his authority. Thus it is, that those the least acquainted with the subjects they write on, are ever the first to intrude their preposterous notices upon the public.

"Rear-Admirals," "Captains of the Navy," "Admiral Fleming's Speeches," and the gallant Captain Napier's "Prophecies," are all before me, and it is trenching on your columns, that so humble an individual as myself presumes to offer an opinion on a subject that would appear nearly exhausted, from the number of writers that have addressed the public; but as I belong to a particular branch of the Naval service (not at all represented or spoken of by the great authorities I have just named), I hope "my stirring the fire" may on this occasion prove acceptable, and quiet many a poor frightened damsel who has read in the "powerful" letter of Napier, that the Russian fleet (he does not say how many soldiers are to be in it) are coming up the Thames to London, "towed (perhaps) by our own steamers." Now, Sir, pray, before this spreads far and wide, cast your sagacious eye on the return of the department I have the honour to assist in—"Steam."

In 1814 we had	2 steamers	— tonnage,	300
1824	— 126	—	15,739
1834	— 402	—	50,370

and I have no doubt 1839 has added 50 more to this fleet.

Not one word does either the R.-Admiral, whom the Times extols, Admiral Fleming, whom the Scotsman lauds, or Napier, on whom the Sun shines, say respecting this the greatest arm of England's defensive and aggressive power; they know nothing of the "power of our fire," the number of our fleet, or our capability of armament. The Rear-Admiral, I hear, has passed many of his years in France, and is better versed in the Book of Books, which will do him infinitely more good than writing frivolities, culled from every speech in Parliament or newspaper report that has appeared for the last five years.

Russia can only move in summer,—her seas are narrow, calms and fogs prevail, her fleet must anchor in the Belt or Sound by night, and even in the Baltic and Black Sea this must often be the case. Of our 600 sail of steamers, 400 will carry heavy guns, and Government has only to take up half this number—and they know which vessels are fitting for their purpose—on the day that Russia shows the least symptoms of sending her Armada to Leith or London; and I state, without fear of contradiction, that in one week these 200 steamers are at sea, armed with 68 and 32-pounders, attended by the Powerful, Captain Napier, laden with coals, and the result would be, that every ship of the enemy was sunk, burnt, or towed into England by our own steamers.

"The gentlemen of England, who live at home at ease," may rest satisfied, that an Income Tax to increase the Navy is not necessary; perhaps an alteration in the disposition of our present number of seamen might be adopted, and England never left without ten sail of the line, rigged, manned, and ready (I will not get into disrepute with my Naval brethren by saying ready to carry coals for our department) but to join us in destroying any fleet of any nation.

What we do want in the Navy, and what I feel confident we shall get through the Commission now sitting, is a retiring for the old officer and advancement for the young. The [illegible] we have in general—and I speak from experience—having been steaming on board most of the ships fitting and paying off last six years, are most excellent, are well fed, and punctual; are few and far between; their gunnery is better under-ever it was; but I repeat again, one thing is peculiarly wanting,—a spur to the emulation of the younger branches of the service. If you cannot promote, pay those you employ better than you do, and as soon as possible promote the Mates who are passed three years and upwards before their hair gets mouldy, or their spirits broken. It should be borne in mind, however, that the present situation of these officers results from the want of foresight in the former Boards of Admiralty, who permitted too many volunteers to enter into the service, without expectation of providing for them. The case is now different, as there are not 500 volunteers and Midshipmen in the whole Navy; therefore, every lad entering it is sure of a reasonable promotion. The list of Lieutenants is thinning fast, and it is with difficulty the Admiralty can keep up the peace establishment, so few men feeling devoted to the comforts of a sea life and a hot climate to serve for 6d. a day, when some are entitled to 6s. and others 8s., half pay, with all the comforts of a home. I may, perhaps, have tired your patience, but I cannot conclude without hinting to the Admiralty, that a warming in the engine room would be a very proper stimulus to the younger branches of the Navy. Do not imagine that, as mast-heading is done away with, I mean this as a punishment; but as all officers ought to know the duty they order others to execute, I would apply the golden rule, and before I passed them for Lieutenants, give them a few months' spell in the men of war, or even large mercantile steamers, to gain some knowledge of that power they may have to direct.

ONE OF THE SPEAKERS OF H.M.'s SERVICE.

WE have seen Captain Napier's placard, with the assurance that "the Powerful is a fine ship, and in the event of war will be able to take her own part," of which no one can doubt as long as she is commanded by the gallant officer. We perceive also that he requires "good Petty Officers and seamen," and we have heard that he is very particular in the selection of his crew. Now, as under these circumstances some time will probably elapse to fit him to his mind, let not this case be again produced as one of slow equipment: for no one knows better than Capt. Napier, that, was the Powerful required to be at the Nore by this day week, his crew would be filled up by drafts from the guard ships, as was the case last war, and it could be easily accomplished. There is no such necessity, however; and, no doubt, the gallant Captain, who is a favourite with Jack, will obtain such a crew as he desires.

A DELUSION is periodically practised upon the public, by the display of the official reports of foreign States, respecting their shipping, tonnage, and seamen, which requires exposure.

A pompous statement is just now going the round of the press, having appeared originally in the Times Journal 21st ult., from Galignani's Messenger, and repeated on Thursday last, by which it appears that the coasting trade of France employs 64,090 ships, carrying 2,209,269 tons, and manned by 254,152 men. These are high sounding numbers; but when we inform our readers that the repeated voyages of every description of vessel and boat that crawls along shore is brought into this estimate, and that some of these vessels make two or three hundred trips in the year (just as our passage-boats or steam-vessels do), all which trips are multiplied in the amount, our wonder is that the aggregate produces no greater result.

The fact is, that the only mode of estimating a nation's maritime resources, is by the number of ships it possesses, their amount in tons, with the seamen required to navigate them, and not by such returns as the above, which, like our own official tables of entries inwards and exports, are only useful to show whether the coasting carriage has increased or decreased within a given time.

But this is not all. In estimating the amount of our tonnage, none but registered vessels are brought into the account, whereas in France, and the United States also, they reckon their licensed or enrolled tonnage, which, added to the registered tonnage, more than doubles the sum total; and such would be the case with ourselves, were we to adopt the same mode of proceeding. We cannot just now refer to the latest reports of American tonnage, but in 1834, out of the lumping amount of 1,758,807 tons, only 857,488 tons is described as registered tonnage! the larger half being made up of enrolled and licensed tonnage, that is, of every sort of craft in bays, rivers, &c.—just as if we were to reckon the barges and keel-boats in our rivers, and the thousands of licensed vessels and boats employed in fishing and trading round our coasts.

We are rather astonished that the writers engaged in the task of disparaging our Naval power have not availed themselves of these foreign returns, from which they might have drawn deductions more plausible and more alarming to those who do not understand the matter, than texts from newspapers, resting upon no better authority than their own statements, which in turn became also quotations to comment on, thus perpetuating the falsehood. We wonder that the gentlemen who are so industriously engaged have hitherto overlooked these things, and we now notice them, in order that when they do (as doubtless they will) adopt these reports, and use them to suit their purpose, they cannot avail themselves of the plea of ignorance as to how they are produced.

BECAUSE the Ganges has been two or three months preparing for sea, the Naval alarmists insist that it would be impossible to equip a fleet in double that period. They forget that, when circumstances arise to call for exertion, and render dispatch necessary, extraordinary means can and will be applied; and hence they argue in a circle, when they instance this and other cases in proof of their assertions. Experience shows that, whenever war was probable, and it became expedient to prepare for it, extraordinary exertions have been always made; and surely our means are greater now than they ever have been, when our seamen, employed in the Royal Navy and trading ships, are nearly 200,000 in number, besides an equal, if not a greater amount, well calculated for ordinary seamen, consisting of fishermen, boatmen, &c. &c. The French have put forth a bombastic statement, showing, that by means of their maritime conscription, they can man a large fleet, and have a residue of some thousands of men. But, in this estimate they include every seaman, fisherman, and boatman, they possess; in fact, every person in any way connected with the sea, and enrolled in their maritime departments, leaving none for their mercantile marine. Were we to measure our means by the same standard, we might calculate on half a million of men, and therefore assert that we could man a thousand sail of the line! The Americans, with more modesty, admit the difficulty of manning a large fleet; and this difficulty will be greatly enhanced, owing to their practice of engaging British seamen for the greatest portion of their crews, which seamen, it is but natural to suppose, will return home in preference to fighting against their own country, in case of war, provided the same inducements are held out to them, with the further chance of prize money. Every measure adopted by us for the encouragement of our seamen is, therefore, not only beneficial in itself on our own account, but prejudicial to our transatlantic rivals, who calculate on the service of our men, knowing the difficulty of inducing any great number of their native seamen to engage in the ships of the Union.

WE are glad to find, that the Brazilian Government have at length consented to an arrangement, by which vessels under their flag, suspected of being engaged in the slave trade, may be searched. Until this reasonable stipulation is acceded to by all nations, and a mutual right of searching suspected vessels conceded, it is in vain to hope that this abominable traffic will be suppressed; for, as long as the parties engaged in it can avail themselves of the protecting flag of any State, they will be certain to assume it.

On Saturday despatches were sent off from the Colonial-office for Sir Howard Douglas, Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands, and also for the Lieutenant-Governor of Malta; and on Monday despatches from Sir George Arthur, Lieutenant-Governor of Upper Canada, and also from the Governors of the West India Colonies, were received.

Royal Humane Society.—On Tuesday the half-yearly general meeting of the governors and supporters of this institution was held at the society's house. The proceedings of the special meeting held since the last general court were read. The award of gold medals to Grace and William Darling was warmly confirmed. The grant of silver medals to Mr. J. P. Palmers and Mr. Smith, who saved nine lives at Antigua, was also adopted. The Grant of a silver medal to George Philpott, a Deal boatman, was also confirmed. The medal was sent to the Duke of Wellington, who forwarded the following reply:—

"Walmer Castle, Sept. 8th, 1838.

"SIR,—I have had the honour of receiving your letter of the 1st instant, and the medal granted by the Royal Humane Society to George Philpott, boatman, at Deal, in testimony of the approbation of the society of his conduct upon various occasions, but particularly for his intrepidity in saving the crew of the Crown, wrecked on Goodwin Sands, on 26th Dec., 1836, and the record of the proceedings upon the occasion of making the grant. I have this day delivered to the two last mentioned to George Philpott, and I availed myself of this opportunity of impressing upon his mind a sense of the advantage to him and others, who should adventure their lives for the object of saving the lives of others, of the existence of a society whose object it is to notice, reward, and encourage such exertions and intrepidity. I have, &c., —To Mr. J. B. Dickson, Mate of the Vanguard, thanks, on vellum, were voted for his intrepid conduct in jumping overboard from the flag-ship at Malta, and saving the life of Thompson, who had thrown himself into the sea in a state of intoxication. To Mr. H. Cowland, aged 16, a silver medal was awarded for saving the child of a Mr. Kennedy, who had fallen into the St. Lawrence, just above the last Fall—the child must have speedily been carried over the Falls and drowned, but for the promptitude shown by this youth. To the Rev. Mr. M'Crea, who saved a boy, and had, on former occasions, successfully exerted himself in the same manner, a silver medal was awarded. The rev. gentleman hurt his spine on the occasion. The next case called forth the lively approbation of the meeting. Three men were engaged in some operation in a well, when, being overcome with carbonic acid gas, they fell. A third man descended, but he also soon became insensible. Mr. Walker, having heard of the occurrence, descended promptly with a rope, and fastened it round the body of a man named Stevens, who was drawn up, and he recovered. Mr. Walker descended a second time, and fixed the rope round the legs of another man, named Roberts, and he was drawn up and life restored. Mr. Walker himself then became insensible, and the remaining two unfortunate men perished. The silver medal was awarded to Mr. Walker. The case of Mr. Arthur Cummins, son of Lieut.-Gen. Cummins, who saved a seaman from drowning, the latter having jumped overboard while deranged, arising from intoxication, was postponed to allow the proofs to be completed. This young Mate was complimented for his courage by Sir P. Durham on board the Hastings, in the presence of all the officers of the ship. Silver medals were awarded to Captain Ross and to Mr. J. C. Jones, for their exertions in saving three men from the wreck of the Gainsborough. The thanks of the society were returned to the Coast-Guard men who had assisted Capt. Ross and Mr. Jones in accomplishing the object. To Joseph Mantle the silver medal was awarded for saving two boys at Weymouth. These were the principal cases.

Dublin was on Sunday night visited by a hurricane, such as the oldest inhabitants cannot remember—unbounded in its fury, and unlimited in its extent. There is scarcely a street, nay, scarcely a house, which does not bear the impress of this dreadful storm. The country around has equally suffered. Perhaps no part has suffered more from the hurricane than the Royal Hospital. Commencing with the bend at the Military-road, almost every tree is levelled to the ground; and here the sentinel had a narrow escape, though warned off, and therefore prepared for, the approaching danger, by a gentleman passing. He had scarcely time to quit his sentry-box before it was blown from its stand, and scattered into atoms. The beautiful avenue which led to the "Old House" no longer exists. The magnificent back avenue of elms, which terminated at Kilmainham, is almost totally destroyed. Sad, indeed, is the scene of devastation which this ancient institution presents. The whirlwind of desolation has spared neither building, tree, nor shrub, and few of the present generation will live to see the damages of this fatal night repaired. The Bethesda Chapel, and the Rev. Mr. Gregg's house adjoining, are burned to the ground. A fire occurred in the chapel on Saturday, and the board-room was burned. On Sunday, at noon service, thanksgiving was made to the ALMIGHTY for sparing the building, but early next morning all was in flames, and totally consumed. Two of the Royal Artillery were conveyed to Richmond Hospital, in a state of insensibility, from injuries received; hopes are entertained of their recovery. The persevering skill and reckless daring of this distinguished corps was the theme of universal praise; and to their exertions the preservation of houses and property, to a very considerable extent, is mainly attributable.

Poor Lord Norbury expired, after enduring much with the greatest patience and resignation. It is quite clear that the murder was committed under the orders of Ribbonism, and formed part of the system of that diabolical body. A proclamation has been issued, offering an reward of 500*l.* for the apprehension of the murderer.

L.E.L.—We fear that the poor lady was very wretched, and that she destroyed herself.—Times. This appears to be the general opinion.

On Saturday a Greenwich pensioner underwent an examination before the magistrates at Greenwich, on a charge of having stolen a quantity of goods from the Royal Hospital. The magistrates remanded him for further examination until Tuesday; but on Sunday it was discovered that he had put an end to his existence by hanging himself.

The Russian Agents.—These gentlemen having purchased at Newcastle three ships, completely fitted for the transport service, came to Sunderland during the week, and succeeded in buying two vessels here for the same purpose. They are going to Manchester in order to purchase muskets, bayonets, &c.—Sunderland Beacon.

Poor Knights of Windsor.—Yesterday in the Court of Chancery the Solicitor-General appeared in support of a petition on the behalf of Lt. Holman, the celebrated blind traveller, and one of the poor Naval Knights of Windsor, praying that residence in the college might be dispensed with in his case, as he was anxious to travel again. It appeared to the Lord Chancellor that the visitors of the charity ought to be served with the petition; and the matter was postponed for that purpose. [We have heard much of this case, and consider that Lieut. H. has been very harshly treated; but we shall have more to say anon.—ED. N. & M. C.]

The Queen and the Duchess of Kent arrived from Brighton at the new palace on Tuesday. The royal standard was hoisted from the top of the marble arch immediately on the Queen's arrival.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—The Duchess of Wirtemburg died at Pisa on January 2d. The deep grief into which this cruel loss has plunged the King, the Queen, and the Royal Family, will be participated in by the whole of France. The intelligence reached the royal family at the very moment they were rejoicing at the capture of Vera Cruz—the two despatches arriving almost together.

RUSSIA.—The Ambassador of Constantinople, M. Boutenieff, has produced a public expression of the gratitude of his Imperial master, in a rescript, dated 5th (17th) ult. The Czar dwells upon the important part borne by his Minister, giving full effect to his "disinterested" efforts for the maintenance of amicable relations between Russia and the Porte, and of peace in the East, and appoints him a Knight of the White Eagle.

CANADA.—Since our last, accounts have been received that another band of armed patriots had crossed from Detroit to the neighbourhood of Windsor, nearly opposite, where they burned a British steam-boat and some buildings; but being attacked the next morning by a small detachment of militia, not above a fourth of their own number, they were utterly routed and cut to pieces. The banditti mustered from 250 to 300 men, of whom the most detailed narrative states that not above 35 or 40 escaped by flight, all the rest being "shot down," a fate which they had richly merited. The force which destroyed them amounted to no more than 70 of the Upper Canadian Militia, who fought, as they have ever done since this series of atrocities began, with the truest fidelity and courage.

UNITED STATES.—Report of the War Department:—

According to the provisions of Congress for the increase of the army, an additional regiment of infantry has been raised and equipped for service, as well as four additional companies of artillery. The staff of the army, it is stated, had been completed according to the act, by which it was decreed that each "regiment of artillery should consist of one Colonel, one Lieut.-Col., one Major, one Serj Maj., one Quartermaster-Serj., and nine companies," one of which to be equipped as light artillery. This one company, it appears, the War Secretary had caused to be mounted, and he strongly recommends the increase of this horse artillery, as being extremely efficient in the service, and also the establishment of a rocket brigade, the projectiles used by which had been brought to such perfection in Europe, and were so formidable an arm of war. The construction and maintenance of various fortresses, principally on the Indian frontiers, and to keep the Indians in check, is strongly urged to be connected by good roads "perpendicular to the line of defence," and communicating with an interior line of posts, which might serve, in case of need, as places of refuge, or the centres from which operations might be conducted. The "line of defence" thus alluded to is doubtless that upon which General Bernard, now Minister of War at Paris, was so long employed with other of the most celebrated French engineers, who, like him, quitted France on the fall of the empire. The expediency of an improved organization of the militia or volunteers is enlarged upon, in order more efficiently to assist in the defence of the maritime and inland frontiers, for which the small force of the regular standing army was manifestly insufficient. It is admitted that no feasible plan had been hit upon, and that it would be difficult on the frontiers, where the force would be most wanted, to assemble a single company within the distance of 100 miles for any purpose of regular training. It was proposed, however, by way of beginning, to enroll 20,000 from the frontier people and those around the permanent stations in the interior. After thirty days' previous instruction of the officers and non commissioned officers at the nearest military station, it is conceived that six days' consecutive drill of the men in the year would be sufficient.

A review of the war against the Indians in Florida is given at some length, with a description of the nature of the country and the operations. "The Indians," it is emphatically asserted, "must be expelled" thence, and with a view to guard against their inroads from without when once driven out, a sort of military colonization of the frontier districts is recommended, for which end it is proposed that grants of land should be given to such persons as would bind themselves to "settle, cultivate, and defend" the country in such modes as should be prescribed. The Government, moreover, was to superintend the fortification of their houses, and organize them into battalions for mutual defence. The necessity of instruction in the cavalry exercise, now that the cavalry had become an important arm of the service, is impressed, and an addition to the number of scientific professors at the Military Academy is recommended. Provision for a supply of horses to mount the cavalry and keep it in proper efficiency is also stated to be necessary. In order to improve the engineer department, the appointment of an inspector of fortifications is suggested, so that a more frequent inspection of the existing fortresses and those in construction might be undertaken, as on their "solidity and durability" so much of the safety of the country depended. An increase in the ordnance corps is noticed. It is remarked that at present not one of the four regiments of this service had a complete train of artillery. A series of experiments was in course of being made, to determine the "precise character" of field and heavy artillery, after the verification of which the corps would be armed with the most available kind.

The number of persons on the military pension rolls is stated to be 41,870; there had been 1,431 deaths within the year ending with September last, and the increase of pensioners during the same term was 2,354. The addition to the list of widows' pensions would augment the expenditure under this head by 1,372,000 dollars. Generally it may be remarked of this elaborate document, that such information as is communicated tends to show a considerable activity of preparation in the war as well as in the naval department.

WEST INDIES.—(From our own Correspondent.)—There are most cheering accounts from Trinidad, Grenada, St. Vincent, and Antigua. The crop for the next year is promising well, and the labourers attentive and industrious at Barbadoes. Prosperity is smiling over every part of the island. Estates are at a very high premium. Sugar plantations yielding eight hogsheads per annum, are renting out at 1,500*l.* yearly, and one property, which averages seventy-five hogsheads, was sold last week for 24,000*l.* currency. We suspect the market is too high. One swallow does not constitute a summer; and when Jamaica and Demerara come into operation, sugar will pour into the market in much greater quantities than the knowing ones suppose. Jamaica is getting tranquil; the bile of the planters is passing off; the noisy vapourers in the house are escaping like smoke; and we would not be surprised if Sir Lionel Smith sent home two regiments of the garrison in as many years. The wrath of the Jamaicans is tarnation hot; their tinder soon ignited, but it evaporates, and they become cool and sensible men. We are only astonished that West Indian affairs work so tranquilly as they do, after the mighty alteration from abject slavery to unqualified freedom.

JAMAICA.—The elections which were rendered necessary by the dissolution of the Assembly have terminated, but in a way by no means likely to advance the public business, the members of the present being yet more opposed to the measures of the Imperial Parliament than the former. Many of the planters have proceeded to the summary ejectment of the black labourers from their cottages and little plots of ground, in order to compel them to labour at the wages they had fixed, and which the negroes had refused.

MEXICO.—The French blockading force succeeded, after a cannonade of four hours, and the loss of six men, in reducing the Castle of St. Juan de Ulloa. Considering the length of the siege, the immense strength of the fort, the inconsiderable loss of the besiegers, and the proverbial character of Spanish Governors and Generals, one is disposed to suspect that the Castle was carried by a broadside of doubloons rather than of cannon balls.—The capitulation was signed by the Mexican General on board of a French man-of-war. The possession of the fort gives the French the command of the town.

It appears that Mexico is not only threatened with French invasion, but by civil war. A Colonel Montenegro has raised the standard of rebellion at Tampico, and declared for a federal government. He is putting that place into a state of defence, and aims at getting possession of one or more conductas with specie, which were daily expected. The merchants to whom the property was consigned have endeavoured to save it, by sending orders for the conducta not to proceed on its journey.

Literary Notices.

Rob of the Bowl; a Romance of the Days of Charles II. By J. P. Kennedy. 3 vols. R. Bentley.

WHAT an eternal theme for history, memoirs, and historical fiction, is presented by the contests, intrigues, and adventures of the cavaliers and roundheads! Gallant fellows were they both, though formed of materials as essentially different as any that could by possibility be imagined. Mirth, wit, the gaiety of the hall-room, and uproarious bacchanalian merriment, were opposed to the stern bigotry of the conventicle, and the contest was long and doubtful, for the courage and the prowess were equal on both sides. This has already been amazingly shown in divers late romances founded on our national annals, the scene uniformly being England, but here we have these same parties figuring in Maryland soon after the restoration to his throne of Charles the Second. The moody, sarcastic, irascible, and misanthropic cripple, Rob of the Bowl, is a powerfully drawn character, from whose strange doings much of the mystery of the story springs. The manner of the author is full of power and breadth of effect, manifested not only in his scenes of tragic passion, but in the rare comedy which ever and anon beams in his pages. "Rob of the Bowl" is worthy of ranking with Sir Walter Scott's "Woodstock."

Wild Scenes in the Forest and Prairie. By C. F. Hoffman, Esq., Author of "A Winter in the Far West." 2 vols. R. Bentley.

IF there be any men whose lives present more striking scenes of adventure, hardship, stubborn endurance, and imminent peril, than those of the Red Indians of North America, they will be found among the backwoodsmen and other settlers in the Far West, whose encroachments are gradually annihilating the aboriginal tribes. The white hunters, trappers, and squatters, in their daring expeditions are perpetually surrounded by danger in every form. Exposed to hostile surprises, desperate encounters, and withering privations, their career furnishes the rarest elements for romantic narrative such as in the present work Mr. Hoffman has provided for the wonder and gratification of his readers. The scenery, too, which forms the back-ground of the story, enhances, by reason of its vastness, and its wild and strange character, the attraction inherent in the mysterious incidents arising in almost every page of this singular work. Rocky glens, treacherous morasses, enormous lakes, thundering waterfalls, mighty rivers, huge and tangled forests, and prairies as solitary and seemingly interminable as the great African deserts, are fitting localities on the one hand for the prowling savages who steal, like midnight ghosts, on the frail cottages of the white settler; and on the other, for the daring expeditions of the half-civilised hunter or forester. It has seldom, indeed, been our lot to peruse a work of more varied and absorbing interest than that now before us.

Bubbles of Canada. By the Author of the "Clockmaker."

THIS is a searching inquiry into the nature and origin of the late Revolt in Canada. With his usual keenness of scrutiny, the author has sifted the affair to its foundation, and proves satisfactorily that all the annoyance to which the Government at home has been exposed by our Canadian Colonies, is traceable to the bitter jealousy entertained by the French towards the English settlers, and to the unwise concessions made to the former by successive English ministers who permitted the French colonists to perpetuate their language, as the language of the Courts, to retain many of their laws, particularly those relative to inheritance of property, and, in short, to possess every advantage over their English brethren. The policy of Lord Durham, and the speeches on Canadian affairs, by Lord Brougham, are commented on by "the Clockmaker" with his usual spirit.

SERIAL PARTS.

Outlines of Celebrated Works from the Best Masters of Ancient and Modern Sculpture. C. Mutton. Nos. 7 & 8.—Our opinion of this very clever work, both for the amateur and student, has been already expressed. The Nos. now before us contain graphic outlines of the Farnese Flora, Bacchus and Ariadne, and Psyche. We have also brief, but sufficiently explicit, descriptions of the statues, written devoid of terms of art. As a specimen we extract the account of Canova's "Venus and Adonis."—

"The group represents Venus leaning on the shoulder of Adonis, with all the allurement and attraction of her charms, to detain him from pursuing the chase. The figure of the Mother of Love is fraught with the bewitchery of empassioned endearment, fondly supplicating, and gently touching the cheek of her lover, a position in itself sufficient to reveal the attributes of the Goddess of Beauty; a light scarf her only covering, forgotten at such a moment, is falling from her waist. Adonis seems anxiously hastening away, his right hand grasps a hunting spear, the other is passed round her, and taking a parting glance, but how void of ardour is the pressure of that embrace! How unconcerned the look! That of Venus displays an affection, tender and devoted, while that of Adonis expresses a negligent coolness, and, under such circumstances, exhibiting an ungrateful sentiment of the recollection of past pleasures."

Such a work must be in the hands of all lovers of the Fine Arts.

A History of British Birds. By W. Yarrell. Part 10 Van Voorst.—Each successive part tends to increase our estimation of this very interesting work. The present No. contains the history of the various Buntings, Finchs, and Sparrows. Some of the wood-cuts are equal to any that we have ever seen.

A Dictionary of Arts, Manufactures, and Mines. By Andrew Ure, M.D. Part 5. Longman and Co.—This scientific and practical dictionary is one of the best publications that come before us. The style is remarkably clear and agreeable, and the diagrams and cuts are beautifully executed. The fifth part treats of flax, gems, gold, gas, glass-making, &c.

Arabian Nights' Entertainments. Parts 1 and 2. Joseph Thomas.—This, the commencement of a Standard Family Edition with illustrations, is very neatly got up, and there can be no doubt of the success of a cheap and at the same time good edition of one of the most attractive works of fiction.

A General Outline of the Animal Kingdom. By T. R. Jones. Part 3.—Another of Mr. Van Voorst's very useful and scientific publications. The popular manner in which Mr. Jones, Professor of Comparative Anatomy in King's College, explains the principles of zoological science, gives additional value to the curious and interesting details introduced in his work. It is not every learned professor who can agreeably impart knowledge to others.

The London Monthly Miscellany. Smith and Elder. We did not entertain any very favourable opinion of the early numbers of this work, but, in the 5th and 6th, now before us, there is a decided improvement, and fair promise for the future. We shall take an early opportunity of submitting a portion of its contents

Teachem's Scientific Games. "The Game of the Astronomers; being a short Description of the Heavens" And "the Game of The Golden Eagle; or the Natural History of the British Feathered Race." Spooner.

We have before said that Mr. Spooner is a most judicious caterer for our young friends. his Games combine instruction with amusement. Those we now announce are designed to encourage a taste for astronomy and natural history; they are exceedingly interesting, and we warmly recommend them.

"The Funnyshire Fox" is another ingenious game, also invented by Mr. Spooner, and which cannot fail to greatly amusing both young and old. It is full of ludicrous incidents, most admirably contrived, and got up in a very superior style. Nothing can be more suitable for the holidays.

"GENTLEMAN JACK"

A Song of the Times.

The Queen wants lots of sailor men,
But Jack won't budge, d'ye see,
Though tempted with "good" grub" and "grog,"
And "lashings" of Bohea.
"Good Captain," and "good Officers,"
"Good treatment and good ship,"
"Good pay."—in vain, for Jack wont save
E'en though you "saved" out "dip"

For Jack's become a gentleman!
And Jack, although a gentleman,
A Queen's man will not be;
Nor, what is more, fight as before,
For England on the sea.

How different are the times just now
From those that we have seen;
Men died for King and Country then,
None now will serve the Queen.
Jack then complained of many wrongs,
But, though he grumbled, fought
He loved his glass, his lass, his ship,
Just as a sailor ought

But Jack is now a gentleman!
And being made a gentleman,
A sailor scorns to be,
And sings no more his precious store
Of galley songs at sea.

"O no, we never mention her,"
"Oh, teach me to forget,"
Or, "I would be a Butterfly,"
Or those soft words, "We met."
Such girlish songs as these usurp
The stirring songs of yore,
When Britain's thunder-peal was heard
On every hostile shore

But Jack would be a gentleman—
A dandy-jack and gentleman!
His yarns are o'er, he sings no more
His quaint old staves at sea

The quarter deck "young gentlemen,"
Dare Devils in the war,
Now Adonised as Bond street swells,
Abhor the smell of tar,
Their claret drink, their hunters keep,
Like no smoke like cigars,
Vote the best watch the watch below,
And strike their light guitars"

For they are nice young gentlemen,
Spruce, foppish, soft, young gentlemen,
Averse to hail, rain, snow—
Who'd think it hard to mount a yard
When it came on to blow.

East India Intelligence.

On Monday a meeting of proprietors of East India stock was held at the London Tavern, to take into consideration the best means of promoting the election of Colonel Sykes to a seat in the direction. The meeting was fully attended, and among others present were Maj.-Gen Briggs, Maj.-Gen. Sir J. Sutherland, Maj. George Willcock, Sir John Hansler, Mr. Hume, Sir P. Laurie, &c Sir C. Forbes, Bart., was called to the chair, and various resolutions were adopted to carry into effect the objects of the meeting

A letter from Khyook Phyoo, dated 4th Sept. 1838, gives the following statement of the sufferings of the 67th regiment during their short sojourn in Arracan. They have lost by death no less than a Major, a Captain, an Assist. Surgeon, three Subalterns, a Quarter-Master Sergeant, and 96 sepoys, exclusive of a number of combatants attached to the regiment (and in one instance a whole European family), who have fallen victims to the climate. Six other officers of this ill-fated corps have been compelled by disease to leave the Province, of whom five were obliged to proceed to Europe in search of health.—Military Gazette, Sept 29th.

Col. Low, the Resident at Lucknow, is about to proceed to the Cape of Good Hope, on furlough. We conclude Capt. Paton will officiate in his absence.—Ibid.

We learn from Simlah that Lieut. A. Cunningham of the Engineers, A D C. to the Governor-General, will vacate his present office and proceed to Ferozepore, there to relieve his brother Lt. J. Cunningham (who has been for the last year employed in that neighbourhood as an Assistant to Capt Wade, at the same time that he has been superintending the construction of a fortification at Ferozepore), directed to accompany the son of Shah Soojah to Peshawur.—Ibid.

Capt. St. G. D. Showers, 27th N.I., has been appointed Aid-de-Camp to Lord Auckland, vice Capt. A. Cunningham, of the Engineers

We learn from Madras that application has been made to the Ceylon Government to know whether the island can spare any, and what part of its European garrison, should their services be required in Continental India. As there are only two British regiments in that Colony, we doubt whether it would be prudent to authorise more than one, even supposing its duties could be satisfactorily carried on by the sailors and men of a native regiment, or two from Madras. Nor can the Mauritius, with its moderate garrison of two or three corps, or the Cape of Good Hope, with one, furnish us with a reinforcement of European troops But from Madras, where, exclusive of the 62d and 63d regiments, already serving on a suspicious frontier at Moulmein, there is still a corps of Dragoons, and Six of Infantry, we conceive that the former, and two of the latter, might be withdrawn without imminently disturbing the internal strength of the Army of that Presidency, or depriving it of the means of furnishing any hostile armament against the dominions of the King of Ava which circumstances might compel us to despatch.—Ibid.

A letter from Loodiana, dated 17th Sept., contains the following item of intelligence:—Capt. Barnes, and Mr. Scott of the Commissariat, have left this for Shikarpore Capt. Woodward of the Commissariat left for Ferozepore on the 15th, and Capt. Thompson of the Commissariat is to go to Moultan, to look after supplies. The Infantry part of Shah Soojah's contingent progresses rapidly, arms have been issued to them: the Cavalry find great difficulty in procuring horses.—Englishman, Oct. 2d.

The 25th Bombay N.I. left that Presidency on the 24th Sept. for Cutch, in the Semiramis, in which 700 of the regiment embarked.—Bombay Courier, Sept. 29th.

We believe it to be a certain fact, that Major-General Casement will, on the departure of Col. Morrison, take his place at the Cannel Board. The appointment will doubtless give great satisfaction to the Army of India.—Military Gazette, Oct. 13th.

The King of Lucknow, it is said, has determined to assist Government in the approaching expedition with a force of five regts. of Infantry, 2000 troopers, 50 guns, 1000 draft camels, 100 elephants, and 17 lacs of rupees for its maintenance. The force will proceed via Shahjehanpoor and Bareilly to Loodiana.—Ibid.

We learn from Bellary that the Commissariat are busily engaged in preparing for the march of H.M.'s 41st Foot, and the company of Artillery to Belgaum, as well as the 3d Cavalry and 7th N.I. to Sholapore and Kulladgee. Much difficulty is anticipated in procuring carriage for the Europeans, for there has always been a deficiency of it at Bellary.—Madras United Service Gazette, Oct. 2.

Demonstrations of a warlike nature are evident in every part of our military establishment. In addition to the movements of troops already recorded in our columns, we learn that two squadrons of the 4th Light Dragoons have been ordered for field service to the northward.—Bombay Gazette, Sept. 26.

Lucknow.—Col. Low proceeds immediately to the Cape, on account of ill health.

Col. Beresford, Military Secretary, will command Her Majesty's 3d Buffs on the approaching expedition.

A Brigadier will be sent immediately to Almorah, which will hereafter be a brigade station.—Agra Ukhbar, Sept. 25.

MOXON'S

EFFERVESCENT MAGNESIAN APERIENT, decidedly the most generally useful Medicine ever offered to the public.

The unrivalled efficacy of the Magnesian in all Disorders of the Stomach and Bowels has obtained for it the uniform recommendation and approval of the Faculty.

This unique preparation unites all the active powers of the most approved saline purgatives with the palateable qualities of a glass of soda water. In torpid state of the liver and bowels, bilious affections, cholera morbus, pains in the head, or disordered state of the stomach, nausea, and violent sickness, it will be found a safe, speedy, and effectual remedy. It gives instantaneous relief in the heartburn, is of great service in preventing piles, fistula, and gout, and in alleviating the febrile symptoms attendant on the latter affection. Derangement of the stomach and head, &c., arising from too free indulgence in the gratifications of the table, is speedily removed by a tea-spoonful taken early in the morning.

Prepared only by BENJAMIN MOXON, Chymist, Hull.

Wholesale Agents—Barclay and Sons, London; J. and R. Raines, Edinburgh and Dublin. Sold wholesale at all the Medicine Warehouses in London, and retail by all Venders of Medicines throughout the kingdom, in bottles at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d.; and in family bottles at 11s., containing the quantity of five of the 2s. 9d. size, a saving of 20 per cent. to the purchaser.

N.B.—Be careful to observe that "Moxon and Smith, Chymists, Hull," is engraved on the stamp, without which it cannot be genuine.

May be had as above, that very popular and much-esteemed preparation of Sarsaparilla, the

CONCENTRATED COMPOUND DECOCTION,
Prepared by B. Moxon, Chymist, Hull.

"One table-spoonful added to a pint of pure water readily forms a pint of the Compound Decoction; and, in justice to the preparers, we must say, appears to be more impregnated with the virtues of the ingredients than the decoction made in the usual way."—See Gazette of Health and Practical Medicine for January, 1829.

In bottles at 4s. 6d., 12s., and 22s., the latter equivalent to 32 pints of the Compound Decoction of the London Pharmacopœia.

PATRONIZED BY THE ROYAL FAMILY AND NOBILITY.

SHARP'S ROYAL BRITISH CERATES and LINIMENT.—These valuable medical applications, long privately known, and highly appreciated, by some of the most eminent Medical men in the metropolis, constitute, in their various modifications, rapid and effectual remedies for Gout—in some states, Rheumatic Affections, Lumbago, Glandular Swellings, many instances of Scrofulous sores and Swellings, Tumours, Relaxed Sore Throats, Swelled Face or Gums, some cases of Deafness, Inflammation—in all its shapes, Boils, Ulcerated and other Wounds, Sprains, Bruises, and Burns, Scalds, Erysipelas, Venomous Stings, Itch, Ringworm, Scaldhead, Grocers' Itch, Chilblains, Bunions, Corns, Tender Feet, Paralysis of a local character, and Tic Douloureux. As no class of society is exempt from the liability to some or other of these attacks, so to every rank must access to such a powerful series of simple, but effectual, remedies be highly desirable. The series consists of a Liniment, with the Plain, and four combinations of Cerates:—Namely, No. 1, Plain; No. 2, Camphorated; No. 3, Emollients No. 4, Balsamic; and No. 5, Sulphurated; severally applicable to the cure of the above diseases and injuries, in the manner clearly laid down in the printed directions which accompany each packet.

The Proprietors give their solemn assurance, that there is not a fact stated, with respect to the powers of these substances, which is not fully established in every class of cases, in the private practice of medical men of great respectability in the metropolis, and that each of the preparations, although most effectual in its remedial character, is in the highest degree innocent in its entire composition, and may, consequently, be used with perfect safety.

The ROYAL BRITISH CERATES are made up, in all their modifications, in Boxes of four sizes, at 1s¼d.—2s. 9d.—4s. 6d.—11s. each; and the LINIMENT in Bottles of three sizes, with ground glass Stoppers, at 2s. 9d.—4s. 6d.—and 11s each. Stamps in all cases included. Sold by the Proprietors, SHARP and CO., 154, Fleet-street, London, by all the Patent Medicine Venders in and round the metropolis, and by one or more Chemists, Druggists, or other licensed Venders in every town in the three kingdoms, from all of whom the most full and ample printed directions for use, in every class of disease or injury, may be obtained.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:—

"Sheffield, Oct. 11th, 1837.

"Dear Sir,—Will you send me twelve dozen of Solvent; I find my sale rapidly increasing. The superiority of the Rotterdam Solvent over all other preparations for the entire removal of Corns and Bunions, is becoming generally known and appreciated. Sir, since I last wrote to you, I have heard of several remarkable instances of its efficacy. One I may give you, as I have the permission so to do. Mr. Whitham, a respectable manufacturer, residing in Bridge-street, Sheffield, has been a great sufferer from Corns for the last fifty years; hearing of the Rotterdam Solvent, he was induced to try it, and from the great benefit and relief experienced from its first application, he resolved to persevere in its use, and, in a comparatively short time, was completely cured, and continues so to this day. This gentleman will be happy to give any information to those who may personally apply. I am, dear Sir, yours truly, T. Lofthouse."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Prepared and sold by J. A. Sharwood, 55, Bishopsgate Without, London, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each; and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; and by most Medicine Vendors.—Any Vendor not having it will procure it on its being ordered.

THE NEWLY-DISCOVERED "ASSAM TEA."—The whole of the "Assam Tea" (consisting of Eight Chests only), imported by the Hon. Company, and which has excited so much interest, was sold at a Public Tea Sale on Thursday the 10th inst. After the most exciting competition from the Tea Dealers, Captain Pidding, the proprietor of the celebrated Howqua's Mixture Tea, purchased the whole of it. The first lot was knocked down at 21*s.* per lb., the last lot fetched 19*s.* per lb. exclusive of the duty, &c. In order to carry out to its fullest extent the intent of the Hon. Company and Board of Control, and to enable the greatest number of persons tasting this Tea, Captain Pidding has determined to have it sold in small sample parcels at 2*s.* 6*d.* each.

C. Verley, Swiss Confectioner, 218, Regent street, and Littlejohn and Son, Scotch Confectioners, 77, King William-street, City, Sole Agents in London for Captain Pidding's Howqua's Mixture Tea, will also be the Sole Venders of the Assam Tea. A few sample parcels will be allowed to his Country Agents.—Orders will now be received, but none executed for more than one parcel of each of the two kinds—and to secure attention they should be made early.

OLD CRUSTED PORT, four years in Bottle, 48*s.* per dozen; Marsala, 24*s.*, Dinner Sherry, sound and genuine wine, 21*s.*; Madeira, old and crusted, 28*s.* per doz. At NOBLE and Co.'s Foreign Wine Establishment, corner of Charlotte and Windmill streets, Fitzroy-square. Orders, per post or otherwise, punctually attended to.

MATHEMATICS, NAVIGATION, FORTIFICATION, SURVEYING, & the USE of the GLOBES. Mr. E. CLIFFORD acquaints the Nobility and Gentry that he gives private Lessons in the various branches of the MATHEMATICS — Arithmetic, Algebra, Euclid, Trigonometry, Analytical Geometry, Conic-Sections, Spherics, Fluxions, Mechanics, Astronomy, &c. Scientific Geography, Determination of Latitudes and Longitudes by Astronomical Observations, Trigonometrical Surveying, &c. taught. Gentlemen prepared for the Universities, Military or Naval Colleges. Those designed for Engineers, Architects, Surveyors, may receive that instruction which constitutes the requisite scientific knowledge in those Professions.

42, Old Bond-street, & Raven Cottage, Walham Green Fulham.

METCALFE'S NEW and ORIGINAL PATTERN of TOOTH-BRUSH, made on the most scientific principle, and patronised by the most eminent of the faculty. This celebrated brush will search thoroughly into the divisions of the teeth, and will clean in the most effectual and extraordinary manner. Metcalfe's Brushes are famous for being made on a plan that the hairs never come loose in the mouth. An improved clothes brush, that cleans in a third part of the usual time, and incapable of injuring the finest nap. A newly-invented brush for cleaning velvet with quick and satisfactory effect. The much approved flesh-brushes, as recommended by the faculty. Penetrating hair brushes, with the durable unbleached Russia bristles, and combs of all descriptions, at METCALFE'S, Oxford street, opposite Harewood place, (two doors west of Hollies-street.)

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Bouilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, No. 72, Welbeck street, Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sons, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Valle, Haymarket Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c. &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading or any other Sauce.

BRETT'S LIQUEUR GINGER BRANDY. This exquisite Stomachic Cordial, in itself a perfect Liqueur, is confidently recommended for its peculiar efficacy in the Relief of Spasms, while, in dilution, it produces an agreeable beverage, free from acidity, and, consequently, more wholesome than Malt Liquor. In sealed pint and quart bottles, 2*s.* and 3*s.* 6*d.* each, bottle inclusive, or 18*s.* by the imperial gallon, on which terms our IMPROVED BRANDY continues to rival the choicest produ tions of Cognac, and to defy the best efforts of British distillation.

HENRY BRETT & CO., Old Furnival's Inn, Holborn Pars.

WHITE'S ESSENCE of EGLANTINE.—A highly fashionable and peculiar HANDKERCHIEF SCENT, possessing extracts from the most fragrant flowers, and forming a perfume at once sweet, agreeable, and refreshing.

Prepared only by Thomas White, Chemist, 24, Cornhill, London. In bottles at 2*s.* 6*d.* and 4*s.* 6*d.* each. Also by the following Agents:—Mr. Bunnington, 35, Haymarket; Mr. Wagstaff, 12, Piccadilly, Mr. Sanger, 150, Oxford street, Mr. Ruffield, 150, Strand; Mr. Huntsman, 149, High Holborn, Mr. Vincent, 121, Leadenhall-street; Mr. Sibel, 5, St. James's-street, Brighton, Messrs. H. and E. Greville, Northampton, Mr. Drury, Lincoln, Mr. Taylor, 8, St. Ann's-square, Manchester; Messrs. Butler and Colquhoun, 24, Castle-street, Liverpool; and by all respectable Chemists and Perfumers in the kingdom.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA, FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfume, superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 3*s.* 6*d.*, 7*s.*, and 15*s.* each.

FOR SOFTENING THE SKIN AND IMPROVING THE COMPLEXION.

GODFREY'S EXTRACT OF ELDER FLOWERS stands unrivalled for its efficacy; it effectually eradicates Tan, Pimples, Freckles, Redness, and all Cutaneous Imperfections; renders the most sallow complexion delicately clear, and imparts to the skin a pleasing and healthy appearance. In the process of shaving it is invaluable, as it allays the irritation and smarting pain, and renders the skin smooth and firm. It protects the skin from the effects of the cold winds and damp atmosphere, and will be found beyond all praise, to use as a family Lotion on all occasions.

Sold in Bottles, price 2*s.* 9*d.*, with directions for using it, by A. Willoughby and Co (late B. Godfrey Windus), 61, Bishopsgate Street Without, and all respectable Medicine Venders.

CAVALRY.

2d Drag. Guards—are collected at Hulme barracks, with a detachment of two Serjs and 20 Dragoons, under Lieut Sir H Paulet, Bt, at Rochdale

6th Drag Guards—Gen the Hon Robert Taylor, Col. of this reg, who has been dangerously indisposed at his seat in Meath, though somewhat better, remains in a very feeble state of health

7th Drag. Gds—Serj. Matthews, tried by Court-Martial in Derry—Maj. Hon. G.A Browne, 64th, President—for embezzling smart money he got for the release of recruits, has been honourably acquitted, and the private who made the charge is ordered to join his regiment.

4th Lt. Dragoons—The draft which embarked in the Malabar, on 20th of July last, landed at Bombay on the 16th of November.

10th Hussars—After the 15th this reg. will be next for India, and relieve the 4th.

11th Lt. Drags.—Four thousand pounds have been given for a new service of plate This corps, in being made Hussars, will have a uniform similar to that of the 15th.

13th Lt Drags.—Major T. P. Lang died at Bangalore on 22d Nov last.

15th Hussars—move from Glasgow for Chatham, preparatory to embarkation for India on board the Minotaur, 74. Sir Walter Scott gets the augmentation Lieut Colonelcy, Capt Wathen the Majority, and Lieut and Adjutant Hacker the troop. On the subject of the uniform of this distinguished corps we have received the following —

January 24th 1839

SIR—Observing in a Ministerial paper of Thursday that it is there positively stated, under the heading of "Army," that the dress of the King's Hussars 15th is to be changed permit me to say, that so long as they remain Hussars no objection can, I imagine be raised to their dress being rendered more suitable to the climate in which they are to serve for several years than it may now be but I sincerely hope that the authorities will duly consider before deciding on any alteration, whether or not it is advisable to have the H L I C's troops and the Queen's in precisely the same colours, so as not to be known one from the other at a distance I can to the opinion of those who think there should be a decided difference, but hope some of your readers will if they deem the subject of sufficient importance) give the public the benefit of their opinion and experience The 11th Drag ons, the same paper states, are to be made Hussars, and dressed as the 15th K H are I really should be glad to know what talisman Cavalry Officers are supposed to have, by means of which their purses never can be emptied It is only a very short time since an addition was granted to the honorary bulges of this distinguished corps, which caused great alterations in the appointments, and now another and a total change seems to be meditated I am of opinion that all Light Cavalry should be dressed as Hussars, i e have a good useful pelisse and no scales, epaulettes, or cloak,—but continual changes in the appointments and uniform tend to drive the working part out of that branch of the service, and to make room for that spirit of extravagance by no means essential to the efficiency of a body of soldiers in the field, whatever it may be in the ball room

WALLENSTEIN

6th Lancers—Lieut. Burridge is to have the superintendance of Cavalry Recruiting District in London, Feb. 1st

17th Lancers—have removed to the Rl. Barracks, Dublin. We deeply regret to announce the death of the Colonel of this corps, Lieut.-General Sir John Elley, K.C.B., K.C.H. An authentic memoir of this veteran officer will appear in our next numbe.

INFANTRY.

1oot Guards—The Sergeant and two privates on duty the night that Theller and Dodge effected their escape from the prison at Quebec, have been found guilty of conniving at the escape, and sentenced to be shot Theller and Dodge gave the Guards potion, in which they had infused laudanum.

2d Foot—This regt, under Colonel Baumgardt, sailed from Bombay for the mouth of the Indus in Nov last. Lieut. Hamilton has been appointed Acting Quartermaster of the Provisional battalion at Chatham.

3d—Lieut. Magrath has resigned his situation on the Recruiting Service, for the purpose of joining his corps now on march for Cabul. Capt. Dore and Lieut Airey are at the depot Ensigns Meachim and Robson will embark with the draft for India.

4th—Lieut. Burke and Ensign M Andrew will accompany a large draft of men for the head-quarters, which will embark this spring for Madras The drafts of last summer had arrived at Madras in November

4th—We understand that this corps will not proceed to the West Indies or to Canada, but serve its 10 years in the Mediterranean

6th—Brevet-Major Lonamy has returned home by the last overland packet. The draft, under Capt. Dennis in the Malabar, arrived in Bombay in Nov last At a General Court Martial held in cantonment, near Poona, 3d Sept. 1838, Ens W W Patterson was arraigned on the following charges, preferred by Lt. Col Algeo —

First Charge—For irregular and unofficerlike conduct, to the prejudice of good order and Military discipline, in the following instances —

1st Instance—In having, at Colaba, near Bombay, on or about the 22d Nov 1837, disobeyed my order to furnish a correct copy of his report as Orderly Officer of the 21st of the same month

2d Instance—In having, at the same place, 23d Nov 1837, absented himself without leave from the Orderly Room, where he had been directed to attend daily, although he had been admonished for a similar offence a few days before

3d Instance—In having on the same day, absented himself without leave from a meeting of the Officers of the regiment held by my Order

Second Charge—For breach of Military discipline, in having broken his arrest on or about the 18th Dec. 1837 by being in the Fort of Bombay beyond the limits of his arrest, and being then dressed in a manner unbecoming an officer

(Signed) J Algeo, Major, Commanding H M 's 6th Regt.

Additional Charge—For scandalous and disgraceful conduct, unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in the following instances viz,

1st Instance In having, at Colaba, near Bombay, on or about the 1st January 1838, obtained from Bhugwan Sunker, an inhabitant of Bombay, several work boxes, one looking-glass and one picture, amounting in value to the sum of 215 rupees or thereabouts, on the terms of immediate payment; and in having after obtaining possession of the said articles, refused to return or pay for the same, and in having then and there threatened to beat the said Bhugwan Sunker

2d Instance—In having, soon after the transaction set forth in the foregoing instance, disposed of one of the said boxes to Keclupal Merdan a tailor, residing at Colaba, for the sum of 10 rupees, of which he received payment the same day

3d Instance—In having also disposed of another of the said boxes to the late Girder Kessowjee (commonly called Cheap Jack), an inhabitant of Bombay, for the sum of 50 rupees, in part liquidation of a debt due by him to the said Girder Kessowjee

Upon the whole of which charges the Court found the prisoner guilty, and sentenced him, Ensign W W Patterson, to be cashiered (Approved H Evans, General, Commander in Chief, East Indies

7th—The Morning Herald insists that this regiment has been ordered to India. We confess that we are not in the secrets of the Quartermaster-General's department,—and we doubt if a cautious old staff officer, like Sir W. Gordon, ever communicates his secrets of office to any one We may be over sceptical, but we must still doubt that so long favoured a regiment as the Royal Fusiliers will be sent either to India or New South Wales. We are not prophets, but sometimes good guessers, and we conjecture that Canada, or the Cape, will be selected for the 7th regt,—not India or New South Wales

9th—This regt was held in readiness for field service, when accounts left Calcutta in Nov last. It had previously been ordered to Hazarebaugh. It is now destined for Rangoon.

10th—A fire broke out on Monday evening at the Mess-Room, New Barracks, Limerick, which was immediately quenched.

13th—Major-General Sir W. Cotton has appointed Capt. Havelock, his (second) A D C, and Post Master of the division He has also appointed Dr. Murray, Surgeon to the Head Quarters of the division.

14th—Capt Smith and Ens Romer embarked in the Barossa transport with the draft for the service cos.

15th—The primary cause of Ensign Carey perishing at Chambly barracks, was returning to his room for some trifles he valued, consisting of two or three military decorations he gained in Spain, in the late Legion, and which were locked up in a small box on his dressing table

17th—This corps, about 500 strong, embarked for field service in Cabul in Nov. last at Bombay

18th—Letters from Bombay, dated the 3rd of Dec, make no mention of the landing of this regt in India from Ceylon, and the report seems without foundation.

21st—The regt had not arrived in India on the 24th of last Nov. Lieut Bace embarked for Madras on 21st inst.

25th—The destination of this regt. is still undetermined, and will probably remain so for some time. It is supposed it will embark for Canada on the opening of the season, when the St. Lawrence becomes navigable.

27th—The draft for the service cos will embark at Deal for the Cape of Good Hope 28th—This is one of the strongest depots in Chatham, and will ultimately consist of 110 men, but the service cos. will in the first instance be completed to 659.

31st—This regt it is said will be actively employed on the North east Frontier in the force about to assemble to check the Nepaulese and Ghoorkas, who have collected an army on the confines of our territory.

30th Depot—After sending the second draft for Canada, last week, the strength of the depot was 11 r and f and eight officers!

37th—The officers on board the Inconstant are Col Sinclt, Bt.-Major Thorcau, Capt. Harvey, Lieut and Adjutant Durham, Ensigns Shum ard Hamilton.

39th—Capt Innes has arrived, in good health, at Sydney, on his passage to Madras

41st—Capt Cochran is about to embark to rejoin his regt. Capt Wetherall is to remain in command of the depot.

42d—The Royal Highlanders are set down by some wiseacres for India. We have heard that the distinguished Colonel of this regiment, Sir George Murray, on a former occasion used his influence to change the destination of his regiment from India to the Mediterranean, and we consider it improbable that he will not again exert similar influence, and obtain the favour of having the corps either sent back to the Mediterranean or to Canada. The 42nd, since the war closed, has never served a day in a bad climate Does the regt. deserve less favour now than heretofore? We think not.

50th—Capt. Fothergill has joined the depot at Chatham, for the purpose of relieving Major Sergeantson in command of the recruiting company.

51st Depot—Capt. Rice has leave to 14th Feb. Brevet-Major Campbell and Lieut Dickson arrived at Sydney, in the Lord Lynedoch last Aug.

55th—Ensign Frend embarked for Madras on the 19th inst. on board the Claudine.

62d—Ensign Hillier embarked for Madras on the 21st inst in the Abercrombie Robinson.

63d—Lt Fowle now commands the detachments at Upnor Castle, having relieved Lieut. Hamilton of the 2d regt. there.

69th—The officers on board the Inconstant are Major Brookes, Capt. Coote, Lieut. Gore, Ens Murdell.

83d Depot—from Hull to Tynemouth Castle.

86th—Head-qrs. and two cos, Stockport; two, Rochdale; two, Todmorden; four, Blackburn. Two comps. from Burnley to Blackburn, one from Burnley to Rochdale, one from Rochdale to Stockport.

87th Depot—having received a letter of readiness to leave Castlebar, the inhabitants addressed to Sir E. Blakeney a testimonial of the excellent conduct of the depot, and praying they may not be removed. The 87th are to remain until April.

88th—The Lieutenants are, perhaps, without an exception, for purchase.

89th—Lieut.-Gen. W. Blunt of this corps, died at Tobago, of the yellow fever, after two days' illness. He was the youngest son of Lieut.-General Blunt.

93d—Lieut. Lord Cosmo Russell has left Woburn Abbey, to join the service companies at Gibraltar.

96th—The regt. give two cos. to Liverpool Barracks, three to Wigan, three to Haydock-lodge, and two and head-quarters to Bolton. As soon as 659 men of the 51st regt. shall have embarked for Van Diemen's Land, this regt. will move to Chatham to furnish the convict guards. Meantime it will be employed in the West of England, where troops are much required at present.

97th—The regt. is expected in Dublin in a few weeks.

98th—Head-quarters and five cos., Hull; four, Burnley; one, Isle of Man.

99th—Sir J. Gaspard Le Marchant has joined at Athlone. The regiment had a brilliant sham-fight on Thursday se'nnight. Lieut.-Col. Johnston and Major Jackson commanded wings of the regt., which manœuvred over a circuit of three miles. Major-Gen. Sir W. P. Caroll and Staff attended.

Rl. Artillery—The Horse Artillery have moved from Island-Bridge to Portobello (Dublin) Barracks. Major Saunders, commanding in Dublin, is seriously indisposed.

G. O.—"Lord Bloomfield cannot resume the command of the garrison without conveying to Major-Gen. Fyers, his acknowledgment, as well for undertaking its duties as expressing his very high satisfaction that discipline and good feeling have been advanced under his orders, and which, Lord Bloomfield hopes, with the aid and assistance of Commanding Officers, Officers, and Non-commissioned Officers, to be able to maintain."

Rl. Engineers—Lieut. Boteler is attached to the Trigonometrical Survey, under Capt. Stodhert. There are five Engineer Officers doing duty in Limerick.

CIRCULAR. War Office, 10th January, 1839.

With reference to the Circular Letter from this department, dated 24th March, 1835, notifying a deduction from the annual off-reckonings of the regiment under your command for the clothing of eighty privates, I have the honour to acquaint you, that as the regiment is to be completed to the full establishment of 799 rank and file, Her Majesty is pleased to order that off-reckonings shall be allowed for the latter number, from the 1st of April, 1839. HOWICK.

To ——— ———, Colonel of the — Regiment of ——.

We understand from the best authority, that the Military Commissioners are determined to recommend, in the strongest, terms the abolition of the traffic which now prevails in the purchase of promotion by giving enormous sums beyond the regulated prices.—Herald. Fudge! The Military commission has not sat for months.

In consequence of the crowded state of the cavalry depot at Maidstone, and the great increase of recruits, it is expected that the riding establishments of that place will be abolished, and that Capt. Myers will remain at the depot, as Riding-Master, occasionally visiting the regiments, on a similar plan to that of Mr. Angelo, the Sword-Master-General, and that the Riding-Masters of regiments, on appointment, go to Maidstone for a short time to learn his system.

The Barossa transport, having on board drafts as under, sailed from Cove on the 15th inst. for the West Indies:—14th Foot, 1 Capt., 1 Subalt., 2 Serjts., 45 r. and f.; 56th, 1 Capt., 3 Subalts., 1 Staff, 1 Serjt., 81 r. and f.; 64th, 1 Field Officer, 1 Capt., 2 Subalts., 1 Staff, 2 Serjts., 58 r. and f., 68th, 3 Subalts., 1 Serjt., 25 r. and f.; 76th, 2 Capts., 4 Subalts., 1 Staff, 2 Serjts., 154 r. and f.,—Total, 1 Field Officer, 5 Capts., 13 Subalts., 3 Staff, 8 Serjts., 363 r. and f.

Her Majesty's Ship Inconstant, having on board drafts as under, sailed from Cove on the 16th inst. for Nova Scotia:—37th Foot, 1 Field Officer, 2 Capts., 3 Subalts., 1 Serjt., 100 r. and f.; 69th, 1 Field Officer, 1 Capt., 5 Subalts., 6 Serjts., 180 r. and f.;—Total, 2 Field Officers, 3 Capts., 1 Subalts., 7 Serjts., 280 r. and f.

A General Court-Martial was to assemble yesterday at the Royal Barracks, Dublin, at eleven o'clock, for the trial of private James Anderson, No. 898, of the 58th regt., and such other prisoners as should be brought before the Court. President, Lt.-Col. Cobbe, Royal Horse Artillery.

Capt. Newhouse, late of the 82d Foot, has been appointed Barrack-Master at Trinidad, and will shortly proceed to his destination.

The French Army has an effective force on the peace establishment of 311,412 men, and 62,142 horses; and on war establishment of 420,265 men, and 121,692 horses.

Portsmouth, Jan. 25th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—There has been very little doing in the port during the week. Cameleon encountered such bad weather on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, that she was compelled to return to Spithead to set up her rigging and get a new boat, the one at her stern having been washed away; she has since gone to Plymouth, and from thence to Lisbon. Daphne went to Spithead on Tuesday, and waits orders. Ganges has had her hollow shot changed, and some alterations made in her armament; but it is thought she will be detained at Spithead for some days, it being expected that some Members of the Admiralty are coming down to inspect her and the Daphne previous to their going to sea. Horatio transport went to Cork on Tuesday. Electra is refitting in the harbour, and the Cracker in dock. There are no other vessels in commission in the port except the usual guard-ships. The workmen finished breaking up the Prince George yesterday afternoon; they worked very hard and cheerfully, but in consequence of the bad weather which occurred during the operation, their pecuniary reward will be abridged, as they calculated on finishing last Monday; a great quantity of copper and iron, and about fifty hollow and round shot, have been removed from her timbers and sides. Etna is to be taken in the dock to-morrow. Revenge is alongside the dock-yard, and it is expected will be ordered to be commissioned about the middle of next month. Strong parties are at work on Royal Frederick, Indus, and Stromboli. The Indus will be launched first; they are painting her, and clearing away the rubbish and other accumulations of years, and making strong indication for a move. A rendezvous has been opened for the Powerful, and a few seamen have joined; Captain Napier is expected in the town in a few days, and will doubtless obtain some volunteers. Some supernumerary seamen from the Britannia, and a few marines from head-quarters, are ordered on board the Ganges, to fill up casualties in the Mediterranean squadron. The Seaflower has brought ten more volunteers from Bristol. Ships in Port—Ganges, Daphne, at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Electra, Seaflower, Cracker, Emerald, Messenger steamer, in Harbour.

Plymouth, Jan. 25th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Jan. 18th—Arrived Diligence Navy transport, with stores from Pembroke. 20th—Arrived the Tagus peninsular steamer from the Eastward, and sailed the same day for Falmouth, whence she proceeded the next day with the mail for Lisbon. 21st—Arrived Meteor st.-v., Lt.-Com. R.D. Pritchard, from Portsmouth, and came into harbour to have the damages repaired which she sustained in the late heavy gale wind at Liverpool. 22d—Sailed Rolla, 10, Lt.-Com. Charles Hall, for the Coast of Spain; Rocksby Castle, emigrant ship, for Australia; and Asia emigrant-ship, for Sidney, New South Wales. Arrived the Swale, tender to Astrea, from Falmouth, with unserviceable packet stores; also Emerald tender, with supernumeraries from Portsmouth. A melancholy accident occurred this day, by the upsetting of a boat at the back of Bovisand Pier, near the Breakwater, by which four persons were drowned; viz., M. Wm. Stuart, son of Mr. Stuart, Superintendant of the Breakwater; Mr. S. Sparrow; John Langmead, and Richard Chapman, watermen. There was also in the boat, Master Stuart, who was saved by the help of the sprit and an oar. It appears that the young gentlemen, with the two boatmen, left Caldown for the purpose of shooting gulls, about eleven o'clock in the morning; about half-past twelve they were seen pulling from Bovisand Bay towards Bovisand Pier, on nearing which the ground swell carried the boat on a sunken rock, and on its receding, the boat upset. Great hopes were at first entertained for their safety, as it appeared they were able to swim, but on assistance arriving at the spot it was found they had perished, with the exception of the younger Stuart. A Coroner's Inquest was held on the bodies on the following day, and a verdict of accidental death returned. 23d—The Opossum packet, 6, Lieut. R. James, was paid wages this day, went into the Sound, and sailed for Falmouth the next, and proceeded immediately for Falmouth, whence she takes the next mail to South America. 24th—Arrived Netley tender, from Liverpool, with new raised men for the Navy; also, arrived Cameleon, 10, Lt.-Com. G. M. Hunter, from Portsmouth, on her way to Sierra Leone and Rio Janeiro, touching at Lisbon. 25th—The Devon lighter will sail this day for the Coast of Spain, with stores for Lord John Hay's squadron. Com. John Adams is appointed to Acorn, 16, lately launched from this Dock-yard, and it is expected her pendant will be hoisted this day. Scylla, 16, Com. Hon. J. Denman, is daily expected at this port, from Lisbon; it is said she is to be paid off, as she needs great repair. The damages received by Malabar, 74, Cap. E. Harvey, by her getting on shore on the coast of America, are much greater than first reported; her defects have been forwarded to the Lords of the Admiralty, and, until their answer is received, it cannot be known whether she will be paid off or have her defects made good; at present the work is suspended. The keel of the Spartan, 26, has been laid down this week, and is expected she will be in frame in about three weeks, as it is quite ready for putting up. The Phœbe, 42, has been brought down the harbour, and placed near the Royal Adelaide, for an hospital ship for the newly raised men. Five apprentices to Shipwrights have been entered this week in the Dock-yard. In Harbour—Royal Adelaide, San Josef, Hercules, Malabar, and Meteor steam vessel. In the Sound—Cameleon.

Deptford, 23d Jan.—Sailed the Hopewell for Jamaica; Waverly for Cork to embark convicts. The Arab transport, Lieut. Lister, Agent, is discharged and docked. We sincerely hope Lieut. Lister will be speedily re-employed, for his zealous and seaman-like conduct in the recent gales, when in most imminent danger. Remain the City of Rochester for West Indies, and Amity for Bermuda.

Royal Naval Benevolent Society.—On Monday this society held its quarterly meeting at the Thatched-House Tavern, Admiral Sir G. Cockburn, G.C.B., in the chair. There was a numerous muster of officers, including Sir E. Codrington, Sir N. Willoughby, Captains Saumarez, Jones, &c. Mr. W. Dickson, Honorary Solicitor, stated the progress the society had made in its claims on the Belton legacy of 260,000*l.*, when it was ultimately agreed that Messrs. Yeates and Turner should prosecute those claims, and that Mr. Dickson should watch their progress. A letter was read from Sir John Conroy, enclosing a donation from the Duchess of Kent of 25*l.*, and intimating her desire to patronise the society. It was moved and seconded that the thanks of the society should be conveyed to Her Royal Highness. A letter was read from Lord Minto, enclosing his donation of 25*l.*, and another from Admiral Sir Isaac Coffin, and Rear-Admiral Sir C. Adam, announcing that those officers had accepted the office of Vice-Presidents, and a donation of 25*l.* from the former, and 5*l.* from the latter.

Capt. F. D. Schaw's 28th annual donation of 20*l.* was received; also 10*l.* from Rear-Admiral Fane. The Secretary was directed to acknowledge to Lord Minto the society's thanks for his Lordship's donation. Thanks were voted to Major-Gen. Sir Henry Worsley, Commander Saumarez, the Rev. Dr. Morpeth, and several other friends to the society, for their exertions in its behalf. The subscriptions, donations, and interest on funded property amounted for the last quarter to 1,165*l.* 4*s.* 0½*d.*, and the outlay, including 578*l.* voted for relief, to 669*l.* 16*s.* 3½*d.* Several petitions for relief were entertained.

CHATHAM.—Friday 18th the Rochester sailed with stores for Pembroke. The Hecla was got alongside the sheer hulk, and had her mast put in; she goes to Greenock to have her engines and boilers fitted. Orders were received at Chatham on Sunday to commission the Hydra steamer forthwith; her complement of men is to be 120, including officers. The following ships are on the stocks, and in a great state of forwardness:—London, 92; Goliah, 84; Cumberland, 70; Leander, 46; Active, 36; Phantom, 26; Calypso, 20; and Arab, 16. The Buffalo, which was paid off last week, was fitted out at Portsmouth by Government about two years ago, to take out the Governor of South Australia, and afterwards to bring home masts and timber for the Navy. She brought home 70 sticks that will make topmasts for 74 gun ships, besides plank and other timber, called cowdee by the natives, for ship-building. She left her marines behind for the protection of the English residents there. She brought home a boy, aged nine years, who had got out in a ship that had been stranded on one of the islands, the whole of the crew, with his father, having been murdered by the natives, with whom he lived two years.

COAST-GUARD.—At half-past one on the morning of 20th inst., it blowing hard, raining, and very dark, the brig Zebra, Robert Hughes Master, from Ipswich, bound to Liverpool, laden with flour and peas, in making for Newhaven harbour (for shelter), a strong tide running in at the time, she struck the West Pier-head, with great force, the crash was dreadful, and one man jumped out on the pier, assisted by the Coast Guard-man on duty. Lt. Franklyn, R.N., of the Coast Guard, who was on the spot, seeing she was going down as fast as possible, and there being no time to lose immediately jumped into his boat, with five of the Coas Guard men, when the brig upset, filled with water, and turned on her side, the Master and crew calling for assistance. Lt. Franklyn was soon at the wreck, and with much difficulty succeeded in taking them off, the suction being very great, and the vessel twisting and rolling with the tide, made it very dangerous to approach her. Lieut. Franklyn succeeded in landing them all in safety, and fortunately his boat received no injury; if she had, it is most likely all hands must have perished. The boat's crew (we understand) paid the greatest attention to Lieut. Franklyn's order in attending to their oars, where their safety depended, and conducting themselves as seamen generally do when life is in danger, and when placed in dangerous and difficult situations.

Lieut. Wolfe and Lieut. Beechy, deputed by the Admiralty, will resume the survey of the Shannon, and intend shortly to visit the Fergus.

The Government steamer Veloce, fitted out with Captain Bechemeil's new invention for working the vessel either with sails or steam, which left Rochefort for Mexico, was fallen in with by a Spanish ship, in 40 deg. North lat., and 14 long. W. of Paris. Capt. B. took this opportunity of sending home an account of his observations as to her rate of sailing. When under sail, with her top-sails, studding-sails, and royals set, her rate for two days and a half was 11 knots and a half an hour. It had been ascertained that all her canvass, amounting to 54 pieces, might be taken in in 45 minutes, and set again in 50 minutes. All was well on board, and when the Spaniard came up, the Véloce was using her engine only.—Galignani.

It has been the custom of the Prussian Government Officers to seal up the whole of the salt in British vessels, immediately on their arrival in any of their ports, allowing only three days' provision of this article, at the rate of half an ounce per day for each man. This vexatious proceeding has, by the representation of the Masters of twelve vessels, backed by the British Consul at Dantzic, been put an end to by the Minister of Customs, the Captains being required in future to declare the quantity they have on hand, as a prevention to smuggling."—Hull paper.

The crew and supernumerary seamen on board the Britannia, at Portsmouth, amount to about 1000. About 180 or 200 are to go to the Princess Charlotte, at Malta, for the disposal of Admiral the Hon. Sir R. Stopford.

MALTA, DEC. 28.—It will scarcely be credited that the Military authorities of Malta (which is garrisoned by four regiments of the line—the Malta Fencibles and some companies of Artillery) should be under the necessity of applying to the Naval Commander-in-Chief for Marines from the squadron to furnish the Hospital guard; but such has been the case; and that guard has been found for the last nine days from the Bellerophon; not but that there is the strictest propriety in its being mounted by that corps, but certainly not by those belonging to men of war, the great inconvenience of which is well known. It would be of infinite benefit to the Naval service were Malta entirely garrisoned by Marines,—at any rate, there should be a division on the Burmola side, with an appropriate Staff, &c. All casualties in the ships on the station might then be filled from it, and the men embarked for that purpose would be complete in every respect;—whereas it now often happens that, when supernumeraries are sent from head-quarters, they are transferred from five or six different ships before they join one as part complement; by that time they have but little more clothing than what they stand in, and that almost (if not quite) worn out. We hope soon to see a permanent head-quarters for Marines established at Malta, which is absolutely necessary, and as it is obvious that the Military duties cannot be performed without their assistance, why not at once send a sufficient number to occupy the barracks at Burmola, and let them take the whole of the duties on that side of the water. Of the ships in Malta harbour (Princess Charlotte, Ceylon, Asia, Vanguard, Bellerophon, Hastings, Minden, Barham, Carysfort, Dido, Hazard, and Wolverine), those only under sailing orders are the Hastings (which has been only partially unfitted of her extra cabins and decorations), for Port Mahon, where she will remain a month—Minden, for Athens—and Confiance, for Constantinople, whither she conveys the new Secretary of Legation, Mr. Bankhead. Capt. Walker, late of Vanguard, proceeds to England next week, before entering the Turkish service. The officers of Barham are anxiously waiting the Vernon their relief, as the system adopted of refusing the usual shore indulgences, has caused much unpleasantness to the officers of this ship.

RT. MARINES.—Serjt. Drake, Chatham Division, has received a medal and gratuity, awarded by the Admiralty, for long and meritorious service. The good-conduct medal will this year be given out, with the gratuity of 5*l.*, to a private or Drummer, 10*l.* to a Corporal, and 15*l.* to a Serjeant.—The standard for recruiting in this corps has been raised half an inch, the several divisions being nearly complete. Parties from Oxford, Salisbury, and Lewes have lately been sent in to the Portsmouth Division.

East India Intelligence.

The overland mail from India, via Marseilles, arrived on Tuesday last, bringing intelligence from Bombay to 5th Dec., Madras 24th Nov., and Bengal 23d Nov. The news brought by this mail have a more warlike aspect with regard to Burmah than was anticipated. With regard to the operations on the north west frontier, in consequence of the siege of Herat being raised by the Shah of Persia, an official notice of which has appeared in the General Orders, it was rumoured that Sir Henry Fane would return to Bengal with a large portion of the Bengal troops; the remainder of which, together with Sir John Keane's army, from Bombay, being thought sufficient to place Shah Sooja on the throne of Cabul.

Burmah.—The reception of Col. Benson, as long as the Rattlesnake was at hand, was with the greatest show of kindness; salutes and guards of honour were the order of the day; but the Ava-ites did not condescend to return the visit, though he had more than one hint about it. The mission party arrived at Prome on the 14th ult., at which place, and during the whole of their journey, they experienced great difficulty in procuring supplies; in fact, in some of the villages the inhabitants were punished for selling some trifling articles to the mission.

A deputation of merchants had been ordered to meet the Resident, and conduct him to the capital, and every opportunity was taken of impressing on him that the mission would not find itself on the same footing as the former one. This deputation was to meet the mission at Kyaup-ta-loon, and the Yewon was ordered to detain it there till they arrived; but the Resident, considering that merchants were not the proper persons to depute to receive him, determined on not waiting for them, and the party proceeded. Before they had moved far the deputation arrived, consisting of Messrs. Sarkis, Arsapet, and Low; they brought no letter with them, and not being Officers of the Government, while one of them was actually a British subject, the Resident declined receiving them in their present official capacities. They stated that they had been ordered to accompany the Resident to the capital, and show him the quarters assigned to him; though even this they did not eventually execute, as they quitted the mission between Ava and Amarapoora. Their location is on an island which, a month before, was under water, separated from the town by a backwater about a mile across; and to the westward by patches of flat land and water, extending for two miles from the river. This is altogether a very pretty situation for the representative of the greatest power in the East to find himself in. Even at Rangoon, in our own immediate vicinity, the tone of the authorities seems to verge very near on the hostile. A letter received from Col. Benson, dated 25th Oct., states that from the 4th, the day on which he arrived at the capital, up to that time no notice had been taken of him by the King or any one about him, and that the inhabitants had been ordered on no account to go near the Resident, or to furnish his party with supplies.

The Bengal Hurkaru, Nov. 14, states, that an extraordinary Council was held on the 9th Nov., to consider of recent despatches from Ava; and that immediate war with the Burmese, or something very like it, was resolved on. H M. 9th regiment, at Chinsurah, and which was under orders for Hazareebaugh, is now, it is said, ordered to be in readiness to embark for Rangoon, which place it is intended to take and retain possession of. It likewise states, that the Government have despatched orders to Bombay, to send round immediately one or two, if not more, of the sea-going steamers; and in that case the communication with Great Britain by the Red Sea at this time of such moment, will again be interrupted at the season most favourable for maintaining it.

Captain Thomson, the Field Engineer, has been ordered to proceed immediately to Ferozepore, and there concentrate all the means and appliances of his particular department, for the purpose of throwing a bridge of boats across the Sutlej at that place. It is now conjectured, in the most likely and best-informed quarters, that the intent of the Government is to go through the Punjaub at once.—Bengal Hurkaru, Nov. 18.

The 3d Light Cavalry marched, the morning of the 7th Nov., for Ferozepore. The regiment goes into the field in the most efficient state, highly to the credit of its Acting Commandant, Major Angelo. The actual strength of effective men is 477, fourteen of whom are European Officers, and three non-commissioned Officers. There is only one man unfit for duty in the whole regiment.—Ibid.

Mutiny in the [28*th Native Infantry.*—This regt., which is described as having mutinied, has been ordered to halt at Paneeput. The mutiny in the corps was, we are given to understand, of a very mild and orderly form, which showed itself in the determination of one company to accompany a comrade (who had for some misconduct been ordered to drill, and not submitting to the punishment without expressions of discontent, was further ordered into imprisonment for ten days) to the place of confinement, the quarter guard, and refused to do any duty until he was released. Several men from other companies were equally mutinous in refusing to pitch their tents, but without the slightest appearance of violence or even disrespect in either language or manner. Major Wilkinson, at this stage of the proceedings, expostulated with the men, and induced them to return to their duty. With the exception of this, no positive act of mutiny displayed itself. Much discontent prevailed among the corps, and if we can credit what we hear, not without the strongest cause.—Agra Ukhbar, Nov. 8.

Camp de Buddee, 8th November, 1838.—The Gov.-General of India has been pleased to publish, for general information, the subjoined extract of a letter from Lieut.-Col. Stoddart from Herat, dated 10th Sept. —

"I have the honour, by direction of Her Britannic Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary, and the Honourable East India Company's Envoy at the Court of Persia, to acquaint you, for the information of the Governor-General of India in Council, that his Majesty the Shah of Persia yesterday raised the siege of this city, and with the whole of the royal camp marched to Sangburst, about twelve miles on his return to his own dominions. His Majesty proceeds, without delay, by Toorbut, Sheikhs, Jaum, and Meshed, to Tehran. This is in fulfilment of his Majesty's compliance with the demands of the British Government, which I had the honour of delivering on the 20th inst., and of the whole of which his Majesty announced the acceptance on 14th August. His Majesty Shah Kamran, and his Vizeer Yar Mahommed khan, and the whole city, felt sensible of the necessity of the friendship of the British Government, and myself fully participate in their gratitude to Providence for the happy event I have now the honour to report."

In giving publicity to this information, the Governor-General deems it proper at the same time to notify, that while he regards the relinquishment of the Siege of Persia of his hostile designs upon Herat as a just cause of congratulation to the Government of British India and its allies, he will continue to prosecute with vigour the measures which have been announced, with a view to the substitution of a friendly for a hostile power in the eastern province of Affghanistan, and to the establishment of a permanent barrier against the schemes of aggression upon our north-west frontier.

The Governor-General is pleased to appoint Lieutenant Eldred Pottinger, Bombay Artillery, to be Political Agent at Herat, subject to the orders of the Envoy and Minister at the Court of Shah Sooja-ool-Moolk. This appointment to have effect from 9th Sept. last, the date on which the siege of Herat was raised by the Shah of Persia.

The 31st, 42d, and 43d N.I. marched into Kurnaul on the morning of 31st Oct. The Buffs and the park of Artillery from Delhi was expected to arrive immediately.

Capt. Beatson, of Shah Soojah's service, has been removed by the Governor-General from the post he held, in consequence it is said of writing to the Paymaster of the corps in a style of questionable propriety. Lieut. Halliday, of the same service, is in a very dangerous state of health. His life was yesterday despaired of. His friends look for the next post from Loodianah with great anxiety.—Englishman, Nov. 13.

The 38th N.I., under Lieut.-Colonel Mosely, is to be moved immediately to Kurnaul. The 28th N.I. fall back on Meerut, where a Court of Inquiry is to assemble to inquire into the cause of the mutiny before referred to.—Ibid.

The 20th N.I. has been ordered to take the place of the 28th N.I., in consequence of which Col. Paul assumes the command, which has fallen to him by the supercession of Col. Worseley.

Lieut.-Col. Stuart will proceed shortly to join the Governor-General. Major-Gen. Sir Wm. Casement returns to the Presidency. Lady Casement is expected from England soon; and it is rumoured Gen. Casement will succeed Colonel Morrison in council.—Bengal Hurkaru, Nov. 14.

There are some eighteen applications for the civil service furlough this year, and only thirteen available; but perhaps, under the rules, the gentlemen who have passed the ten years period of service may go home on private affairs, leaving their furloughs to follow as they fall due —Bengal Hurkaru, Nov. 1.

Defeat of the Seiks.—Rumours of the defeat of the Seik army of observation, on the west bank of the Indus, gain ground daily; and it is added that the Chief of Peshawar, who has for some time past paid tribute to Runjeet Sing, has intimated that his family honour is concerned in opposing Shah Sooja, and that he must at all events unite with his brother Dost Mahomed, if the Seiks persevere in their intention to restore them to the throne of Cabul.—Ibid.

Great sickness prevails in and around Delhi and throughout the Dooab.

The agent to the Governor-General had applied for a re-inforcement of 2,000 men, and a battering train to proceed against the Fort of Jahusi. Major-General Sir Thomas Auburey proposed to command the force in person.

BENGAL.

CASUALTY.—The PROTECTOR, Dixon, London to Calcutta, was totally lost on the Sand Heads, and of all the people on board, whose names are mentioned below, only seven recruits and the cook of the vessel were saved. She anchored on the morning of the 18th Oct., before daylight, in four and a half fathoms water, fourmiles N.N.W. of the floating vessel Hope, and struck in about an hour after during a violent gale. The following is a correct list of the persons on board:—Mr. and Mrs. Evans, Captain Martin, Miss Martin, Capt. Mouke, 39th B.N.I., Mrs. Cooper, Mrs. Hobson, Mr. Smith, one servant, 116 men, 10 women, and six children, H.C.'s recruits, Capt. Dixon, and 36 crew—total, 178 on board.

TRISTRAM'S CHAPTER OF NOTHING.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—For these last two months I have pondered over the officers' postage and franking of seamen's letters, and the celebrated Court-Martial of Commander Inman, which subjects, I trust, are considered something interesting and important to the Navy, whilst pamphlets of all signatures, ranks, and degrees, have been travelling post through the United Kingdom in the daily coaches; the Times and Morning Herald proclaiming or sounding the alarm for nothing, or, what is the same thing, about the Great Bear, or rather the bugbear, "The Flying Russian" in the Baltic, which terrifies and horrifies the superstitious and credulous as much as the "Flying Dutchman" at the Cape, renowned in hob-goblin story. When an author has produced many a chapter upon something, he may expect to be indulged with one upon nothing, which is the sole subject of this. I read most attentively Capt. Craufurd's pamphlet twice over, with a great desire to review it in your Gazette; but all I could manufacture out of its materials was a pretty yarn of chequered die, with which our classical belles would delight to tambour their chemisettes, or figure their samplers. "Do you think, my dear Tristram, the subject would do for a carpet to decorate my boudoir?" queried Chloe, with all the captivating naïveté imaginable. "Let me consider," said I. Gilt and lackered picturesque ships of war, wreathed in flags of the rainbow hues—suits of dimity whiteness—crews of soldier-sailors, regimentaled in green jackets, trousers of lily-white duck, hessian boots, black leather stocks, chaco helmets and cross-belts, à la Militaire, with the Siberian amoroso, the Emperor of all the Russias, crowned on the poop of a first-rate in gorgeous pomp, majestically gliding up the Thames to demand the hand of Queen Victoria, or would you like me to sketch you a pattern of Cleopatra, sailing and rowing down the Nile to count Mark Antony, in voluptuous state, attended with beauteous boys, veiled only with bows and quivers, —as natural cupids should be,—on board her barge of gold and azure, sails of purple, and rigging of yellow silk, oars of silver, quarter-deck sofas of white figured satin, and awnings of rose-coloured damask. "Pooh!" ejaculated my charmer. "That's an ancient pattern for a carpet. I will have a modern one,—the Russian Fleet, as you have crayoned it, shall be under my feet." A clinching kiss was the reward for this patriotic spirit; and which ends the first part of this chapter upon nothing.

"The occasion on which Captain Craufurd," says the United Service Journal, "visited this fleet, was the curious ceremony of carrying Peter the Great's boat—grand papa de la flotte—through it. The force consisted of three mighty ships of 110 guns each, six of 84, and seventeen of 74, attended by nineteen large frigates, &c.; the whole commanded by an English veteran, Admiral Crown, and manœuvring under the exciting presence of their Sovereign. All the large ships were fitted with four very formidable guns on the lower deck, for throwing shells horizontally, one of which discharges a bomb of 120 lbs. at the rate of once every six minutes, with a noise said to be tremendous."—Huzza! the more Russian noise, the more British work,—two 32's, the one double-shotted, the other with grape and canister, each discharged six times only to the mortar's once, will silence it before the second discharge, particularly in an alongside fight; for I guess, the larger the mortar, as a ship's broadside gun, the less chance of effect; the murderous execution of the Victory's 68, at Trafalgar, proves that calibre sufficiently large for quick slaughter and destruction. "So this you call a chapter upon nothing, Tristram?" Oui, Monsieur, comme vous allez voir. "It was a strange feeling," said the Captain, "that came over me, as an Englishman and an officer of the British Navy, on finding myself at sea with twenty-six Russian line-of-battle ships, with nearly 30,000 men, better soldiers than they are sailors, and four months provisions on board. Knowing as I did, that for the protection of the coasts of my country, of our ports, of our mercantile shipping in the Baltic, the North Sea, and the Channel, we had but seven line-of-battle ships in a state of preparation, and those, I believe, not fully manned, I confess that, confident as I felt in the superior skill and activity of my countrymen, I almost trembled for the preservation of their ancient sovereignty of the sea." "Ah, lack-a-day! alas! gracious me!" exclaims Chloe, "I quite tremble at the bare idea of a Russian invasion." God preserve me from a Cossack's grasp!

Three Russian 110's, six 84's, and seventeen 74's, to frighten an English Officer out of his propriety! Nelson at the Nile went into battle with twelve 74's, one double-decked 50, and a small brig, with which he took, burnt, or destroyed, one 120, two 80's, and eight 74's; the Guillaume Tell, 80, and Generoux, 74, only escaping, out of 13 sail of the line, and two frigates out of four. Of the British Fleet, the largest was the Minotaur, of 640 men; the remainder were all, I believe, of the Majestic's or Orion's small class. Ships like the present Hercules, Talavera, Wellesley, &c., I would keep at home, in demonstration for the North Sea and Baltic service, two dozen of these forty thieves, with two 68's of a side, manned with 590 men each—one dozen razees of 50 guns, and half a dozen frigates of 36 guns;—32-pounders, like the Pique and Inconstant, would annihilate all the mighty 110's and the Redoubtable 84's, the Russians can bring from the Baltic against us. If they come before we can say "Jack Robinson," our Naval and Mercantile steamers by dozens will keep them at bay until the arrival of our fleet, and even in its absence, woe be to the unfortunate struggler in less than a seven-knot breeze, and to the whole if caught in a light air or calm. They would get a dose of British pills; for a braggadocia display of the Russian flag in enmity on Albion's coast, to frighten our belles, "as indigestible as the bonne-bouche the Raseskin Rowskimowmowsky offered to Baron Munchausen—a fricasée of pistols, with gunpowder and alcohol sauce."

It is evident we have as many first-rates and second-rates of 80 and 84 guns as the French and Americans, yet still a dozen more 80's, like the Vanguard, would be desirable, to be prepared against a combination of the squadrons of Sweden, Denmark, and Holland, and their union with the fleets of France or Russia. It is also as evident, that we are short of 50-gun frigates. Every maritime power is constructing first-class frigates, of 60 guns, and first-class two-decked ships, from 80 to 96 guns; I would, therefore, were I Lord Minto, cause an immediate examination of the said forty thieves, to discover a dozen of the defective, to be razeed to 50-gun frigates; and for every thief so disposed of, lay down an 80 of the Vanguard's class—the pride of the ocean—the admiration and the wonder of yon school of Sea-Serpent architecture. Here endeth this chapter of Nothing, by thy friend TRISTRAM.

Senior United Service Club, Jan. 21.

P.S.—My old antagonist, Regenerator, alias Droit, is referred to my Tristrams in Nos. 95, 135, 143, 145, 147, 158, and 153, on Naval Courts-Martial, for the answer to his "firebrand" lines in your last Gazette. One of the War, for want of spectacles, has overlooked the special clause respecting the conduct of crews of ships of war which are wrecked, lost, or destroyed. A Naval Officer should read something beyond the 36 Articles. T.

COMMANDER CRAUFURD, R.N.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I can assure you that Commander Craufurd made known in the proper quarter all the information he derived from his visit to the Baltic, in 1836, more than twelve months before he published his pamphlet, and that this very intelligent young officer does not deserve the censure of Sir John Barrow, which he fixes on him by charging him with this neglect. Commander Craufurd has not "fouled his nest;" but from a perusal of the "Flag-Officer's" alarming statement, and his apparent dread of foreign Navies—rather an odd feeling for a British Officer to express * * * I cannot bring myself to believe, even on the assurance of the Times, that the Rear-Admiral is genuine, but trust, for the honour of the profession, that he will turn up a brummagem. An Officer's name, hitherto irreproachable, although of no great repute, is bandied about the clubs, and mentioned without reserve. Surely, some "damned good-natured friend" must long since have apprized him of this. A FRIEND OF CAPTAIN CRAUFURD'S.

FLAG OFFICER.

SIR,—That many thanks are due to you for the very prompt, clear, satisfactory, and correct manner in which you have explained the true state of the Naval resources of this country, nobody will deny. In looking back to the friendly forebodings of the "Flag-Officer," who can avoid exclaiming,

"'Tis a pity when charming writers
Write of things that they don't understand."

The public mind, sometimes precipitate in its praises, but always ready enough with its censures, was evidently beginning to sink under the accumulated terror of the misfortunes with which we were threatened; and who without great apprehensions and increased patriotism, could reflect upon the fearful augurings of the "Flag-Officer," knowing the sad realities of the ambition of the Czar; the high price of bread, and the dreadful hurricanes; the murder of Lord Norbury, and the contemplated annihilation of all the aristocracy and landed proprietors (poor Lord Oxmantown); the hideous march of popery, and the spread of new ideas at Oxford; the strides gigantic of precursorism in Ireland, and the presence of Canadian rebels in England—real rebels in London even—and last, and not least, the obstinate continuance of Lord Melbourne at the Court of her most gracious Majesty. Frightful, indeed, was the aspect of affairs: but, in allusion to the "Flag-Officer," I am reminded of what somebody says somewhere, that

"Rich gifts wax poor when givers prove unkind."

We thank him for his good intentions, but he need not have frightened us so much.

It is amusing to observe the tender anxiety and the calm deliberation with which some persons will sit down for the purpose of seeing how far they can impose upon the credulity of good people; and it is still more amusing to watch the extraordinary disposition with which these good people meet their alarmists if they can only find an excuse. One can hardly say of them, that

"Malice will with joy the lie receive, Report, and what it wishes true, believe,"

but of their handy councillors one might possibly conjecture thus:

"What is the pang affects us most?
That liberty to speak one's mind is lost;
He is indeed a slave who dare not utter
His thoughts, nor 'gainst his cruel master mutter."

But do these alarmists ever consider the probable effects of their mis-statements, both at home and abroad? During the interregnum of terror which comprised the short sway of the opinions put forth by the "Flag-Officer," all Europe must have been in a quandary. We were evidently on the eve of a war; we were unprepared, and were to be thrashed, and England was to be made a Russian colony. France would not have hailed with much joy their new neighbours, and before long she would, to use an Irish expression, have committed a national suicide to save herself from slaughter, and thus spare the Russian Bear the trouble and fatigue of a conquest. What would have become of the other powers that be? Heaven only knows. But and England is England still, and proud and happy may we all feel that she has as little to fear at present from her foes as she ever had. The good old women may still live on in peace; and those of tenderer years, but still encumbered with the sweets of single blessedness, may yet (dear old maids!) preserve their cherished vows, and not be hurried into any rash measure of matrimony, in order to secure natural protectors in the event of an invasion! This, by-the-by, would prove a happy result of the "Flag-Officer's" force of imagination. Yours,

"Some ills are great when told, when tried are less,"

TUTISSIMUS.

HOW TO BREED A SUPERIOR RACE OF MEN.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Permit me to follow up my appeal to your countrymen, as to the necessity of adopting gymnastic exercises in both services, (and still better by all classes of the population *), by now showing, in my own but homely way, for I scorn the affectation of possessing either medical or surgical knowledge, how, by their well-regulated practice, such cultivators, besides approaching to the acquirement of former proportions confirmed by the bulky skeletons found, besides becoming useful to the State (as explained in my last), may also insure protection and prolongation of life, and are certain of becoming the parents of a race beaming with health and stamina; I may add courage, for is its effect not Lilliputian unless so supported, and by strength? All these qualifications, according to my rude notions, mainly depend upon—1. A good digestion to preserve a willing appetite. 2. Healthful lungs, actively and fully expanding, instead of partially; thus to confer fresh and sufficient supplies of oxygen to the blood, which, having become darker, and imbibed carbon, in its progress through the veins, although it had passed from the corporeal ventricle (of the heart) a bright red, is purified in its passage through the lungs, that is, provided a sufficient quantity of carbon is thrown off by respiration. 3. Similar relief by perspiration, and other cutaneous evaporation, in aid of the circulation, and to free the pores. 4. Restoration of tranquillity, by frequent relaxations from intense application, painful consideration, or anxiety. Now ALL these are powerfully promoted by Gymnastics! and falling like a gun doubly shotted, ALL are thwarted by indulgence!! Gymnastics, besides conferring energy, as necessary to health as the latter is to success and happiness, inculcate perseverance and a real contempt for pain, under daily increasing skill, activity, and daring; not only would they be the fittest but also the most emulating amusements for soldiers in barracks, but what alone ought to stimulate their adoption; they would wean them from the pot-house (and so would barrack kitchen gardens †), and yet this valuable mould, one in which the defenders of a country ought to be cast, till lately, has been doomed to indifference! Can it be because the majority of the wealthy are too prone to luxury and indolence to reconcile the trouble of setting a good example, or too jealous to permit inferiors to become superiors in manliness? an, I fear, unwelcome although fair question; I suspect they will not agree with Orville Dewey's assurance, that "there is a certain pressure of circumstances that is good for man. His body was not made for luxuries,—it sickens, it sinks, it dies under them. His mind was not made for indulgence,—it grows weak, effeminate, and dwarfish under that condition." Can your correspondent require a better explanation why your population "degenerates," and "rapidly?" The introduction of gunpowder may, although not a better, afford an additional one, for it closed the tournamental arena, and its preparative schools, where nobles and plebeians, nay, down to Cockney apprentices, met to qualify themselves for hand to hand combats, chopped at posts fixed to learn to apply the forte instead of the sword's foible, shot at poppinjays and marks, threw bars, hurled hammers, and other weights, tilted at quintains, to learn to take as well as to give shocks, wrestled, leapt, ran, and jumped, &c. Although certainly degenerated Olympics, they took their place in education, and were highly prized by our ancestors; they did not flatter themselves that at close quarters plebeians would show favour to nobility! nor could a dwarfish cripple's or a coward's finger, then, because aided by a paltry tube, and employing the infernal compound, send a deadly bullet through the heart of the bravest of the brave; or slay giants, however strong and heroic, by a pigmy imitation of Jupiter's thunder. But since hand to hand fights revive, and as manly skill and daring to self-protection in such are necessary, no exercises are more fitting to the times than gymnastics, to confer such qualifications, the equestrian included, and which (reluctantly because egotistically I must add) I purposely arranged. It is well known that, in furtherance of health, 42 cubic inches of oxygen are necessary for each of 20 common respirations per minute, thus to supply 840 inches of oxygen per minute to the lungs, and which ought to throw off 27 inches of carbon in that time, thus to rid the constitution of 11 ounces of charcoal every 24 hours. Well may it be said, that whatever tends to procure and ensure a free circulation of blood through the lungs, tends to give general health! to which I venture to add, that to double, and more, the exercise of the lungs by gymnastics must confer benefits multiplied in the same ratio!! Persons in a state of indolence rarely make even 15 inspirations per minute, and then not copiously; our usual movements ought to give 20 ample ones, smart walking or riding 40 to 60; fast running, 70 and upwards per minute; yet persons, content with rarely if ever more than 15, stinting themselves of oxygen, retaining carbon by frightful accumulation, generally giving a purple tinge to the skin, expect to be well, and to produce healthy children. May this hint tell!

That an active and even violent exercise of the lungs is indispensable to health, even infants confirm, for their, although to us unpleasant, crying is nature's substitute during their inability to perform other exercises; perhaps we aged become loquacious for similar reasons. Excepting always those who sacrifice (themselves) to gastronomy, most of the public singers, schoolmasters, and (working) clergymen are long lived; riding and fencing-masters more so still, the latter especially; and so do sailors, with all their fondness of spirits, live longer than soldiers, because theirs are more gymnastic than military movements; the cavalry again boasts of more aged men than the infantry, for riding, especially fast riding, starves the doctor (so mine says), nay, the very mischief to the constitution from the bottle the fox-hunter repairs by hard riding, for many of these are long-lived; but, if there is one exercise more preventive of consumption, &c. than another, it is the gymnasium's "giant's course;" it strengthens and enlarges the whole frame, the chest especially, and it compels exertion.

Your clever correspondent, Chevron, no doubt will take my hint about barrack gardens; and as an able foreign bayonet fencing instructor has furnished me with some observations on that art, and as I cannot plume myself with feathers either confided or given to me,—much less stolen ones, for Palmam qui meruit ferat is a golden although violated rule, I have recommended his requesting admission into your columns at your liberal hands. Permit me to solicit your pardon for my long and many intrusions, and to remain, Sir, your greatly obliged and obedient humble servant, DE BERENGER.

POLICE, YEOMANRY, AND VOLUNTEERS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—In the present perilous state of the manufacturing districts, it is generally admitted, that the Military force is all too few for prevention of simultaneous revolt, since, if scattered in small parties, those small parties possess at present no power of personal fight beyond that of the populace, whilst, if kept in masses, they must leave all the minor towns to take care of themselves. No corps of police can remedy this evil. If armed, policemen differ from regulars only in greater expense and less efficiency; if unarmed, they are plainly powerless against pistols, pouinards, and pikes. Besides, they cannot, living amongst the people, wholly escape contagion; and whilst prompt at one period to act with undue violence, there is also danger of their being tempted at others to take what seems the stronger side, as in the revolutions of France, Spain, and Naples, all which would have been crushed in the bud had the Government trusted to Yeomanry instead of gens-d'armes. Their physical power can in no respect exceed that of an equal number of Volunteers or Yeomanry, yet 10,000 Yeomanry or Volunteers may be kept in a perfect state of efficiency at less cost than 100 police. And it must always be recollected that the organisation of men of property as volunteers, produces moral results of great value, uniting them together, causing them to sink the accursed names of political faction, convincing Tories that Whigs may be loyal as themselves, and Whigs that Tories are often truer friends of the people than the most truculent democrats. In our present state of society, it revives all the excellences of feudalism without its faults, and by its early introduction demagogues would be deprived of all inducement to stir up disaffection, which could only result in their own defeat; at the same time, care should be taken to avoid clashing betwixt them and the regulars, and to prevent trained veterans from being placed under beardless boys.

The experience gained in 1798, however, seems lost upon our rulers. In that rebellion, two things were clearly proved,—first, that neither regular nor irregular Cavalry can approach insurgents armed with spears; second, that Infantry, unless trained to high perfection, can never pour in volleys with such accuracy as to check a rush of men resolved to close, and that once closed upon, the musket and bayonet become powerless as a baby's toy. It is often said, but I think without reflection, that Cavalry may disorder insurgents with carbine fire. Now the point-blank range of our present Light Dragoon carbines does not exceed thirty, nor their extremest power eighty yards. To fire at the full range is to waste powder foolishly; whilst if you ride up to the former distance, the pikes will dash upon your skirmishers before they can wheel off to re-load; for it must always be minded, that pikemen or faucheurs, in any formation above six deep, are perfectly capable to keep off Cavalry without forming a hollow square. The defeat of Dundas with the 5th and 9th Dragoons by two hundred spears should never be forgotten.

Infantry, on the other hand, are awkwardly situated in anything like broken ground where Cavalry cannot co-operate;—if they extend, they lose all power of resisting a rush by men who, having neither stocks, cross-belts nor knapsacks, vault over obstacles to a soldier impassable; whilst if they do not extend their flanks, are in perpetual danger, and the shots of the enemy's skirmishers tell sadly on their exposed formation. Some idea may be formed of the rapid manner in which the pike does its work, when wielded by stern hands, from the fact that, at Gorey, Sir W. W. Wynn, the moment McManus's Grenadiers exchanged shots with the insurgents, ordered his clansman, Capt. Wynn, with a squadron of Welsh, to their aid; but before the ancient Britons could gallop over three hundred yards, every soldier was speared, and the captured guns pointed against the reinforcement which rode to the rescue. The cannon were regained, the enemy's Fusiliers sabred, but no impression could be made on the serried mass of pikes fourteen feet long.

* Even Sultan Mahmoud has recently issued a decree curtailing the Turks in their habits of indulgence, as rendering them weaker than the Franks, ordering the former to take more salutary exercise, &c.

† If such were added, and parcelled out in small plots, to be let out to soldiers at a small monthly rent, the produce to remain their own, the habits of industry would be cherished; health, strength, and spade-skill would be promoted; not only idleness, but its consequences, drunkenness, dissipation, and theft would be materially lessened; and the moral character of the men would be improved by example and emulation. Regiments exchanging barracks could take or each other the standing crops by valuation; to be sold in lots to the best bidders in a succeeding regiment by the Quartermaster, the valuation having been paid by him. Inculculable would be the salutary result of such a measure.

Since then it is necessary to form volunteer corps, and since the bayonet must be to volunteers, as we have shown, a useless weapon, if opposed to men with swords or pikes, what reason can be adduced why they should ape the regulars, and attempt evolutions which they cannot properly perform? What can they want in square formations or échellon movements? A man might as well set up for a musician on the strength of six lessons on the violin!

All such absurdities serve only to excite jealous feelings. Neither the uniform, arms, nor commissions of volunteer corps should be copied from the line. The first point must be to give them personal confidence in their own chivalry. To do so they must be taught to defend themselves not less than to attack their enemies. The next is to have them always ready at a moment's notice. Let them have a cork cap, covered with black cloth, and silver band, black braided uniform, with dark grey trousers made to button on; black varnished sling-belt with cutlass, pouch, containing twenty cartridges, attached to the belt, and in towns a brace of bolster pistols, in country districts a cavalry carbine, or, if preferred, a double-barrelled fowling-piece, slung across the body ready for use.

For volunteers a two-deep formation seems ill calculated to give confidence. No continental regulars can in this way be brought to charge; three deep, thirty-three inches in rank and the same in file, seems to me the least which can be accepted for actual service with half trained men, and I should myself prefer to charge six deep. The front rank should be selected for skirmishers, composed of such as could give time for extra drills. Platoon firing, &c., need not be practised by men armed with, and relying chiefly upon, the sword. A volley, with sabre slung from wrist, followed by an instant charge, is the only way in which pikes can be disposed of; whilst for defence of works men should reserve their discharge till white-of-the-eye distance, and then continue to blaze away individually as fast as they can load without returning the ramrod; the rear rank reserving their fire. Less than six months' incessant practice will not enable recruits to fire in any other mode with precision if called out in earnest, and must therefore be regarded as wholly thrown away.

In the sword exercise, for volunteer foot, great attention should be paid to cuts three and four, as protecting the private whilst annoying his adversary, and the pike and bayonet parries, with back of the weapon, should also be practised carefully. One and two, five and six, and still less the St. George, should not be taught at all, as Englishmen are apt to deliver these cuts improperly, and will deliver them by instinct wherever they can do so properly, whether taught or no. ARTHUR.

P.S.—What would be the effect of a volunteer corps armed solely with Roman sword and target to keep off brickbats and stones? I should prefer it to mounted yeomanry.

BAYONET FENCING.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—My friend, the Baron de Berenger, although invited by several of your correspondents to give his opinion upon what the Maitre des Armes (for so he calls himself), in your 304th No., gives as his "drill, and attack, and defence," not only has advised my doing so as introductory to a little work I am writing on that art, but also has assured me of your kind support in all matters likely to benefit the service; allow me, then, I beg, to inform the military circles, through your pages, that bayonet fencing is of infinitely greater importance than the author of that drill would make them believe; for, besides being available against the swords of cavalry (for he shows no more), it is equally so against the bayonet and the lance, the latter now being allowed as more formidable than the sword: but more importantly still can its scientific use be employed, because most successfully, in repelling the general attacks—that is, in columns—of either infantry or cavalry, by resistance offered to either bayonet, sword, or lance. The author of the article in question misleads the public by his theory, which confines the bayonet's use as against the sword alone. He has entirely overlooked the most important application of boyonet fencing; for, instead of being merely a mode of self-defence, single-handed, and against single Dragoons sword in hand, mounted or dismounted, and to which he has restricted himself in that article, it enables the infantry to act EN MASSE, with their bayonets to defend themselves against ANY of the three weapons mentioned, also employed EN MASSE! The practicability of combating thus being deemed of immense importance, caused the art of bayonet fencing to be adopted by nearly all the armies of the European powers; and, as soon as its changes had made it useful upon a large scale, the modes taught in fencing schools not only were superseded, because applicable to individual conflict only, but the former being in high estimation, became a principal part, ranking equal with that of the manual of the soldier's drill, and on principles strictly military.

My having not only held a commission, but having been appointed also as one of the instructing officers of the bayonet fencing, in an army where it was brought to the highest perfection, emboldens me to offer your gallant readers my humble ideas as to the best mode of tuition—that which will be found as most likely to make the soldier expert, and keep him in constant practice as to all the branches of an exercise which ought to become of solid because practical use to the army; for, unless the art of bayonet fencing can be reduced to regular rules, such as may become an inseparable part of the drill, it never can hope to be of practical utility.

The general divisions of the drill of bayonet fencing, whereby to resist the bayonet charges or those of light or heavy cavalry, may be divided into three:—

No. 1. Preparatory instructions to a squad in single file of the movements of the body alone, and without using either musket or bayonet.

No. 2. Embraces the words of command and tuition how to perform, against either infantry or cavalry, the most suitable feints, thrusts, and parries.

No. 3. The words of command, &c., when two parties are taught to combat against each other.

The instructions of No. 1 being too voluminous to admit being compressed into a general article suitable to your pages, causes my passing on to No. 2, as including four different movements, and how the bolding of the musket should vary—1st, against a bayonet; 2d, against a lance; 3d, against a sword; 4th, how to parry with an infantry sword against a bayonet, when a soldier has broken his bayonet in action.

The Maitre d'Armes having touched upon one of these movements, I will beg leave to point to his theoretical deficiency when, using the two first commands against the sword "guard" and "lunge," he speaks of a distance of eighteen inches between the legs. Twenty-four inches ought to be the smallest distance, with an increase proportionate with the soldier's size; for, unless so varied, his position can never be strong or settled. So far from bending the knees slightly, as directed by that author, a perpendicular line, dropped from the right knee, should fall at the end of the toes of that foot; and so should a similar perpendicular from the left knee also touch the end of those of the left foot. The weight of the body (and which should be held rather back) should rest entirely on the right leg, to leave the left quite free for changes of front. The bending of the knees is necessary to render the attack more difficult, for it facilitates the defence of the whole body. The right hand holds the musket, placing its knuckles within the hollow of the right hip, with the guard close to the body, the firelock downwards, because the thrusts are to be performed by extending the right arm and hand to the full length, the flat side of the butt being placed between the wrist joint and the elbow, for, otherwise, the thrusts or pushes could not be made quick and strong enough, and an adversary might easily knock the musket out of the assailant's hand. As to the left arm and hand, instead of being placed so as to raise the muzzle to the height of the peak of an opponent's cap, the elbow should rest close to the body, placing the palm supporting the barrel about midway in a line horizontal to the left breast, and forming an acute angle with the shoulder; thereupon, on making a thrust by extending the right arm and hand to the full length, the point of the bayonet will be raised to a height equal with a horseman's middle, being the required elevation.

The lunge is not to be performed by stepping about eighteen inches with the left foot, as directed by the Maitre d'Armes, for the distance between the feet should be doubled, and therefore will be about forty-eight inches—a mode of lunging more particularly applicable against infantry—since twenty-four inches, the usual distance, not only is ample but best against cavalry swords; the more especially as every feint thrust must be followed by a side jump or twist to change front, too difficult to be performed on feet forty-eight inches apart.

I may conclude by confidently asserting, that the theoretical sketch given by the author aforementioned can only serve for the bayonet fencing of two individuals, for never can it be applied to the instruction of large masses of infantry; wherefore, instead of extending my details, I now shall content myself with having pointed out that, as first elements of the art, the Maitre d'Armes has held out false principles to commit an error of the greatest importance as regards its influence on the other divisions of bayonet fencing. Moreover, perceiving from numerous letters in your Journal in support of the bayonet fencing, that the attention of military men is drawing earnestly to the adoption of a science so truly important to the Army, and having for some time past collected every necessary material for publishing a little work on the improved use of the bayonet, I shall feel pleasure in being allowed to submit it for your scrutiny as soon as translation into English facilitates its publication. I have the honour to be, &c.,

Lieutenant in the late Polish Army.

THE BAYONET.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—In your number for 24th Nov. last I had the honour of submitting a system of drill for musket and bayonet fencing, intended for the defence of infantry against cavalry, when the former have become broken, or suddenly attacked by the latter, when extended as skirmishers; and I have been gratified by remarks thereon by your valuable and able correspondents, Arthur and the Baron de Berenger; also, an observation from your correspondent Chevron; and as the Baron, in his last communication, hints at my keeping a "good reserve," I beg leave to trouble you once more on the subject, and to offer a few remarks in reply to their observations.

In the first place, with respect to Arthur's preferring the right foot in advance, and the butt resting in left hand, at the position of guard, I beg to observe, that in compiling this drill I endeavoured as much as possible to unite simplicity with utility, and to bring it within the sphere of the meanest capacity: keeping this in view, I humbly submit, that drawing the right foot back (consequently leaving the left in advance), independent of throwing the swordsman out of measure, while the musketeer retains his, is the most natural to the soldier, being accustomed to it in several motions of the manual and platoon exercises; the hold, also, which it gives him of his weapon is perfectly natural, and one to which he is accustomed at the port, charge, &c. Taking all these into consideration, I presumed that the soldier, when suddenly attacked, was more likely to assume a position, which practice had made habitual to him, than resort to one to which he had been accustomed only, on some twenty or thirty occasions, when at bayonet drill. With respect to introducing vertical cuts with the bayonet, I beg to assure Arthur that I had not lost sight of their importance, more especially when applied to the nose of a horse, a tender part, but considered it useless to introduce them, until some improvement be made in the method of fixing the bayonet, the present one being so likely to fall off on the first application of it; these, with an advantageous method of applying the toe of the butt and cock nail, in dispersing mobs, I shall be ready to submit, with many other minutiæ, when the authorities shall manifest an inclination to adopt them.

With respect to Arthur's observation respecting a defence against the lance, I beg to observe, that the counter of carte, with its double, I consider a sufficient defence against any point, either of lance, pike, sword, or bayonet, and when taught as laid down in my drill practice, with the assistance easily derived from my first and second guards, I conceive I have sufficiently provided for its defence, but should be most happy to see something more effectual suggested. I am happy to agree with Arthur on the subject of hanging guards; they certainly afford the surest defence and readiest returns.

As the Baron de Berenger has not favoured us with his promised remarks on my bayonet drill (for which I have been waiting the last fortnight) I have little to observe with respect to him. I wish, by the bye, he would favour us with a description of his patent bayonet. I, however, decidedly agree with him, that shortening the musket, and adding a sword bayonet to it, would never answer for bayonet fencing. There are two or three good and sufficient reasons for not shortening the musket; it might be made much lighter, without detracting from its efficiency, and I should prefer a smaller and lighter bayonet than the present one, made of first-rate materiel, and to fix as those of the Rifle Brigade, or in some other secure manner. I should like to see the waist-belt adopted, and the present killing head-dress abolished; the weight of the knapsack pouch, and other unnecessarily heavy articles of equipment reduced in weight, so as to leave the British soldier, when brought into contact with the enemies of his country, the full advantages of those (as compared with other nations superior masculine faculties with which it has pleased Providence to endow him. To your correspondent Chevron's remark I reply—I bide my time.

And now having trespassed, I fear, to too great a length on your valuable pages, I beg to subscribe myself your obedient servant, MAITRE DES ARMES.

January 15*th.*

On Friday next, in demy 8vo, price 7s 6d,

THE NEW ARMY LIST, exhibiting the Rank, Standing and various Services of every Officer in the Army on full pay, including the Ordnance and Royal Marines, distinguishing those who have served in the Peninsula, who have received Medals or other distinctions, and who have been wounded, and in what actions, with the period of Service, both on full and half-pay. Giving also the date of every Officer's Commissions, and distinguishing those procured by purchase.

Published by Smith, Elder, and Co., Cornhill, and sold also at the Office of the Naval and Military Gazette, 19, Catherine-street, Strand.

To Readers and Correspondents.

Subscribers wishing to bind the N. & M. Gazette may obtain at the Office, 19, Catherine-street; of Mr Burrill, Library, Chatham; and of Mr. Yates, Bookseller, Dublin, such back Numbers as are not out of print.

If "M. H." will take the trouble to look to our Paper of four weeks since, viz. 5th Dec., he will there find the Promotions of Lieut. Higginson, Surgeons Goodridge, Prinsle, and Le Grand; with the Appointments of Commander Stopford to the "Zebra," and Lieuts Owen and Thursby to the Coast Guard, which appeared in the Port Papers of this week. Should he, or any other correspondent, imagine cause for complaint, we advise a previous reference to our back numbers.

We cannot bring to our recollection the letter mentioned by "Perseus."

"Syphax" is probably right in his conclusions, but although we agree with him, generally, his letter is far too political for our columns, which are, and ever have been, strictly independent of party. We have always evinced a decided aversion to intrude on the United Service any political opinions: the only party we oppose are the Radicals and false Economists. We have had sufficient opportunities of estimating, at their real value, most party writers, but in the course of our career a more convincing proof has not offered of their venality than in their present conduct towards Sir John Barrow. This gentleman has hitherto been regarded (like the Ex-Secretary, Mr. John Wilson Croker) as an Ultra-Tory writer, but because from, as we believe, a sense of common justice to the Navy, he thinks proper to disabuse the public mind, and to show, by incontrovertible facts and figures, the real state of the British Navy, his hitherto political partizans, great and little, become his furious opponents, and put no limit to their mad and puerile revilings. Such is the sickening course of party, but it has one good effect,—it proves that the Welfare of the Service does not enter into the views of such writers, and consequently every day will tend to lessen the little influence they could ever be supposed to have over Naval and Military men, whose only party is their country.

The above was scarcely in type when we received the following:—

To the Editor of the Times

SIR,—The Times is a paper too powerfully written and too extensively read to admit of its statements being treated with indifference by any one who finds his character unjustly impugned. Censure me as much as you please, but don't misrepresent me. You more than insinuate that the supplemental chapter in the "Life of Lord Anson" was written as a defence of Lord Minto and the Board. You call it the "Manifesto of Lord Minto." I had hoped that the declaration made in the short introduction would have been deemed worthy of credit. I therein disclaimed all knowledge, on the part of every individual of the Board of Admiralty, of what I was writing, or had written; and I now state that the first and only knowledge Lord Minto had of it was from the printed book. I repeat the disclaimer; and I also repeat, that my only motive was to disabuse the British public and foreign nations, by a refutation of the erroneous and disparaging statements that had gone abroad regarding the British Navy. What other motives could I have had? I have received no favours from the present Board of Admiralty—I have asked none—I expect none. I do my duty to the best of my ability, Conservative as I am, ever have been, and ever shall be.

As this is the only notice I shall ever take of anonymous attacks from any quarter, I request you will favour me with its insertion, and then censure me whenever you may think I deserve it. I am, Sir, your obedient servant, JOHN BARROW.

Last week a notification, from a Plymouth Paper, of the death of Captain Bennett, late of the "Rainbow," appeared in the N. & M. G. We heartily rejoice to find, from the following letter, that the gallant officer is in excellent health, and we hope he will have opportunities for he further display of his active and enterprising spirit:—

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Having observed in your Naval and Military Gazette of the 19th instant, that you thought proper to book me for the other world, without my consent, I think it right to inform you, that I am still in the land of the living, for which agreeable fact should you feel the least doubt upon the subject) I can with much satisfaction refer you to the worthy parson of our parish, whose roast beef and old port I had the pleasure of punishing this day, and where a dead man I believe his reverence will certify that I performed no contemptible part. If you feel quite satisfied, after this statement, that I remain still in statu quo, you will perhaps do me the favour to contradict your statement of my exit in your next publication. I am, &c

THOMAS BENNETT, late Captain of the Rainbow.

Hereford, January 22nd.

We have no knowledge of the Writer in a contemporary Journal referred to by "Civis," and we make it a rule not to meddle in such matters. Our own affairs are more than sufficiently occupy our time.

In reply to several correspondents we beg to assure them, that as yet tonnage has not been taken up for drafts from the Depots of Regiments serving in India. We believe that tenders will be called for in a few days, but that embarkations will not take place before the end of February or the beginning of March next. Several large vessels are advertised to sail about that time, and we think it probable that they may tender and be accepted for troops.

We regret that, from the length of Lieut-Col Angerstein's manly defence of Captain Craufurd, we are prevented inserting it;—but we have noticed the subject. "Chevron's" 2nd letter is too long for this week. We will attend to the suggestions of "Lighthob," also to "C. B.," and "Out of the Service" on the Coast Guard.

"Nauticus" is right. The "Ocean," "Victory," and "San Josef," are not included in the twenty-one sail of the line described as in commission. The four months' provisions principally consist of rye bread, stock fish, and sour kraut—poor fare to cherish those who are to try conclusions with cannon balls!

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 26, 1839.

THE position of British affairs in India seems critical. Though the north-west frontier may become the arena rather of intrigue than of warfare, still we may find it requisite to treat with an armed force on the spot; for the seating of Shah Sooja-ool-Moolkh on the throne of Cabul will be found a matter of greater facility, than upholding him there amid the feuds and clashing interests of petty but petulant chieftains, ill brooking the restraints we must impose on their lawless and Rob Roy practices. Years will be requisite to reduce the heterogeneous mass of Affghauns into union under a monarchy, and to convince these warlike tribes that the arts of peace are more conducive to wealth, happiness, and freedom, than intestine wars, plunder, and rapine. The Government of India will find "in all its borders" full occupation for its troops; for while no inconsiderable portion must proceed to Cabul and even remain there, in distant directions we observe that forces are required. In Nepaul affairs have assumed a gloomy aspect, and an army of observation must be on foot to meet any sudden outburst from the hills of the north-eastern States. Nor is the Indian Army without occupation elsewhere—Burmah and her barbarian king treat us with contempt, and a high tone of independence which we can scarcely much longer endure, and retain the respect of the many eastern princes who now do us reverence. In short, it is evident to all who know India, that unless matters take a very different turn in Burmah and Cabul from what experience leads us to expect, a very large increase to Her Majesty's European Troops in India must be made early in the present year. Our information warrants us in asserting, that very urgent demands for European troops have been made from India, and that the want of infantry to meet the supply required is so great, that many of the regiments which have returned from foreign service not two years ago must be again sent abroad this summer.

WE understand that two more companies of the Royal Artillery have been demanded for service in Canada. Should these, or even an augmentation in men to those companies at present stationed there, be granted, a considerable increase to the strength of the corps will be requisite; and as the reliefs are now much in arrear, it is hoped that additional companies will be raised, for without such it will be impossible to carry on the duty with regularity. In the last Session of Parliament a grant was made for three additional companies, which would have been of some small assistance; but in place of the companies, five gunners and drivers and one bombardier were added to each of the present existing companies, a matter, as it appears to us, of no benefit towards carrying on the reliefs, and but a very small increase to the strength of the detachments in the several foreign commands.

ARRANGEMENTS have been recently made respecting the regiments in New South Wales and Van Diemen's Land, which promise to be productive of material benefit to the efficiency of those corps. In future, only 659 men of each regiment will embark for Australia, and 110 will remain in the recruiting company. Men to complete the 28th, 50th, 51st, and 80th regiments to 659 each, will be immediately embarked, and, as we observed in our last number, a freight vessel will be taken up for their conveyance. The depot of the 51st will be formed as soon as 659 men shall have embarked. By this judicious plan a depot will retain a full company of old and steady soldiers, available for recruiting and ordinary home duty, and for the drill of recruits—a measure preparatory, we can scarcely doubt, to the extension of a new system to all depots of regiments serving abroad. A more efficient depot formation has been long much desiderated by Commanding Officers, and we feel sincere pleasure that this expedient and important change will be made, in the present year, in one of the most improvable departments of our Military regime.

THE depots of the regiments serving in India are fast filling up their supernumeraries, and at the present rate of recruiting, the whole will be complete before the end of next month. A friend, who has just returned from Chatham, informs us that he counted nearly 1,000 recruits at drill under the non-commissioned officers of the various depots superintended by the Adjutant. The men are generally short, but stout, and had made wonderful progress during the last month. It is supposed that about 500 men will be embarked early in the month of March for the Presidencies of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, and the remainder in the course of the two following months.

WE rejoice to state that the Military Authorities have, one and all, highly approved of the New Army List, and ordered it for their respective departments.

THE able exposé of Sir John Barrow, circulated far and wide in the columns of those influential Journals, the Times and Chronicle, has rendered any farther discussion of the relative force of our own and foreign Navies quite unnecessary. Although some elaborate mystifications have been attempted, nothing can controvert the manly honest statement of a gentleman, whose character is above suspicion, commanding the respect his high reputation so well entitles him to from men of all parties.

We shall now fulfil the intention expressed last week, and make a few observations upon that section of his Supplemental Chapter which treats of "Manning the Navy," and commences in the following words: "Notwithstanding all the clamour that has been raised, there is not the slightest ground of apprehension respecting the efficiency of our ships of war; but the case is different with regard to the manning of them. It is here where a shoe is likely to pinch. We may crowd into our harbours of Hamoaze, Portsmouth, the Thames, and Medway, as many as we please of those 'moveable fortresses,'—those 'stupendous masses,'—there to repose on their shadows, but without men they will not, to pursue Mr. Canning's metaphor, 'ruffle their plumage and start into life and animation.' The important question then is, what means are to be adopted equal to the manning of the fleet on the breaking out of hostilities?" This is indeed the question, and one which the successive Governments, that have either evaded or suffered it to remain in abeyance for nearly a quarter of a century of profound peace, will be required to answer when the necessity arrives.

Sir John Barrow gives his opinion, that, on the first breaking out of hostilities, recourse must be had to the legal and constitutional measure of impressment. Without raising the question of the legality, much less the constitutionality, of that measure, we will at once admit this much,—as much, we imagine, as the unprejudiced persons whom the worthy Baronet alludes to are likely to concede—that the power of impressing is a sacred right, vested in the prerogative, which it would be injurious to question or disturb; but we are certain nine-tenths of the community are decidedly of opinion that such a power should never be exercised, unless under circumstances which rendered the necessity imperative.

The "commencement of hostilities" must depend upon our relations with foreign countries. If we have a wrong to redress, it is natural that we should be prepared to enforce our diplomatic remonstrances; and if, on the other hand, we encountered on any point a disagreeable feeling, likely to produce a rupture, we should also prepare for war. In either case, it is not likely that war can come upon us without some intimation of its approach; and therefore no necessity can, under such circumstances, be pleaded for the adoption of impressment, in the first instance,—in fact, when it should be the dernier ressort, after reasonable offers had been held out to the seamen to enter, and they had slighted or refused them.

Sir John Barrow is of opinion that pressing should never be executed on shore—nor indiscriminately—nor under general warrants; but, we would ask, if any exception is made, or sanctuary afforded, how is the measure to be successful? Seamen will naturally fly on shore under apprehension of pressgangs, or they will take refuge afloat, under the American flag. Now, unless they can be reclaimed in both instances, the power is futile, certain to involve us in quarrels, and would come into operation, not even under the same advantages as formerly, but clogged with conditions which would render its exercise ineffectual.

But it is folly to dwell on this, to qualify or concede this point or that: the practice must be either exercised under all circumstances and at all risks, or not at all; and our opinion is, that it should never be put in operation at the "breaking out of hostilities,"—very far from it; but reserved until every reasonable means of obtaining the seamen's voluntary service had failed of success. Sir John Barrow has set forth figures to show, that during the last war 47,000 seamen were employed in Letters of Marque. Not a man was pressed on that duty. They were all volunteers, and sufficient, as he truly states, to form the crews of fifty sail of the line, with the necessary proportion of smaller vessels. The pay of these men was somewhat higher—not a great deal higher—than seamen in the Navy; and they were induced by the hopes of prize-money. Now the man-of-war's man has quite as good a chance of prize-money, less risk of capture, besides many advantages, such as pension if wounded, &c., which the privateer's man has no claim to; and it is unreasonable to suppose, but that, if proper inducements were offered, and the wages during war approximated to the merchant's service, the Navy would be greatly preferred by the majority of seamen.

The expenses of impressment have never perhaps been truly stated; at the lowest estimate, they must be very great, and would, if thrown into wages, very probably produce the increased sum required. But impressment is not only a question of expense, but of impolicy, by lessening the amount of seamen, and driving thousands into hiding or expatriation at the very moment we require them in greater numbers.

If 50,000 seamen,—a greater number than ever we possessed in the Royal Navy, when the whole number of blue jackets employed exceeded 100,000,—if 50,000 seamen were drawn from the merchant's, and induced to enter the Queen's service to-morrow, it would cause but slight inconvenience, because the clause in 3 and 4 Wm. IV., cap. 54, which provides that three-fourths of the crew shall be British subjects, would, as is usual in time of war, be annulled, and all the foreign seamen in our ports immediately engaged as substitutes. But if it were attempted to impress this number, it must be by seizing every man that could be found, and embargoing our trade.. Neither is the practice of engaging foreigners objectionable, because, at the return of peace, they are discharged, and replaced by our native seamen; and if not employed by us in war, they would be serving under the flag of our enemies, and increase their strength in the very point where they are most deficient.

Foreigners consider it strange, incredible, when they are told, that, although possessed of more seamen than the whole world besides, with riches unbounded, we should require and oblige the men, on whose courage and loyalty our national security depends, to serve for (comparatively) inadequate wages, and all to effect the saving of some few thousands of pounds, whilst we are lavishing millions to subsidise worthless or cowardly allies. If, indeed, there did not exist sufficient seamen for both services, there might be some reason in insisting, that, by fair means or foul, the fleet should be first manned. But the contrary is the case, and it will every day become more palpable, as we persevere in cultivating our resources, and making our own service more palatable to seamen than the service of foreigners. The single act of pressing would at one blow undo all that has been accomplished in furtherance of this object.

Sir John Barrow makes some observations upon the impolicy of turning over the seamen formerly employed in the blockade to the Treasury, and rendering that service a drain to the Navy of its best men, instead of supplying drafts, as was the case on the old establishment, in seasons of emergency. We shall have some observations to make on this point next week; in the mean time, we trust the Board of Admiralty will not be induced, by any argument that their worthy Secretary has advanced, to diverge from the course they have successfully pursued for some years past, of bettering the seaman's condition, and by securing to him fair and liberal treatment, eventually inducing him to prefer the Navy to every other service afloat. It will then be found, that should a season of danger arrive, even if unprepared, the seamen will not be insensible to their country's call; and, we imagine, this consummation might be materially furthered by adopting some plan which would bring a portion of our merchant seamen occasionally in association with the Naval service, so that they may become practically acquainted with the state of matters, and the many advantages to which they would be entitled for serving therein.

We cannot have better evidence of the manning of the Navy, than the following letter from a seaman of the Russell:—

King's Head, Sheerness, 22d Jan., 1839.

Mr. Editor,—I can't say that I lay down my marline spike, because, worse luck, it is out of use, my good ship being paid off; but I lay down my pipe to take up my pen, to tell you, in my humble way, the satisfaction I felt in reading in your Paper some remarks on a work published by our Admiralty Secretary, Mr. Barrow, in defence of that service which I am proud of belonging to. Such a man is a tower of strength among us; long may he continue in his honourable office, for in him poor Jack will find a friend—he is no Croker.

Now, Mr. Editor, what I was about to say is this, that I have served in the Navy many years, and well know that it was never in a better state than as regards its equipment, condition, and discipline. (In the war it might have been, because, as the old heads say, "it blew harder then.") I have just been paid off here from a liner, the Russell, and take her as one proof out of many, if you like. We fitted out at this place, and on the fourteenth day from commencing work left Sheerness, and cast anchor at the Little Nore, having been manned in that time mostly from London, and principally by our own officers. Well, that's not much; the same thing can and ought to be done again. After our period of service home we comes, and in seven short winter working days, at such a season, and such a place as this, with wind and weather against us, and our stores and tanks having to be returned by lighters to Deptford and Chatham, and in the meantime a liner, almost hanging fire, dependent on the wind and tide to bring the vessels back for reloading,—I say amid all this, deny it who can, in seven short winter working days we were paid off, and this, mind you, by allowing the ship's company liberty to the shore, and the weather frequently prevented the men getting off to their work. Now, taking this as a poor specimen, think you, Sir, that our Navy is in a bad state? If a small line-of-battle ship, forty short of complement, can do this, what may not the country expect from "powerful" ones?

Now, as to the discipline and disposition of our sailors, I would ask the Commissioners if we came drunk to the pay-table? No; and two days before paying off (Sunday) we were clean for muster, as usual; and on being mustered by the ship's books, but three blue jackets missed their muster, and they came off afterwards: what's more, ask if the men did not honourably pay their hamboat bills. Does not all this show the good disposition of a ship's company? No, no, Mr. Editor, take my poor word for it, the crews afloat are a good-conditioned set of men. If the officers will do their duty, no fear for us.

Why, out of our crew, we have had several warrants made: there was Jim Woodman, Bill Davis, and Deb Cousens, and six were recommended to the Admiralty for the medals and gratuities, and sixteen, from character and choice, have been taken into the Coast-Guard; and hang me if our chief Boatswain's Mate, Jim Morris, what joined us from Endymion, wasn't considered such a good fellow, that the Sheerness folks made him a Freemason the day after payment.

Avast heaving! in speaking of my brother Blues, I musn't forget my shipmates, the Jorge, although, leave a marine alone to take care of himself, and if he can't, he can always get my Lord George (as one of our non-commissioned Officers used to say) to speak for him. I would like to ask the Officer at Chatham, if he could wish to see a cleaner better-looking set of fellows march into barracks from service than the Russell's. Our soldiers left the ship three hours before payment; we didn't want any looking after, although I wonder Mr. Commissioner wasn't afraid of some of the riff-raff running off with his money-box: but no, he had a better opinion of a sailor, being one himself; but I did hear though, and if so it's a capital joke, that he paid the Middys last—a good reason, Jack was gone, and it being dark, they served as a guard to keep off the Sheerness sharks: and God knows, some of my old shipmates have been pretty well cleaned out, flying light like a collier—some have even lost their dunnage, and are all ready for another ship.

Well, Mr. Editor, as the above is nothing but the naked truth, I hope you will print it, because when Jack has such an example set him of "Flag-Officers," "Captains," &c. &c., writing in newspapers, he can't be blamed now for joining at the Nore in the mutiny. I liked my officers, I was always respected by them, and I wish them well wherever they go: I should be glad to sail with any of them again; and as to the Russians coming, let them come when they will, they'll find men in all ships as true-hearted and loyal, as

One of the Russell's Crew.

And to this we will append a letter, showing the groundless fears of the Alarmists on another point, —that of Naval Gunnery:—

To the Editor of the Times.

United Service Club, Jan. 23.

Sir,—Having observed a paragraph in the leading article of the Times of this day's date, containing a doubt of the efficiency of the bored-up 32-pounders, I beg leave to correct the mis-statements it contains as to those grounds. In 1833 or 1833, the late General Miller, Inspector-General of Artillery (whose fame as an artillerist and founder of cannon is above praise), proposed to bore up the 24-pounders of 40 and 41 cwt. to 32-pounders, and to substitute them for 18-pounders. The Board of Admiralty approved of his proposal. A gun of this sort was then sent to Her Majesty's ship Excellent, where it was found to range with the 18-pounders, the charge of powder being "in both cases" the same. This is mainly attributable to the reduction of the windage, an improvement which had long been recommended, and which other nations had previously adopted. Its recoil was not inconveniently great, its penetration and power of fracturing and splintering timber was found to be greater than that of the 18 pounders. In consequence of the recommendation of the Inspector General, and the reports made by me on the trial of these guns, the Vestal, of 26 guns, was armed with them. The reports of her Captain, and those of others, fully confirmed what has been stated above as to the bored-up 32-pounders. It may be well to add, that one of the guns, which has since been bored up (the Congreve's, when a 24-pounder), formed part of the Queen Charlotte's armament at the battle of Algiers. It is on record, that these guns went through the whole of that long and severe action without an accident. The other 24-pounder gun, of corresponding length, which has been bored-up, is Bloomfield's,—it was cast to compete with Congreve's, and it is preferred to it by many able artillerists. Two other guns have also been bored-up—the 32 cwt. 32-pounders, from Bloomfield's improved power 24-pounder, 6 feet 6 inches long, as a substitute for 12-pounder guns on the main decks of the small class of three deckers, and the 25 cwt. 32-pounders, of 6 feet, from an 18-pounder of unnecessarily heavy construction, as substitutes for carronades, in small frigates incapable of carrying heavier guns, their efficiency and superiority over carronades was proved in the action between the British frigates Imogene and Andromache and the Chinese forts. It may be satisfactory to those who apprehend that the metal of these guns has been too much reduced to learn, that out of 700 guns which have been bored up, not one has given way under the customary proofs, and that a very severe trial of these guns in rapid firing, with double shot, was made some time since at Woolwich, through which they passed without damage. It appears clear, therefore, that the substitution of 32-pounders (ranging with 18-pounders, penetrating deeper, splintering more, and bearing the double-shotting charge well) for 18-pounders and 12 pounders, has greatly increased the force and efficiency of each of Her Majesty's ships in which the arrangement has been adopted.—I have, &c.,

THOMAS HASTINGS, Capt. H.M.S. Excellent.

We noticed last week that another Military Candidate had been announced for a seat in the East India Direction—an officer who served in India uninterruptedly for five-and-thirty years, and was long in situations of important responsibility. The Testimonials put forth by the friends of Colonel Galloway, C.B., are flattering to the honourable career of that gallant and scientific officer, and convince us that he deserves the strenuous support of the Proprietors, whose votes he is ambitious to obtain. From these Testimonials we shall extract the letter of an officer in whom the Indian Army takes the greatest pride, one of its most talented members, who, in sickness or health, has always powerfully advocated its interests, and who, in his retirement from active service, has been a most munificent patron of the best institutions of his country. Maj.-Gen. Sir H. Worsley, G.C.B., has addressed the following letter to the Chairman of the Meeting of the friends and supporters of Colonel Galloway:—

Sir,—It is with much concern that I find myself compelled, by severe indisposition, to forego the satisfaction I should have had in attending your meeting, that I might, in your presence, have borne my humble testimony to the importance I attach to the early election of Colonel Galloway. The qualifications of Col. Galloway are, I trust, generally known to the Proprietors, and I can with confidence affirm, that at an early period, by sharing in the hardest service a soldier can encounter, he laid the foundation of that reputation which he has uniformly maintained throughout a series of years. After long personal knowledge and intercourse with the Native Army of India, participating in much of its most arduous warfare, especially in those subordinate grades which form the character of the hard working soldier, and constitute the basis of all professional qualification, Col. Galloway filled important offices under the Supreme Government, the records of which bear testimony to his great acquirements, industry, and integrity. But the object I have in view, in thus venturing to address you, is of higher moment than individual communication. When I contemplate the vast importance of every branch of the Military Government of India, and, nevertheless, find the Army of Bengal without any representative in the Court of Directors, through the medium of practical experience—or any individual who combines a personal knowledge of the feelings, habits, and disposition of the soldiery composing that noble Army—we cannot, I think, but view its constitution as evidently defective and wanting in that respect, and I would earnestly submit to the Proprietors at large, that these considerations afford the strongest grounds that can well be conceived for engaging our utmost exertions in supporting Col. Galloway's views to a seat in the Court of Directors,—and thereby best discharging the duty we owe to the public interests for promoting the prosperity and welfare of our magnificent Empire in India.

I have, &c., H. WORSLEY, G.C.B.,
Major-General, Bengal Army.

We feel that we could add but little to this impressive appeal. We are confident of its influence with all officers and their connexions. The removal of Sir James Carnac is a serious loss to the Indian Army, and Military men are more than ever required in the Direction, to defend the interests of that Army, and to advise on the best means of preserving our Empire in the East. The latter consideration will come home to every Proprietor, and in electing Colonel Galloway they will not only do honour to him, but materially protect their own interests.

We regret that we have not space for the Testimonials of Lord William Bentinck, of the Right Hon. Holt Mackenzie, who was many years Secretary, or of Mr. Fortescue, late Secretary, to the Government of India;—these documents serve to show, that the merits and services of Colonel Galloway are highly appreciated, and the value his experience would be at the present critical moment in the Councils of the Court of Directors.

To the Proprietors of East India Stock.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I beg respectfully to lay before you the Resolutions passed at a numerous and highly respectable Meeting of Proprietors of East India Stock, assembled this day, in conformity with the intimation for that purpose, supported by the names of so many of your honourable body.

Countenanced as I have been, I cannot doubt success. My own efforts shall be unceasing, and if the choice of the Proprietors shall fall upon me, it will be my pride and my highest gratification to discharge, to the best of my ability, the sacred duty with which they will have honoured me. I have only, therefore, to repeat my pledge to proceed to the ballot on the first vacancy which may occur.

Entreating a continuance of your favour and support, and earnestly begging the best efforts of all my friends, I have the honour to remain, with great respect,

Your obliged and most faithful servant,
A. GALLOWAY, Colonel, Bengal Army.

4, Upper Harley street, January 21, 1839.

At a Meeting of Proprietors of East India Stock, friends and supporters of Colonel Archibald Galloway, C.B., of the Bengal Army, held at the London Tavern this day, Monday, January 21, 1839,

The Right Hon. HOLT MACKENZIE in the Chair.

The Chairman read a letter from General Sir Henry Worsley, G.C.B., of the Bengal Army, regretting that he was prevented by illness from attending.

The following resolutions were unanimously passed —

Moved by Lieutenant-General Forbes, and seconded by Thomas Dent, Esq.

1. That it is in the highest degree necessary for the efficiency of the Government of India, and for the welfare of its Inhabitants, to secure to the East India Direction the services of men who join to acknowledged ability, integrity, and experience in public affairs, the possession of such special qualifications as may fit them for the consideration of the many important and delicate questions which that Court is called upon to decide, and especially at the present crisis, when the Government of India appears likely to be called upon for the exertion of more than ordinary energy in all departments, particularly on the part of our great military establishments.

Moved by Major-General Smith, and seconded by Major-General Heathcote, Bengal Army.

2. That Colonel Galloway has served the Hon. Company in India, in the Army of Bengal, for thirty-five years; that in the course of that long period he acquired the most intimate acquaintance with our native troops, and with those masses of the military population in Bengal from which our principal military establishments are drawn, that he has been distinguished in that Army, and has shared with it in the hardest service a soldier can encounter, that he long held important and responsible offices on its staff, that for several years he filled a principal place in the highest department of the Military Branch of the service, under the Supreme Government of India; that his official duty there comprehended the control of the Ordnance, of the equipment of the Army, of its military supplies, and of the department of public works, both Military and Civil, thus embracing practically a thorough investigation of the most important sources of public expenditure, and imposing on him the duty of regulating the construction of the great public works carried on for the general improvement of the country; that Colonel Galloway has justly established a high name as an Oriental scholar, that as an author, by his work on the Law and Constitution and General Administration of India, he has contributed essentially to the development of many important questions relative to the laws, the financial resources, and the Government of that country; whilst, by his writings on Military subjects, he has usefully promoted the interests of the state; that for his Military services Colonel Galloway has received honourable mark of his Sovereign's approbation, and he has on many occasions been distinguished by the commendation of the Supreme Government of India, and of the superior Authorities in England, that whether, therefore, we refer to the merit of Colonel Galloway's services, or consider the extent of his qualifications, we cannot but recognise in that gentleman an union of acquirements and practical experience which point him out as a candidate peculiarly qualified for a seat in the East India Direction.

Moved by Major-Gen. Sir Donald M'Leod, K.C.B. (who stated, that he appeared for Gen. Sir Henry Worsley, G.C.B.), and seconded by Major-Gen. Garner:—

3. That when we contemplate the vast importance of every branch of the Military Government of India, and nevertheless find that among Military Officers at present members of the Court of Directors, there is no one from the Presidency of Bengal,—the seat of our Supreme Government and of our principal resources, both Military and Civil,—we conceive that we are but discharging a duty we owe to the public interests by submitting to the Proprietors at large the urgent necessity for calling into the Direction an officer who will bring into that Court a practical knowledge of the feelings, habits, and disposition of the soldiery composing the most numerous portion of our Army, an Army upon whose fidelity the preservation of our empire mainly depends.

Moved by Robert Milford, Esq., and seconded by Colonel Waters, C.B., Bengal Army.—

4. That on the above grounds this meeting most earnestly invite the Proprietors to unite in supporting Col. Galloway, so as to insure his election to a seat in the Direction on the first vacancy that may occur, and they pledge themselves to use every means in their power to effect this important object.

HOLT MACKENZIE, Chairman.

Moved by Richard Twining, Esq., and seconded by George Gowan, Esq., Madras Civil Service.

5. That the thanks of this meeting be given to the Right Hon. Holt Mackenzie, for the very able manner in which he has filled the Chair.

We have observed with much satisfaction that the Governor-General has noticed and rewarded the gallant conduct of Lieutenant Eldred Pottinger, of the Bombay Artillery, in having volunteered his services at the siege of Herat, and, by his skill and science, enabled the besieged to hold out against the attacks of the Persians, directed and aided by Russian Officers. This young Officer is nephew of Colonel Henry Pottinger, the ablest Diplomatist in India, and now Envoy to the Court of Sinde. Latent ability seems remarkable in the family of Pottinger; we know of no instance in which a member of it has been employed without distinguishing himself as a soldier, politician, or man of science.

THE friends of Captain Craufurd have taken umbrage at the manner in which that officer's name has been treated by Sir John Barrow. We think they have reason to complain: for there is certainly nothing in the pamphlet published by him deserving the censure which has been justly passed upon the "Flag Officer;" and it is anything but flattering for a gallant Naval Officer to be included in such association.

Capt. Craufurd's statement is the simple truth. He describes what he saw, and the feelings which arose in his mind at such a novel spectacle, for which he appears to have been quite unprepared. The "Flag Officer," on the contrary, derives all his information from the doubtful authority of party newspaper paragraphs, exaggerates everything pertaining to our rivals, whilst he disparages our own Navy; and, to augment the strength of the French Fleet, actually describes every ship afloat as in commission; and, to sum up all, enumerates eight vessels of first and second rate which do not exist. Presuming him to be a "Flag Officer," it was at least due to the honour and respectability of his rank that he should have investigated the truth of the statements put forth. He may be justly accused of presumption, ignorance, and folly, but these terms do not apply to Capt. Craufurd.

The number of Russian ships annually commissioned for cruising in the Baltic has never been a secret. How can it possibly be so, when scores of our merchant vessels are daily passing and re-passing within sight of them on their voyage to and from St. Petersburgh? Neither was Capt. Craufurd, who is an extremely intelligent and unassuming young officer, the first to direct public attention to the fact. On 4th March, 1836 (before the gallant officer's visit to St. Petersburgh), Mr. Charles Wood, the Secretary to the Admiralty, in moving the Navy Estimates, took a vote for 5000 additional seamen, and stated, as one reason for this increase, that the Russians had in the Baltic the previous summer 18 sail of the line in commission. These 18 sail of the line were two divisions of the three which Captain Craufurd afterwards saw reviewed by the Emperor at the ceremony of "Grand papa de la flotte," in the summer of the same year. Again, in our Gazette of 22d and 29th Oct. 1836, we gave a full and circumstantial account of this Russian Fleet, describing every ship by name, her armament, &c., and it was not until the summer of the year 1837 that Commander Craufurd (as it appears at the request of his friends) published his pamphlet. A correspondent alleges, that in the interim he made known the information he possessed in the proper quarter.

But it is ridiculous to suppose that the Government during all this time, and indeed at any and every time prior, were not in possession of every information relating to this fleet, particularly as the Emperor of Russia was proud of displaying it, and took all opportunities of inviting officers and others to a close inspection of it and his batteries at Cronstadt. This policy he evidently adopted (if he possesses the wily character generally assigned him) to impress upon those who were competent to make reports, the strength of his Baltic defences, and his means of resisting an attack. If he meditated a descent upon England, he would have adopted a very different policy.

The plain fact of the matter is, that the conductors of party Journals have availed themselves of some observations thrown out by the Duke of Wellington at the close of last Session; and knowing how sensitive public opinion is upon all that relates to our Navy, they have made a factious attack upon the Admiralty which controls it, and, casting about for authorities to support their argument, availed themselves of passages that would bear out the most false and preposterous statements—called some portions of Capt. Craufurd's book, which the context will not warrant—and a weak, vain, old man has lent himself to this unworthy proceeding, by stringing together a lot of newspaper squibs, and impertinently addressing a rigmarole founded on them to the Duke of Wellington. The well-directed broadside of Sir John Barrow has demolished the whole affair, the bubble is exploded, and we wish the "Flag Officer" joy of the only reputation he is ever likely to earn.

On Monday despatches were received at the Colonial Office, from the Governors of Honduras and Gibraltar; and on Tuesday from Sir John Colborne, Governor-General of the Canadas; and from the Governor of the Cape of Good Hope. The latter were dated Nov. 15th. On Wednesday despatches, dated 8th August, were received at the India Board, from Lord Auckland, the Governor-General of India; and despatches were forwarded from the Foreign Department for Lord Ponsonby, the British Ambassador at Constantinople, for the British Chargé d'Affaires at the Court of Persia, and for Lord Clanricarde, the British Minister at St. Petersburg. The Cabinet Council on Wednesday was held at the residence of Viscount Melbourne in South-st., in consequence of his being somewhat indisposed. Lord Holland, who is very feeble from gout, was wheeled into the Council-room. On Thursday despatches were brought to the Colonial Office from Sir Henry Bouverie, Governor of Malta. Yesterday despatches from Lieut.-Col. Doherty, Governor of Sierra Leone, were received at the Colonial Office.

"Her Majesty's Marriage.—The country will learn with delight that the most interesting part in the Speech from the Throne to both Houses of Parliament, and the country at large, will be the announcement of Her Majesty's intended marriage. The happy object of Queen Victoria's choice is Prince Albert, son of the reigning Duke of Saxe Coburg, and cousin of Her Majesty. Prince Albert is handsome, and about twenty-two years of age. He has resided for some time in this country, on a visit to his Royal relatives. How soon the happy event is to take place we are not prepared to say; but our readers may depend upon the authenticity of our information."—Sun. "We are authorised to give the most positive contradiction to the above announcement."—Chronicle. The author of the paragraph is said to be one who, with a propensity to meddle where he has no longer the right to advise, has gratified the restlessness of his nature in unfounded conjectures, which have been incautiously published as facts.

The Queen Dowager, lamenting the injurious effects resulting from the great want of church accommodation for the Protestant residents in Malta, has announced her intention of erecting, at her own expense, a church capable of containing 1,000 persons. An appropriate site has been granted by the Local Government. The cost will be from 6,000*l.* to 8,000*l.*

The Duke and Duchess, and the Princess Augusta of Cambridge, honoured Sir James and Lady Reynett with their company on Thursday, at their residence at Hampton Court, at the christening of their infant daughter.

The Crown Prince of Hanover.—On the occasion of the anniversary of his Aide-de-Camp, the Prince composed the music for a poem, written for the event by Blumenhagen, which he caused to be performed by the musicians of the chapel. His Royal Highness then repaired to the apartment of his Aide-de-Camp, and presented him with a magnificent tea equipage in silver, adorned with garlands of flowers. The Prince also bestowed rich presents on the singers of the chapel, and his music-master, the famous pianist Wenzel. His Royal Highness has quite recovered from his recent attack of the measles.

The Duke of Wellington will give a sumptuous entertainment, at Apsley House, on the 4th of February, to the Conservative Peers. A great number of idle paragraphs are circulating through the papers respecting the health of the Duke, who, with the exception of a slight attack of rheumatism, we believe is in as sound health as he has been for the last 20 years. His Grace will complete his 70th in May, and to the gratification of his country, is as likely as any man to live for many years. No public misfortune could scarcely be greater than the loss of this illustrious character.

It is rumoured that the vacant Garter has been pressed upon the noble Premier himself, from a quarter and in a manner extremely difficult to resist.

The address in the Lords will be moved by the Earl of Lovelace, and seconded by Lord Vernon.

It is reported that Lord Carrington is to be Lord Lieutenant of Buckinghamshire in place of the late Duke of Buckingham.

Mr. P. C. Labouchere, the father of the Master of the Mint, and of the banker of that name, died on Wednesday se'nnight, in consequence of having, three weeks before, broken a blood-vessel.

Lady Dalhousie, relict of the late General Lord Dalhousie, died at her house in Edinburgh on Tuesday.

We are most happy to announce that Mr. Moon, the most spirited and liberal publisher of engravings in this country, has been authorised to publish a work which will be of the highest interest, not only to all Military men, but to every true Englishman. The print will represent "The Waterloo Banquet," from a picture painted by permission of the Duke, at the request of Lady Burghersh, from the actual scene at Apsley House, with portraits of the distinguished guests. This national print will commemorate the victory of Waterloo, and the fame of the surviving heroes who were in command. The portraits, we understand, are excellent likenesses, and there can be no question that the engraving will do honour to British art.

The Commerce states that a General Officer, attached to the Court, is at present endeavouring to establish a new club, which is to be exclusively military, and that the principal officers of the Palace are to be among its first members.

Nelson Monument.—The models and drawings will occupy a large space, and have engaged many Artists in preparing for a considerable time past.

Royal Marines.—The valuable services of this really excellent corps have, it appears, been taken advantage of by the military correspondent of the Globe, to introduce an officer, who, though well-known traditionally in the Service, has about as positive an existence as the statesmanship of the Globe's patron, Lord Palmerston. In yesterday evening's paper we find the following paragraph, under the head of the "The Army."—"That distinguished officer Major Checks, C.B., of the Royal Marines, embarked on board the Inconstant, Capt. Pring, with 100 Marines for Halifax." To any one who merely thinks of the soubriquet and its general application, this paragraph may appear only a quiz on the ordinary credulity of the Government print in which it appeared, but to those who remember that the Inconstant brought home Lord Durham, it has another significance, placing his Lordship on precisely the same footing with the apocryphal "Major Checks, of the Marines."—Herald.

Brev.-Maj. Seward, on the retired list, R. Marines, when returning home from Chatham Garrison Club on Monday night week, was attacked by some men in the narrow part of Chatham, knocked down, severely beaten, and left in the road insensible, and apparently dead. They took his purse, but left his watch. The Major, though much disfigured, is recovering.—Maidstone Gazette.

Sir John Milbanke, whose affray with Mr. Pocock we noticed last week, has been committed to take his trial at the ensuing Assizes, and Mr. Pocock bound over to prosecute in a penalty of 500*l.*, and the witnesses also in very heavy penalties, to appear. We understand upwards of 5,000*l.* was offered as bail for Sir John, but the Magistrates refused to take it. Mr. Pocock is quite convalescent, and has expressed his unwillingness to proceed in the case. The Court of Queen's Bench have since ordered that Sir John should be discharged from custody on finding four sureties in 250*l.* each, and entering into his own recognizances in 1,000*l.*

Four candidates for the vacant Coronership for the Western Division of Middlesex are in the field; viz., Mr. Burchell, Mr. Adey, Mr. Wakley, and Mr. J. Duncombe (nephew of the Member for Finsbury). Messrs. Burchell, Adey, and Duncombe, are Solicitors, the two former Conservatives, and the latter a Liberal. Wakley, the too well-known Radical, contested for the office with Mr. Baker, about ten years since. The struggle is expected to be most severe.

Fire-Arms again!—So undisguised is the system of arming carried on amongst the manufacturing population of this neighbourhood, in aid of the plan of the Chartists, that on Monday last, at New Mills, Strines, Disley, and that district, a man was publicly hawking pistols at 3*s.* a brace, for which he found many willing purchasers.—Stockport Advertiser.

The vacant see of Killaloe has been assigned to the Hon. and Rev. Ludlow Tonson.

The sentence of the Publisher of the "Times," for libel, in the case of Sir John Conroy, will be passed on Monday next.

Early in the week the Court of Queen's Bench discharged the writ of habeas corpus, which had been obtained on behalf of the Canadian prisoners, recently landed at Liverpool, leaving them precisely in the situation they were left by the sentence of the Canadian Courts.

A bloodless duel took place this week between two members of the legal profession, in consequence of a dispute on matters in connection with the late L. E. L. (Miss. Maclean) and the cause of her lamented death. We are assured that the two last letters she wrote, addressed to most intimate friends, have yet to appear.

The arrears of the late British Legion are about to be settled. The officers must pay 10 per cent. for the cashing of their bills, but a sort of atonement of three months' additional pay is to be recommended by the Royal Commission, for the unsatisfactory and unjust manner manner in which their claims have been met.

The Court.

Her Majesty and the Duchess of Kent are in excellent health. The Queen had a dinner party on Saturday evening. Her Majesty and her august mother attended Divine service on Sunday in the Chapel Royal, St. James's. On Monday Viscount Melbourne had an audience. On Tuesday Viscount Melbourne and the Judge Advocate-General had audiences. Her Majesty had a dinner party in the evening. On Wednesday Her Majesty had a dinner party to meet the Duke of Lucca. The Marquess of Conyngham had an audience of Her Majesty. On Thursday the Queen gave audience to Viscount Melbourne. Her Majesty held a Court, when Prince Soutzo, the Grecian Minister, had an audience to take leave. In the evening Her Majesty honoured Drury Lane Theatre with her presence. Her Majesty will go in state next week to both Drury-lane and Covent-garden Theatres.

Lady Barham has succeeded the Countess of Charlemont as the Lady in Waiting on the Queen, and Lady Harriet Clive has replaced the Hon. Mrs. George Campbell as Woman of the Bed-chamber in Waiting. Sir Robert Otway has succeeded Colonel Armstrong as the Groom in Waiting on Her Majesty.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—The stormy and variable debate in the French chamber, which has occupied the attention of all France during the last fortnight, was brought to a close on Saturday by two separate votes in favour of the Ministers. The discussion turned upon an amendment proposed on behalf of Count Mole by the minority of the commission on the address, its purport being to affirm as positive that which the original paragraph had represented as doubtful—namely, the harmony existing between the powers of the state, the ability and firmness of the administration, and the stability of the institutions of the kingdom under the present operation of the constitutional monarchy.

The movements of the Dutch and Belgian troops have decided the French Government upon taking some precautionary measures on the northern frontier, and orders have been sent to the General commanding in that quarter to brigade his troops and to canton them along the frontiers, so as to form a line of military observation. The number of men included in this arrangement amounts to between 35,000 and 36,000, including Cavalry and Artillery.

The Cabinet tendered their resignation on Tuesday, but continue to exercise the functions of office until the appointment of their successors.

BELGIUM.—Extract of a letter from Brussels:—"All our troops are moving towards the Dutch frontier. It appears that, before the end of the month, the Dutch force will amount to upwards of 120,000 men. The Prince of Orange, who is expected to return to headquarters immediately, has not under his command, at present, more than 40,000 men, but fresh troops are daily joining him from the interior. Our headquarters are about to be established at Louvain, where the King will repair about the middle of this week. General Hurel, chief of the staff, is making preparations for his departure. The National Gens-d'armes have received orders to have three squadrons at Malines equipped for active service." Another letter gives the total force of the Belgian army as composed of 88 battalions, effective, 78,000 men, 17 squadrons, effective, 6,150; artillery, effective, 1,500; engineers, et cetera, 1,000; military hospitals, et cetera, 1,200; general total, 90,650. The Poles desirous of entering the military service of Belgium have again obtained a promise from the Belgian Government that they will shortly receive their notice of destination. One of them, M. Jelzaknowski, has already been attached as Aide-de-Camp to Gen. Daine's staff.

The definitive protocol on the Dutch and Belgian question was signed on Wednesday, at the Foreign Office, by the Plenipotentiary of France, and the representatives of the other great powers, parties to the conference. We believe that the Twenty-four Articles form the basis—separating the Luxemburg and Limburg from Belgium, and modifying the debt in favour of that country.

RUSSIA.—Great progress has been made with the new winter palace, St. Petersburgh, no less than 12,000 workmen being employed daily. Next summer there is to be a large assemblage of Russian troops on the banks of the Borodino, to the number of 100,000, for the purpose of solemnly inaugurating the monument elevated to perpetuate the memory of the victory gained over the French, on 12th Sept., 1812.

AFRICA.—The army of occupation is undergoing a considerable reduction. The third battalion of regiments sent to Algiers at the period of the expedition against Constantine is returning to France, none but volunteers who wish to remain on active service in Africa being kept. The remaining two battalions of each regt. will be again placed on a complete war footing, and for that reason detachments taken from every regt. in France are now being incorporated into them. The total effective of the troops destined for the 1st, 23d, 24th, 26th, 47th, 48th, and 61st regt. of the line, and the 17th light infantry, amounts to 2,600 men, and others will be shortly added.

Egypt.—Alexandria, Dec. 16.—Foreigners daily arrive from the Red Sea and from Europe. The journey through the desert will soon be performed with all the conveniences of European travelling. A voyage from Bombay to Trieste will shortly be a party of pleasure. This year 800 Europeans crossed the desert, and next year their number will be probably trebled. A regular English coach line will shortly be established between Alexandria and Suez. In the course of a few years the desert will be traversed by omnibuses and waggons.

Cape of Good Hope.—Sir Benjamin D'Urban's reply to the celebrated despatch of Lord Glenelg of 26th Dec. 1835, on the subject of the Caffre war, is as perfect and triumphant a vindication of himself personally, of the policy adopted by him, and of the conduct of the Colonists, as the warmest friend of His Excellency, or the most decided advocate of equity and justice could possibly desire. Nothing is based upon mere argument, powerful as some of these unquestionably are, nothing left vague or unsettled, but His Excellency proceeds step by step, to meet all the assertions, assumptions, opinions, and arguments of Lord Glenelg, and finally to crush them with an overwhelming weight of evidence which is perfectly irrisistible. But this is not all. Sir Benjamin D'Urban, with the honest pride of an English gentleman and the spirit of a gallant soldier, teaches Lord Glenelg a lesson which he is in no danger of soon forgetting. With powerful effect he twits him with his predilection for the natives, rather than from those whose especial interests it was his duty to guard; his turning a ready ear, and affording an almost unbounded credence, to the whispers of anonymous informants—whilst he, the Governor of the Colony, the Representative of British Majesty, is considered in most cases but as doubtful authority, and in some as none at all.—Graham's Town Journal.

Australia.—Sir George and Lady Gipps nearly met with a serious accident, from the horses to their carriage taking fright. Sir G. was much injured about the face.

Literary Notices.

Horace Vernon; or, Life in the West. Three Vols. H. Colburn.

This novel belongs to that class of works which has arisen out of what has been happily termed the Romance of Real Life; and the grade to which its chief scenes refer, will be indicated by the second portion of its title, "Life in the West." It is just a novel of the semi-fashionable class, and is founded on a concatenation of circumstances, which occurred some years ago, and excited an extraordinary interest and curiosity in all classes of society, without in the smallest degree gratifying, or rather satisfying, that curiosity. The name of the ostensible heroine of this novel—Agnes Graham—will recall to many of our readers the singular and mysterious circumstances to which we allude, and which were made the subject of repeated public investigations at more than one of our police-offices at the period of their occurrence. We need not refer to them in further detail than to add, that they related to the existence and subsequent abandonment of a "suppositious" daughter, the question of whose parentage was said to be connected with some of the highest families of the aristocracy. Such is the source of some of the fictitious interest of this story. But its real attraction and value will be found to consist in the true and well-traced pictures which it presents, of the various grades of actual life, as they exist (chiefly in our great metropolis) in the present day. The hero, Horace Vernon, occupies that debateable ground in modern society which is pointed out by the phrase parvenu. He is a wealthy young banker, who is unhappily smitten with a passion for that "exclusive" society to which his birth gives him no title; and he is admitted to that society for a brief period on the usual and recognised terms—namely, a sacrifice of everything that gave him character and respectability in his own station:—including honour, wealth, and at last life itself. The moral is a good one, and it is well and carefully worked out; and the general result is a tale as full of truth as it is of entertainment, and one in which the writer evinces the rare merit of depicting the two extremes of London life—the highest and the lowest—with equal truth and spirit. Several of the characters belonging to the upper circles are evidently drawn from living originals, and will immediately be recognised by those who are familiar with "Life in the West." We may refer in particular to a noble wit and roué of the Rochester school, and an equally noble gamester (a voluntary exile from his country) who, it is to be hoped, is of no school at all, but rather a lusus in the "natural history" of the British aristocracy. Upon the whole, the novel of "Horace Vernon; or, Life in the West" will be found an especial acquisition to the circulating libraries, in that particular department of modern fiction which has lately been unusually neglected—namely, the "fashionable novel"—in which department it claims a very respectable station.

The Structure, Diseases, and Treatment of the Teeth, considered with a view to the Abolition, in all Common Cases, of the Pernicious Practice of Tooth-drawing. By Wm. Wardroper, M. R. C. S. L., &c. Renshaw.

This pamphlet will be read by readers of every class with advantage. The author, adopting the physiological principles of Mr. John Hunter as to the structure of the important organs, the diseases and treatment of which he discusses, shows how very little addition this branch of Surgery has gained from the labours or observations of more recent practitioners or pathologists—a fact which he attributes, in some degree, to the influence of a blind adhesion to traditional prejudices on the part of individuals who have made the practice of this department their occupation rather than their study, as well as to the fact, that it holds out so few temptations to its exclusive cultivation by individuals of industry and observation, as compared with the fame and emolument which the same qualities may almost be said to command in what are commonly called the "higher walks of the profession." Mr. Wardroper obviously possesses both these qualities, and his work is the production of an unprejudiced reasoner and a sound practitioner; and Mr. Wardroper himself feels the value of the task he has undertaken. "Surely the teeth (he says in his Preface), were they only thought of as one of the most beautiful embellishments of nature, are deserving of the strictest attention; but when we look at them as the instruments furnished us for the mastication and due preparation of food in the process of digestion, on the perfect performance of which the healthful condition of the body mainly depends—when we consider them as the supplementary organs of a clear and distinct articulation, the subject assumes an importance that has hitherto been but sparingly and imperfectly accorded to it by the profession at large." If we have any reason to complain of the author of this brochure, it is that he has treated the subject too briefly; but his views and his practice are set forth so clearly, that they must be equally intelligible to the general and the professional reader. We wish the author would undertake a larger (elementary) work, which is so much wanted, on Dentology, and the concluding passage of the treatise before us leads us to look for it.

Scenes at Home and Abroad. By H. B. Hall, Esq. Saunders and Otley.

Some of these tales have already appeared in the periodicals, and collected together they form a very agreeable and unpretending volume.

The Boy's Country Book. Being the real life of a Country Boy, written by himself. Edited by William Howitt. Longman and Co.

Every page is calculated to amuse and delight. The style is pleasing, and the anecdotes and adventures are such as engage the attention of boys. Mr. Howitt's "Book of the Seasons" and "Rural Life of England" were excellent, but this is even more valuable for the rising generation. We do not know of any more acceptable present for youth than the "Boy's Country Book," which teaches the full employment in the country of every day in the year. The illustrations are pleasing and appropriate.

Lectures on English Poetry, from the Reign of Edward the Third to the time of Burns and Cowper; with Shakspeare's Supernatural Characters. An Essay, by Henry Neele. Joseph Thomas.

A very neat reprint of the Lectures delivered by the unfortunate Mr. Neele at the Russell Institution, and to which a portrait of the author and a brief biographical notice are prefixed. Mr. Neele had the true feeling of a poet, and the volume, which is highly interesting, will therefore be justly prized.

THE KING OF THE SOUTHERN SEA.

Oh, the whale is free of the bounden sea,
He lives for a thousand years;
He shuns to rest on the billow's breast,
Nor the roughest tempest fears.
The howling blast, as it hurries past,
Is music to lull him to sleep;
And he scatters the spray in his boisterous play,
As he dashes—The King of the Deep.
Oh, the rare old whale, mid storm and gale,
In his ocean home will be
A giant in might, where might is right,
And king of the boundless sea.

A wondrous tale could the rare old whale
Of the mighty deep disclose,
Of the skeleton forms of bygone storms,
And of treasures that no one knows.
He has seen the crew, when the tempest blew,
Drop down from the slipp'ry deck,
Shaking the tide from his glassy side,
And sporting with ocean and wreck.
Then the rare old whale, &c.

Then the whale shall be still dear to me
When the midnight lamp burns dim;
For the student's book, and his fav'rite nook,
Are illumined by the of him.
From none of his tribe could we e'er imbibe
So useful, so bless'd a thing;
Then we'll on land go hand in hand
To hail him the Ocean King.
Oh, the rare old whale, &c.

CAPTAIN SLEIGH ON NAUTICAL DISCIPLINE; AND PROPOSAL FOR MANNING THE FLEET WITHOUT IMPRESSMENT.

Continued from Page 46.—The abundant nutritious food (not any part of which but passes before and is tasted by a responsible officer) which is allowed when in harbour, is combined with well-regulated vegetable diet, and the most uninjurious spirituous liquors or wholesome wines, while the varied proportions of salt provisions, issued when at sea, being diversified by flour, peas, plums, &c., to render them agreeable and counteract their tendency, together with the morning and evening meals of tea, coffee, cocoa, or chocolate, render palatable every species of food which the Navy seaman is allowed. In the progress of his duty in a sultry climate, he is not only permitted a long repose during the heat of the day, but also quits his labour before the time prescribed by the employer in civil service; and if, through urgent necessity, he should be subjected to the inclemency of the watery torrents of the tropical regions, which is, however, on all occasions, carefully shunned, his change of clothing is the first object of attention, and a sufficient quantity of ardent spirits issued to guard against ill effects. Should illness ensue, notwithstanding these precautions, his wishes are consulted, every indulgence calculated to soothe and alleviate is granted; his recovery is minutely watched, and anxiously hoped for, and, if possible, secured by the utmost endeavours of professional skill, united to unremitting and zealous humanity, not only upon the part of the medical officers, but also upon that of his Naval commanders. Nor can it be controverted by the base calumniators of our country's Naval service, nor doubted by those whom they have impressed with a false belief of our peerless officers and deserving men that this general solicitude for, and provident attention to the present good and future welfare of the sailor, not only arises from sentiments of the purest humanity, but from a laudable zeal for the sovereignty and pre-eminence of their country in supporting and exercising her birthright—dominion over the billows of the ocean.

These well-timed relaxations from toil, attention to the wants, and regard to the comforts of the seamen in the Royal Navy, secure his health and invigorate his mind, imparting to the mental, as well as the bodily energies, that mutual elasticity so essential to all descriptions of labour, at the same time promoting the operations of work and forwarding the ends of duty. These comforts are never curtailed, these privileges are never withheld, not even in circumstances of necessary punishment—nor does the officer, from the Admiral to the youthful volunteer, enjoy from his country or his service any individual or domestic privilege on board ship, either in quantity or quality (except the necessary gradation of pay), that is not afforded in a just proportion to the mariner, from the able seaman to the ship-boy; for the Naval officer would scorn to accept of any comfort or consideration which he could not share with the seaman. Should the commerce of our country, or the honour and welfare of our native land, demand protection or redress, under any climate, either within the torrid or frigid zone, the mariner's wants are equally attended to; and if, in defiance of the latter, or support of the former, a drop of his blood be spilled, it does not flow unrequited; he does not pass unrewarded, but it is awarded to him in justice to his merits, in proportion to his casualty and the length of his services. He is not only respected by his officers, but also receives a due support from his Government for future old age. Should, in any hazardous duty, his life terminate, he has not the additional pang to his expiring moments of apprehending that his wife or children will be exposed to want and misery, but knows that they will receive the well-earned reward which his life of labour and loyalty has secured, and that the satisfaction will be sweet to them that he had done his duty and died approved.

Having traced the Naval mariner in his country's service through the varied, yet simple and comparatively happy, although arduous duties, we ought now (previous to urging plans to remodel the trading marine, with a view of improving the state of the mariner and affording a practicable and efficient aid to the Navy, when required), briefly consider and compare the two services, and while reprobating the wanton neglect and errors of the trading marine, adopt from our own more perfect national service those advantages and benefits that could be rendered subservient to its amelioration, and make, if possible, a practical application of those measures, and that fixed arrangement which are so pre-eminently good in the organisation of the Navy. The obvious result is incontrovertible,—the practicability will be hereafter discussed.

In justice, while proceeding through these columns, it ought to be kept in memory, that not only the general tenor of this Treatise is unembellished by speculative ideas, but also that every assertion therein made is deduced from, and founded on, long and alternate experience in both Royal and Trading Navies,—hence the power of delineating either, and impartially describing the nature of their respective mariners. These circumstances, united as they have been to practical opportunities, offered by the arduous command of British seamen while serving under the lax and imperfect laws of unsettled foreign services, and in conjunction with mariners of other nations, have afforded the occasion of dwelling on and appreciating the rare character of the former when in contrast with the latter.

Whilst treating on the profession of the Royal Navy and the trading-marine, together with its nautical professional points, it must be conspicuously, evidently, and clearly understood, that it is from an ardent view to encourage in assiduity, perseverance, zeal, and boldness the mariners of the latter service, who labour under those disadvantages already spoken of, and of refuting the malevolence of slander so frequently and unjustly levelled not only at the Royal Navy, but also at the British Army, vilifying alike the officers and the laws which govern these services. But experience can equally attest the principle upon which the one is founded, and the humanity that always characterises the other. The undeniable proofs of these virtues may be clearly and convincingly deduced by many facts. The one which will afford the most palpable refutation to the dangerous and wicked promulgation of excess and cruelty being inflicted in either of the above services, particularly the former one, arises from the frequent and spontaneous presentation of gifts voluntarily bestowed by the petty officers and seamen of Her Majesty's ships to their respective captains when paid off, in testimony of the high respect, affection, and esteem with which they have inspired the officers and men under their command *. Nor are occurrences of these manifest proofs of attachment on the part of the men to their officers less frequent in the Army †, although equally traduced. Another circumstance occurs as marked as the one just stated; it is not unfrequent that the petty officers of a ship of war are deputed by the ship's company to request that a particular man, no doubt notorious for insubordination, be punished; it is true that this appeal is seldom met but by marked disapprobation, yet how striking are those instances; and what a tacit denial is truth and honour capable of giving falsehood and infamy when presuming to brand these laws which were formed for the consolidation of our Royal Navy, its honour and protection, in those days, and at that time when, pressed by necessity and surrounded by every species of difficulty, the Naval service required that judicatory and immediate power of martial law, capable of supporting order and subordination far removed from the civil tribunals of the state! It is to the honour and humanity of the dispensers of these edicts that death has only been awarded, when the enormity of the offence precludes every hope and possibility of the extension of mercy. The sources from which these misrepresentations arise may be traced to unsubsiding feelings of dissatisfaction, occasioned by disappointed views, or engendered by the more unworthy sentiments of artful design. The practice is to condemn every existing principle of law or denomination of Government, discontented because that form of Government, founded on the aristocratical dignities and rights of the nation, merges not into democracy, because the liberal and enlightened Whig Government descends not to nor blends with Radicalism and anarchy; and, finally, the latter would be attacked, if unfortunately in power, for not consummating the work of ruin by a further degenerating into republicanism; in short, the corroding passion of restless disaffection seems to strike invariably at the root of those professions of danger and honour for their overthrow, with a view of demoralising by false representations, and to the end of the general destruction of the nation, as by any change the authors of perverted truth would not experience an injury. Every means, nay, indefatigable measures should be taken to counteract such false representations, and remove the unfounded impressions made on the trading mariners of our country, so fatal to our Royal Navy.

After what has been advanced, it is almost superfluous to add, that, notwithstanding all these unremitting exaggerations of laws, treatment, and oppressions, the Royal Navy still possesses the same refulgency of greatness in material, although not in magnitude, which it ever did; and of such a service, possessing and most zealously maintaining its maxims, principles, and prowess, can it be asserted, with any appearance of plausibility, that it is deficient in that greatest inspirer of noble achievements and naval skill,—encouragement? In every grade of that service, in every branch of its organisation, there exists the strongest incentive to advancement, the freest openings to promotion, even in these peace times. Let not false opinions be indulged upon this point of our Naval preferment,—the different branches of that service must not be confounded or mixed up with each other;—wisely kept apart, each preserves its distinct arrangement, its peculiar merits and zenith. Hence the sailor-boy of the Nay may aspire to become a junior petty officer, which gives him increase of pay, and secures him respect from those whom he may, through merit, have passed over. The seaman, in like manner, is rewarded for his zeal and conduct by a second class petty officer's rating, leading him more immediately forward, and giving him an increase of pay, together with a greater degree of responsibility. Thus placed, according to the peculiar capacity or merits of each, they may become Warrant Officers in the posts of Gunner, Boatswain, Sailmaker, &c., which bestows upon them rank infinitely superior to that of Serjeant-Major in the Army, and not unfrequently with tenfold the professional responsibility. Thus, each of these more minor grades advance higher in the scale of prudent promotion.

* The author, with a view to substantiate the above assertion and in order to prove the frequency of those occurrences in the Royal Navy, is compiling a work, which will contain the names and rank of all officers who have been presented (by the seamen of the several ships which they commanded) with honourable gifts, in testimony of the esteem they were held in by the ships' companies; as also the particular circumstances attendant thereon.

† That distinguished, gallant, and humane officer, Sir Duncan M'Dougall, Brigadier-General in the Spanish Legion, never allowed a lash to be inflicted during the years he commanded in the 79th Regiment.

"THE UNJUST STEWARD."

[For many years past it has been the custom, whenever the Bands of the Guards performed at the Palace, to allow a bottle of wine to every two men, for refreshment, and not one pint to each man, as has been asserted in some of the papers. An order lately issued in the Royal Household has prohibited the continuance of this "Princely allowance," to the poor musicians, and substituted one "pot of ale" per man instead. Surely our generous-hearted Queen cannot be cognizant of such niggardly economy.]

And must Apollo's children be Denied the cup of sparkling wine,
When e'en the soul of Royalty
Is raptured by their strains divine?

Oh, for good old England's glory,
When Plenty with no niggard hand,
While uncursed by Whig or Tory,
Her smiling gifts strewed o'er the land!

Thou unjust steward! "the soldier's tear"
Shall reach our own Victoria's heart!
Take back thy shabby pot of beer,
And blush to play the "pot-boy's" part!

NAVAL ARCHITECTURE.

AN IMPORTANT AND NATIONAL WORK.

In one vol. 4to, price Ten Guineas in boards, and illustrated with a separate volume of large Draughts and numerous smaller Engravings,

THE ELEMENTS AND PRACTICE OF NAVAL ARCHITECTURE, developing in a clear and familiar manner the Principles of the Art, with all the requisite instruction for constructing and completing a Ship of every class, from the forming of the draught to the launching; with an extensive set of Tables of the Dimensions of the most approved Ship of each Class in the British Navy, of the different species of Merchant Vessels of the most approved construction, and of numerous Boats, &c., and illustrated with a great number of the most accurate Draughts of different classes of Ships and Vessels, from a line-of-battle Ship to a Boat of the smallest description; with another Series, on the same grand scale, elucidating the principles of Laying-off, &c., the greater part of them on a scale of nearly one fourth of an inch to a foot. In a country whose natural strength and greatest ornament is her Navy, it would be unnecessary to expatiate on the utility and value of this work. It is sufficient to say, that it comprises fully, both in theory and practice, all that can be required by the artist for a full and accurate knowledge of the art, both for the King's and the Merchant's service, from a first-rate Ship to the smallest Boat. In this work will, therefore, be found, detailed in a uniform and perspicuous style, all that can be required for instruction in this important art.

London: Simpkin, Marshall, and Co., and may be had (by order) of all Booksellers.

THE ROYAL CORONATION PERFUME,

Under the especial Patronage of Her Most Gracious Majesty THE QUEEN.

An elegant production, from the choicest Espritz, combining the exquisite fragrance of the choicest bouquet with a durability of Perfume unequalled by any of the numerous articles hitherto offered to the fashionable world, its delightfully refreshing odour is imparted to the handkerchief by a few drops only, and permanently retained, even after ablution, renders it far superior as an appendage to the Toilet, to anything of the kind now extant, and eminently calculated to secure the patronage of the most fastidious connoisseur.

Prepared expressly for her Majesty's use on the occasion of the Coronation by the Proprietor, G. CHOCK, 63, Great Marylebone-street, Portland place, of whom it may be obtained, in bottles, 2s. 6d and 4s. 6d. each.

WHITE'S ESSENCE of EGLANTINE.

—A highly fashionable and peculiar HANDKERCHIEF SCENT, possessing extracts from the most fragrant flowers, and forming a perfume at once sweet, agreeable and refreshing.

Prepared only by Thomas White, Chemist, 24, Cornhill, London. In bottles at 2s. 6d and 4s. 6d each. Also by the following Agents:—Mr. Bannington, 6, Haymarket; Mr. Wagstaff, 122, Piccadilly; Mr. Sanger, 150, Oxford street; Mr. Burnell, 180, Strand; Mr. Hunt-man, 69, Dean Holborn; Mr. Vinson, 124, Fenchurch street; Mr. Sutch, 5, St. James's street, Brighton; Messrs. H. and E. Greville, Northampton; Mr. Drury, Lincoln; Mr. Taylor, 8, St. Ann's-square, Manchester; Messrs. Bottler and Coupland, 24, Castle street, Liverpool, and by all respectable Chemists and Perfumers in the kingdom.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA,

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF,

originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe. A delicately new, elegant, and refreshing Perfume, superior to every article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling rank and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest Eau-de-Cologne must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has presumed a host of counterfeits. Perfumers, whose appearance or respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Patterson, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London excepting at the Crown, Shop 63d, Oxford street, but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Stud. Sold in Bottles, at 3s. 6d., 7s., and 15s. each.

SARSAPARILLA.

FRANKS'S SARSINE PASTE, or ALKALINE COMPOUND OF SARSAPARILLA.

This Compound contains the active principle of Sarsaparilla, in combination with other Vegetable alteratives and tonics in the most pure and concentrated form. It will keep in all climates, and not deteriorate by age.

In Rheumatic Gout, and all Neuralgic Affections—in Dyspepsia, Impurity of the Skin, Scrofulous Affections, enlarged Glands, Morbid Secretions, &c.—in General Debility, and where the constitution has been impaired by the continued use or abuse of Mercury and, in fine, wherever it is desirable to administer the full benefit of Sarsaparilla, this form of that valuable Vegetable will be found of the greatest service.

Prepared only by GEORGE FRANKS, Surgeon, 90, Blackfriars Road, London, and may be had of all Wholesale and Retail Patent Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom, in Bottles at 2s. 6d., and 11s. each.

Mr. FRANKS may be consulted daily until Two o'clock.

CAUTION.—The Public are protected against Counterfeits by the name "George Franks, Blackfriars Road," being engraved on the Government Stamp attached to each Package.

MEDICAL TESTIMONIAL in FAVOUR OF DR. BARKER'S GOUT & RHEUMATISM PILLS.

To Dr. Barker, Edinburgh.

Leith, December 14, 1835.

Dear Sir,—I willingly bear testimony to many most remarkable cures of Gout and Rheumatism, which have lately come under my observation, by your very singular and effective remedy, and, what adds much to its value, is its never failing speedy effects on the general health.—I am, &c. J. CARNIE, M.D.

These Pills are prepared by Dr. Barker, Edinburgh, and sold in boxes at 1s. 9d. each by all respectable Druggists and Patent Medicine Venders throughout the kingdom. Of whom may also be had BARKER'S APERIENT ANTIBILIOUS PILLS, in boxes at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each.

J. and R. Raines, Edinburgh, Wholesale Agents; and sold by Barclay and Sons; W. Sutton and Co., T. Butler, E. Edwards, and Hannay and Co., London.

WATERPROOF CLOTHING—

G. and W. H. GILLOTT, Tailors, of No. 86, Strand, beg to acquaint the Nobility, Gentry, and Public, that they have on hand a large stock of Cloth, Waterproofed by the British Waterproofing Company, 132, West Strand. This Cloth possesses all the advantages of the Macintosh in resisting the wet, at the same time it freely allows the perspiration of the body to escape through its texture, and the surface of the cloth is not in the slightest degree injured. Great Coats, Cloaks, and Trowsers made to order, with the utmost despatch, at the trifling additional charge of 6s. for a Great-Coat, 5s. a Dress-Coat, and 3s. Pantaloons.

MATHEMATICS, NAVIGATION, FORTIFICATION, SURVEYING, & the USE of the GLOBES.

Mr. E. CLIFFORD acquaints the Nobility and Gentry that he gives private Lessons in the various branches of the MATHEMATICS — Arithmetic, Algebra, Euclid, Trigonometry, Analytical Geometry, Conic-Sections, Spherics, Fluxions, Mechanics, Astronomy, &c. Scientific Geography, Determination of Latitudes and Longitudes by Astronomical Observations, Trigonometrical Surveying, &c. taught. Gentlemen prepared for the Universities, Military or Naval Colleges. Those designed for Engineers, Architects, Surveyors, may receive that instruction which constitutes the requisite scientific knowledge in those Professions.

METCALFE'S NEW and ORIGINAL PATTERN of TOOTH-BRUSH, made on the most scientific principle, and patronised by the most eminent of the faculty. This celebrated brush will search thoroughly into the divisions of the teeth, and will clean in the most effectual and extraordinary manner. Metcalfe's Brushes are famous for being made on a plan that the hairs never come loose in the mouth. An improved clothes brush, that cleans in a third part of the usual time, and incapable of injuring the finest nap. A newly-invented brush for cleaning velvet with quick and satisfactory effect. The much approved flesh-brushes, as recommended by the faculty. Penetrating hair-brushes, with the durable unbleached Russia bristles, and combs of all descriptions, at METCALFE'S, Oxford street, opposite Harewood-place, (two doors west of Hollis-street.)

SHEFFIELD PLATED DISH COVERS,

—Entire SETS of DISH COVERS, plain and shaped, with rich silver mountings, handles, and shields, finished within the last month, are now submitted to inspection at JOHN COWLE'S SHOW ROOM, 11, Hollis-street, Cavendish-square, warranted of Sheffield Manufacture, as J. C. can certify from his experience of twenty-four years in the trade, that no plated articles can be relied on but those manufactured of Sheffield. Sheffield has for centuries been celebrated for the manufacture of Plated Goods and Cutlery. Soup and Sauce Tureens, and every other requisite to complete the table service.

HODGSONS' EAST INDIA PALE ALE.

E. ABBOTT and Co., Wapping, are exclusively supplied by Messrs Hodgsons and Abbott, of Bow Brewery, with this long celebrated Beer, for home consumption; orders for which, in 18-gallon casks or bottles, immediately attended to. Export orders executed.

City Office, 98, Gracechurch street.

FAMILIES, TRAVELLERS, MASTERS OF SHIPS, AND SPORTSMEN,

MOXON'S EFFERVESCENT MAGNESIAN APERIENT,

decidedly the most generally useful Medicine ever offered to the public.

The unrivalled efficacy of the Magnesian in all Disorders of the Stomach and Bowels has obtained for it the uniform recommendation and approval of the faculty.

This unique preparation unites all the active powers of the most approved saline purgatives, with the palatable qualities of a glass of soda water. In torpid state of the liver and bowels, bilious affections, cholera morbus, pains in the head, or disordered state of the stomach, nausea, and violent sickness, it will be found a safe, speedy, and effectual remedy. It gives instantaneous relief in the heartburn, is of great service in preventing piles, retina, and gout, and in alleviating the febrile symptoms attendant on the latter affection. Derangement of the stomach and head, &c., arising from too free indulgence in the gratifications of the table, is speedily removed by a tea-spoonful taken early in the morning.

Prepared only by BENJAMIN MOXON, Chymist, Hull.

Wholesale Agents—Barclay and Sons, London; J. and R. Raines, Edinburgh and Dublin. Sold wholesale at all the Medicine Warehouses in London, and retail by all Venders of Medicines throughout the kingdom, in bottles at 2s. 9d.; 4s. 6d.; and in family bottles at 11s., containing the quantity of five of the 2s. 9d. size, a saving of 10 per cent. to the purchaser.

N.B.—Be careful to observe that "Moxon and Smith, Chymists, Hull," is engraved on the stamp, without which it cannot be genuine.

May be had as above, that very popular and much-esteemed preparation of sarsaparilla, the

CONCENTRATED COMPOUND DECOCTION,

Prepared by B. Moxon, Chymist, Hull.

"One table-spoonful added to a pint of pure water readily forms a pint of the Compound Decoction, and, in justice to the preparers, we must say, appears to be more impregnated with the virtues of the ingredients than the decoction made in the usual way."—See Gazette of Health and Practical Medicine for January, 1829.

In bottles at 4s. 6d., 12s., and 22s., the latter equivalent to 32 pints of the Compound Decoction of the London Pharmacopœia.

BARFIELD'S DIAMOND PLATE POWDER,

warranted not to wear the Plate.

It instantly cleans tarnish and dirt, and magically produces a most immutable polish upon Gold, Silver, Plated Goods, Brass, Tin, Copper, and makes British Plate Zinc, and Pewter, look as white as the best Silver.

Sold, wholesale and retail, at Hallet and Co.'s British Plate Factory, 46, Ludgate street, Bateman, Chemist to the Queen, No. 8, Castle-street, Leicester-square; S. Chapell, 84, Lombard-street, Wilson, 87, Fenchurch-street; Thomas and Co., Old Kent-road; Russell, 67, Whitechapel road; and at the Manufactory, 92, Fenchurch-street.

AGENTS WANTED for every Town in the Kingdom.

N.B.—Plate cleaned with this Powder will not again tarnish.

PORTSMOUTH, Feb. 1st.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Electra went to Spithead on Monday, was paid wages on Thursday, and has sailed for Rio Janeiro, to rejoin Commodore Sullivan in the Stag. She took out Commander Mainwaring to join that frigate, and Commander South and Lieut. Freeland to join the President. Etna surveying-vessel was taken in dock on Monday, and is to be repaired, caulked, &c., and fitted as a receiving-ship, to be stationed at Liverpool, to which port she will go next week. The Master and crew of the Victory are rigging her in dock, and will be employed in navigating her to Liverpool. Salamander steam frigate arrived from Woolwich on Monday; she is to proceed to-morrow to the North Coast of Spain, to relieve the Gorgon. The Master and crew of the Athol troop-ship have charge of the Salamander, and are to bring home the Gorgon. Seaflower was paid off on Tuesday: her late Commander, Lieut. N. Robilliard, was promoted to that rank on the occasion. He remains by the vessel until a Lieutenant joins. Spitfire steamer came into harbour on Thursday from Woolwich: she has since gone to Plymouth, and from thence is to proceed to the West Indies. Boadicea transport came to Spithead on Wednesday night, last from Falmouth: she brought invalids from the different corps in the Mediterranean, amounting to about 180, under command of Major Mason, of the 77th regt., and 16 convicts from the different British settlements in the Straits: they have been moved into the hulks in the harbour. The Boadicea is at Spithead, waiting orders. The Admiral Superintendent yesterday paid advance wages to the crews of Ganges and Daphne: those ships are expected to proceed to Lisbon to-morrow or Sunday. Water Witch will be undocked on the 12th inst. Ships in Port—Ganges, Daphne, Boadicea, at Spithead: Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Salamander, Seaflower, Cracker, Emerald, Messenger, in Harbour.

PLYMOUTH, Feb. 1st.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Jan. 25th.—Sailed the Emerald tender for Portsmouth. 26th—Sailed the Swale tender to Astrea, for Falmouth, with stores for the packet service. 27th—Sailed Devon tender for N. Coast of Spain, with stores for Lord J. Hay's squadron. 28th—Sailed Cameleon, 10, Lieut.-Com. G. M. Hunter, for Lisbon, from whence she goes to Sierra Leone; and after running down the coast, will proceed to join Commodore Sullivan, at Rio Janeiro. Sailed Goodwill tender with stores for the Dockyard at Pembroke. 29th—Acorn, 16, was commissioned this day, by Com. J. Adams, she is to have a complement of 110 men. 30th—Sailed Netley tender to Rl. Adelaide, for Liverpool, to bring round the newly raised seamen from that port. 31st—Malabar, 74, Capt. E. Harvey, was put out of commission this day. Feb. 1st.—Implacable, 74, will be commissioned this day, and the officers and crew of the Malabar turned over to her. The rigging and stores of the Malabar are to be used for the equipment of the Implacable. The Meteor steamer, Lt.-Com. R. D. Pritchard, will be taken into dock this day, to have her bottom examined, and her copper repaired. Windsor Castle, 76, in ordinary at this port, is ordered to be sent to Pembroke, to be taken to pieces. Spartiate, 76, is ordered to be fitted, at this port, for the reception of convicts. In harbour—Royal Adelaide, San Josef, Hercules, Implacable, Acorn, Meteor st.-v.

DEPTFORD, January 30.—Sailed, City of Rochester, for West Indies; Royal Sovereign, for St. Helena.—Remain, the Amity, for Bermuda and Bahamas.—The Carron steamer is to be docked at Deptford; and it is expected so will the Firebrand.—The names of the Spitfire and Fury, Scotch packets, are changed to the Pike and Asp.

We learn that Captain Nicolas and the officers of H.M.S. Hercules, together with Major de Blois, and the officers of the 52d Regt., then embarked on board of her for Barbadoes, have subscribed for a piece of plate to be presented to Lieut. Symons, R.N., commanding H.M.'s steam-packet Tagus, to mark their sense of his liberal and handsome conduct, in volunteering to tow the Hercules through the Gut of Gibraltar, and which he accomplished in less than six hours, on the 12th of October last; by which her passage to the West Indies was greatly accelerated, and Her Majesty's Government thereby largely benefited.

It is already known that Admiral Sir F. Maitland had given great offence to the Chinese, by entering their waters with the Wellesley and Algerine, and that insult had been offered to boats proceeding from the British ships. The following will be found to be the particulars of the whole case:—On 28th July an English boat was entering the Bogue, when certain Chinese boarded her, and insultingly demanded whether Adm. Maitland, "his women, or any of his people," were on board. On being answered in the negative the boat was allowed to proceed, but was subsequently boarded, and the same question asked. She was even fired at by some of the Chinese forts. The British Admiral, on learning these facts, immediately made sail towards Canton, and came to opposite the Bocca Tigris, the principal fort of the Chinese, with his own ship, the Wellesley, the Algerine, and another, a small vessel. All being cleared and ready for action, he sent on shore to demand reparation "for an insult offered (to use his own words) to the Sovereign of my country, in the person of myself, by firing at and boarding a British vessel under the pretext that I might be on board." The result was, that the Chinese Admiral deputed officers of rank to go on board the Wellesley, to disclaim all participation in the insult thus complained of, and at the same time to assure Sir F. Maitland that the offending parties should be punished; for that, in truth, the Chinese authorities would regard any insult offered to Sir F. Maitland, just as if it had been offered to their own Admiral. What a powerful peace-maker the broadside of a British man-of-war is!—Observer.

Capt. Charles Napier, recently appointed to the Powerful, at Sheerness, will sail to join the squadron under Admiral Sir Robert Stopford, in the Mediterranean station, about the 20th inst.

The greatest fears are entertained for the safety of the Diligence and Swift, revenue cruisers. The Hamilton is stranded at Kilrush. The Wellington lost boats, and sustained other damage. The Ferret cut away her mast; and the Dolphin was run foul of by a drifting vessel, and lost a cathead.

From a Correspondence.—The Diligence had left her Commander, Sir J. Reid, Bart., sick at Liverpool, and was in charge of Mr. Tetley, R.N., Chief Mate, when lost, with all hands, forty-one in number. Mr. Tetley was son of the late Capt. Tetley, R.N., and the much-respected Matron of Greenwich Hospital, and is most deeply and deservedly regretted.

The conduct of Lieut. Blissett, R.N., commanding the Dolphin cutter, his Chief Mate, Mr. J. B. Madden, R.N., and crew, during the late gales, in rendering assistance when wanted, has called forth a most handsome letter of thanks in the Galway papers.

Mr. R. Fauservis, Surgeon, R.N., 1838, to the Hydra steamer at Chatham, from whence the Hecla is ordered to Greenock to have engines and boilers fitted. The Buffalo brought home 70 sticks for line-of-battle ships' topmasts; also timber and planks for building and repairing ships and vessels, her marines were left at Van Diemen's Land, for the protection of the British residents.

DESTRUCTIVE ECONOMY.—From a correspondent (Palinurus) of the "Times."

"Two excellent pilots, one for the Bay of Fundy, the other for the river St. Lawrence, had served so faithfully, with the highest character and recommendation, on board our ships during the war, that a pension of 38*l.* a-year was bestowed upon each of them. An order, however, was received by the Commissioner of Bermuda (it is believed Sir T. Usher) to discontinue these pensions. That gallant officer naturally thought it was a mistake, as did the Naval Commander-in-Chief, and did not comply with the order, but wrote to the Admiralty, explaining to their Lordships, and requiring further orders. The answer was peremptory, and the pilots were told that their pensions were discontinued. They both retired in disgust, making the observation, that they should immediately go to the United States, and would never put their foot on board an English ship again, but they would pilot the Yankees if necessary; and they gave this warning—that if we ever had anything to do in the St. Lawrence, the Canadian pilots would most likely run our ships on shore. Mark the result, Sir. The Malabar, 74, has been on shore, and has been floated to England, with her bottom nearly knocked in, and with loss of guns, anchors, &c., and she will cost thousands to this country. The Cornwallis, 74, and Inconstant frigate, are both reported to have been also on shore in the river St. Lawrence."

Large drafts of volunteer seamen are constantly arriving from different ports, and are put on board H.M.S. Britannia for general service. She has now (January 21st) upwards of nine hundred men on her books, and more are expected by the tenders and steamers which have been sent away. These supernumeraries are daily exercised below and aloft, and kept ready for any ship that may require them: the greater part will doubtless be sent to Quebec, when the river St. Lawrence is navigable, to be employed on the lakes.—U. S. Journal.

We are happy to announce that Captain Sir W. Dillon, Knt., K.C.H., lately commanding Russell, 74, has been selected for good service pension.

An inquest was last week held at Chatham, on the body of Thomas Pert, late Captain of the after-guard of H.M.'s ship Russell, now lying at Sheerness. The coroner, before the jury were sworn, stated that the only evidence that would be laid before them, was a letter which had been placed in his hands by Mr. A. Kift, assist.-surgeon of Melville Hospital. The letter, which was signed "George Johnson," and not dated, merely described how the accident occurred, and there was no evidence to show that George Johnson was the Surgeon of the Russell. Several of the persons who were to form the jury expressed themselves against such a document being received, and asserted that it was not such evidence as would warrant them in finding a verdict. The Coroner, for want of evidence, dismissed the parties in attendance, and observed that the Lords of the Admiralty must be written to upon the subject. It was understood that the body of the deceased would be put into spirits, in order to preserve it. The Surgeon of the Russell, it was alleged, had gone to visit some friends in Scotland subsequently to hearing of the decease of Pert. On the 14th inst. the deceased was on the quarter-deck, next to the clearing hold, and in attempting to clear a tank which was being hauled up, he lost his balance, and pitched foremost down the hold, by which the top part of his skull was fractured. He lived two days after his admission into Melville Hospital—namely, from 16th to 18th inst., on which day he expired.

Mr. Thomas Skelton has been appointed Clerk to the Naval College, Portsmouth. This is the same gentleman who held the appointment on the former establishment.

The inhabitants of Berehaven have addressed Lieut. Evanson, R.N., on his removal from the command of the Coast-Guard, at Castletown, and sent him a piece of plate.

Military Intelligence.

Supplement to the London Gazette of Friday, Jan. 25.

Extract of a dispatch from Lieut.-Governor Sir George Arthur, K.C.H., to Lord Glenelg, dated Government House, Toronto, December 13, 1838.

At daylight, on 4th instant, a body of ruffians, amounting to about 400 men, landed at Moy, near the village of Windsor, about three miles above Sandwich, when, having set fire to and destroyed a steam-boat which was lying there, they proceeded to consume the barracks and two adjoining houses at Windsor, in which two Militia men were burned to death, shot the sentry, killed a man of colour who refused to join them, and in the most cold blooded and inhuman manner murdered Assistant Staff-Surg. Hume, who, unarmed, accidentally fell into their hands, mutilating his body with an axe and bowie knives. Tidings of the enormities perpetrated having reached Sandwich, the Militia, stationed at that post, speedily turned out, marched on Windsor, attacked the ruffians, and in a few minutes completely routed them, twenty-five were killed, and as many taken prisoners, and of the rest, who were dispersed, some effected their escape to Hog Island, on the American side, while others fled into the woods, where several of them have since been apprehended. The District Order, which has been published, and of which copies are herewith transmitted (No. 1, Dec. 10, 1838.), details the particulars of this atrocious outrage, and they are accompanied with Col. Airey's despatch (No. 2). The descent made on Windsor was but a feint, the intention being, as Gen Brady, of the U. States' Army, apprised Col. Airey, who was commanding at Fort Malden, to surprise that garrison, under the expectation that the 34th reg. would have moved off to support the Militia, at Sandwich, distant 18 miles. In this, however, the brigands were completely disappointed. At Sandwich, your Lordship is aware, there exists a French Canadian population, and, I am sure, Her Majesty's Government will learn with great satisfaction that they turned out as loyal subjects in the defence of the country on this occasion.

DISTRICT G.O. Toronto, Dec. 10, 1838.

His Excellency Major-Gen. Sir George Arthur feels much pleasure in communicating to the regular forces and Militia the gratifying information received by him from the western frontier.—A large body of pirates and brigands, belonging to the hostile combination in the neighbouring country, which has of late so much disturbed the peace of this province, after assembling in the neighbourhood of Detroit, and showing themselves at different points in the vicinity, at length had the hardihood to effect a landing near Windsor, about three miles from Sandwich, on the morning of 4th inst., where they immediately commenced their work of destruction by burning a steam-boat, called the Thames, and a house used as a barrack, making prisoners a small, but gallant party of Militia, quartered therein, who, in defending themselves against the attacking banditti, shot their leader, and eventually effected their escape. During the short time the brigands remained unmolested at Windsor, they used every effort, in vain, to induce the inhabitants to join them, and murdered one man, upon his refusal to take up arms against his country. Staff Assist.-Surg. Hume, a most worthy and meritorious officer, was also inhumanly murdered by the same body, although quite unarmed, and without offering them the slightest resistance. On the intelligence of these outrages reaching Sandwich, the brave and gallant Militia lost no time in assembling; and, under the command of Col. Prince, a spirited attack was forthwith made upon this wicked and inhuman banditti, who fled with precipitation to the woods, leaving behind them twenty-six of their number killed, and twenty-five prisoners. Several more of this band of murderers have since been captured; and, from the inclemency of the season, there is every reason to conclude that the remainder will be taken, or must perish in the woods. It affords His Excell. the Lieut.-Governor sincere pleasure to notice the unanimity and alacrity displayed by the Militia, in which the inhabitants, whether of British or Canadian origin, vied with each other in zeal and intrepidity in attacking and defeating this band of ruffians, as well as of performing the harassing duty of guarding the portion of the frontier left to their charge. To Captain Broderick, and the detachments of the Rl. Artillery and 34th reg. from Amherstburg, much praise is due for their alacrity and zeal. Of Captains Fell, Sparke, Leslie, Thebo, Elliott, and the Militia under their command, as well as of many gentlemen of Sandwich, who assisted in the attack and defeat of the invading force, Col. Prince makes honourable mention; and to those officers, as well as to the other officers and men engaged, His Excellency returns his sincere thanks. These facts, in addition to the complete overthrow of the invading force at Prescott, cannot fail to undeceive the criminal accomplices who remained behind their piratical associates, on the American shore, of the utter hopelessness of their attempts either to intimidate or corrupt the faithful and loyal people of Upper Canada; and if we have to appeal in vain to their feelings, and to the laws of both nations, which they so unjustly violate in making unprovoked war upon this province, common prudence, it may be hoped, will prevent their exposing themselves to the defeat and ignominious punishment which have hitherto attended their atrocious and infatuated attempts to invade Upper Canada. It is pleasing to his Excel. the Lieut. Governor and Major-Gen. commanding, to announce, that the loss of Her Majesty's subjects, with the exception of the victims of the murders before stated, has been very small, only two men being killed, and two slightly wounded, in the pursuit of the enemy.

By command, C. Foster, Col., Assist Adj.-Gen

Amherstburg, W.F., 12 at night, Dec. 4, 1838

Sir,—I have the honour to acquaint you, for the information of His Excel. the Major-Gen. commanding, that a party of brigands, amounting to 350 men, as has been stated to me by the prisoners taken, and now lodged in the Sandwich Gaol, landed this morning by daylight a little above Windsor ferry, about 10 miles above this post, and about three from Sandwich. They immediately set fire to a hired house used as a Militia barrack, a short distance out of the village, which was burnt to the ground. They also set fire to and burnt the steamer Thames, which, in consequence of having within the last few days burst her boiler, was lying at a small wharf close to the above house, without any one in her, preparatory to being repaired. Capt. Sparke, of Incorporate Volunteer Company, and some Militia under Col. Prince, immediately turned out from Sandwich and proceeded against these ruffians, and after a few exchanges of shots dispersed them, the brigands crossing the fields and taking to the woods, where Col. Prince did not consider it prudent to allow his men to follow them. On the first intimation of the landing, which was effected by the U. States' deemed it a disgrace to be carried on men's shoulders at such a moment."—Englishman, Nov. 13.—The Buffs mustered 33 officers and 608 non-commissioned r. and f.

3d Depot—Capt. Dore has been ordered to hold himself in readiness to embark in command of drafts for Bengal.

4th—Col. Leslie is about to embark to join his regt.

8th—The Horatio transport has arrived at Cove with the draft (1 Capt., 2 Sub., 81 men). The draft of this corps, lately debarked from the Barossa, was ordered to embark on board the above vessel on the 20th ult. Capts. Longfield and Chearnley accompany the draft.

9th—Private Paul has been sentenced to 14 years' transportation for striking Serjeant Hanly.

9th Depot—Ens. Gaynor has joined, preparatory to embarkation for Bengal.

11th Depot—Capt. Steuart is about to retire on half-pay. Major Pinckney has joined.

16th Depot—Capt. Colchester has rejoined from leave, and taken the command. It is said that the regt. will not be relieved this year from India.

21st—This regt. having fallen very much below its establishment, orders have been issued for all the recruiting staff of the districts in the United Kingdom to enlist men for it. It is to be regretted that Scotland cannot furnish recruits for one of its oldest national corps.

23d Depot—Capt. Phillips has joined from leave.

25th—The detacht. of 40 r. and f., increased to a comp. from Cork to Mallow, 19th Jan.; the detacht. of 1 Serjt., 12 r. and f., from Spike Island, to Cork, 19th Jan.

26th—Private Hogan has been sentenced to transportation for life for robbing Serjeant Pearson, and striking Serjt. Honeyman.

26th Depot—We understand that a vessel conveying from Scotland a large number of the recruits for this corps, was driven in the late gales on the Coast of Norway, and three fine young men died of hardship, cold, and exposure.

28th—We understand that many officers of this regt. are prepared to settle in New South Wales, but the deficiency of officers for duty, so many being now at home, prevents their wish to sell out being granted.

28th Depot—Capt. W. E. Sawbridge's leave has been extended to 27th February.

34th Depot—3 comps. and hd.-qrs., from Templemore to Nenagh, 25th Jan.; the comp. from Cappawhite to Nenagh, 30th and 31st Jan.; an officer, and 20 r. and f., from Nenagh to Killaloe, 1st Feb.

37th Depot—Lieuts. Clay, Ensigns Atkinson and Colthorpe, with 82 r. and f., form the next draft for Halifax, after which the depot will be a mere skeleton. They sail in the Hercules from Cove.

38th—Maj. Campbell has taken the command of the detachment at Omagh.

39th Depot—Capt. Straubenzee has joined, and assumed the command.

40th—At Deesa, on 6th Aug., the following soldiers were found guilty of drunkenness, striking their superiors, &c., and sentenced to be transported as felons:—Privates Thomas Moreland, James Dwyer, and Edward Malone, for seven years each; private Charles Sheehan for fourteen years.

41st—The regt. is now stationed at Belgaum in the Bombay Presidency, having relieved there the 2d Foot.

42d—We believe that there is no intention whatever of sending this regt. to the East Indies. It is supposed that it will embark for Canada in the summer.

45th—In the great dearth of troops, it seems matter for wonder that this regt. is so long left at Canterbury; in Kent there is certainly no want of soldiers at present, while in the West of England they are much required.

48th Depot—The Acting Paymastership is vacant by the death of Lieut. Stubbs, son of Quartermaster Stubbs, formerly of the corps.

49th Depot—Assist.-Surg. Dr. Garrett has leave until embarkation.

50th—Maj. Serjeantson has obtained leave till 11th March.

51st—Private R. Bellas was tried at Sydney on 10th Aug. for shooting James Hall, a runaway from one of the stations at Port Arthur. Bellas had been sent in pursuit and seized Hall, who, it being dark, refused to go any further, and ran off the road; Bellas called several times, and received no answer; but found that Hall had turned round to face him, to take his musket, as he supposed, or knock him down with his handcuffs as in recent cases, and he fired; Hall was leg-ironed and handcuffed. The ball passed through both wrists and the neck. The jury acquitted the prisoner, saying that they found it Justifiable Homicide.

54th—No expectation of the early return of this regt. can be entertained, as we learn that the usual arrangements for clothing and recruiting the corps in India for next year have been made.

57th Depot—Ens. Cassidy has joined, preparatory to embarking for Madras.

59th—Lieut. H. Perrott arrived at Malta in the Hermes from Gibraltar on 26th December.

65th—The regt. arrived at Sorel on 29th Dec. The left wing, under Maj. Farquharson, has moved to Kingston, Upper Canada. Two comps. left Quebec on 19th, and another on 20th, in sleighs, for the Chambly river.

70th Depot—under command of Captain Taylor, marched into Limerick from Nenagh on Saturday, and were stationed in the New Barracks. On Thursday they embarked in the Clarence steamer, for Clare Castle.

71st—have contributed a day's pay, 48*l.* 17*s.* 10*d.*, for the relief of the families of the loyal volunteers who were killed at Lisgoile and Odelltown.

73d Depot—Under Maj. Vander Meulen, were to return in the Clarence steamer yesterday, from Clare Castle, and occupy the Castle Barracks, Limerick, which will then be composed of the Royal Horse Artillery, a squadron 6th Dragoons, 10th regt., and 73d depot; the latter number 200 rank and file.

75th—The draft and 8 supernumeraries (3 Officers and 102 men), from Boyle to Dublin, 29th to 6th Feb.

78th—Ensign D. D. Wemyss, son of Col. Wemyss, C.B., late Brigade-Major at Limerick, has joined at Glasgow.

80th Depot—Lieut. Fraser has leave to 27th Feb.

82d Depot—Capt. Eustace has leave to 20th Feb.

86th—A party has been sent from Stockport to Ennis, to recruit.

88th—1 comp. of 40 r. and f., from Templemore to Cappawhite, 28th to 30th Jan.

92d—Col. M'Donald, C.B., on 28th Dec. gave an elegant soirée at the Auberge de Castille, which was honoured by the presence of the Queen Dowager.

92d Depot—From Limerick to Birr, 31st to 4th Feb.; the detacht. from Killaloe to Nenagh, to join hd.-qrs., en route, 1st Feb.

96th—The remaining party of this regt. (1 Serjt. and 12 men) embarked in the Victoria steamer for Liverpool on the 21st Jan.

97th—4 comps. and hd.-qrs., from Birr to Dublin, 28th Jan. to 2d Feb.; 1 comp. from Maryboro' to Dublin, 31st Jan. to 2d Feb.

99th—1 comp. of 40 r. and f., from Athlone to Maryboro', 28th to 31st Jan.

Rl. Artillery—Reports are still rife that companies will be sent to Halifax in the spring. The Master-General will, it is expected, bring before Parliament a plan for the increase of the corps.

G. O., 25th Jan.—The Master-General has been pleased to approve of Assist-Surgeon Parratt being attached to the Horse Artillery, in Ireland, in the place of Assist. Surgeon Williams, from the 17th inst. A. Dickson, D. A. General.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE BRITISH ARMY.—Corrected to this Day.

Last week the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge and family visited the Model of the Battle of Waterloo, by appointment, and after an examination of some hours, expressed themselves highly gratified with this most interesting exhibition.

Staff Assist.-Surgeon John J. Hume, M.D., was sh dead by a band of brigands at Sandwich, Upper Canada.

The Ethelfred freight ship had arrived at Cove and t drafts of the 14th and 70th regts. were to embark on boa that vessel on the 29th ult., for the West Indies.

(CIRCULAR.) War-office, Jan. 17, 1839.

Sir,—I am directed to request, with a view to supply this office with information which is often required for the due settlement of the regimental accounts, and to obviate also the necessity of requiring copies of Courts-Martial sentences in proof of the correctness of deductions in the pay lists, on account of the forfeitures awarded by such Courts Martial, you will, at the expiration of each quarter, commencing with that just ended, furnish the Secretary of War with a return according to the inclosed form, specifying the particulars therein required of every Court-Martial during the present three months, on any officer, non commissioned officer, or soldier, belonging to the regiment under your command. I have, &c.,

L. SULLIVAN.

Lieut. Jones, late 27th regt., is appointed Captain and Adjutant to the 2d Provisional Battalion of Upper Canada Militia, called out by Sir George Arthur. George Duggan, Esq., Paym. Assist.-Surgeon Humphreys, 85th, is appointed Surgeon to 3d battalion, T. Bentley, Esq., Adjutant. S. Purdon, Esq., Captain 4th battalion. Quarter-Master Ross, late 42d, to 1st Provisional Battalion; Wm. G. Rochforte, Esq., Major; C. Fitzgibbon, Esq., Ensign; L. O'Brien, Esq., Surgeon. Lieut.-Col. Thorne to command the 2d battalion; Maj. Sadlier, late 37th, to 8th battalion, and Assist.-Surgeon M'Gregor, late 32d, Sugeon of 11th battalion.

The office of Surveyor-General to South Australia is vacant in consequence of the resignation of Col. Light. The salary hitherto has been only 400*l.* per annum; but it is understood to be the intention of Her Majesty's Colonization Commissioners, with whom the appointment rests, to advance the salary considerably, so as to command the services of a first-rate Surveyor. An officer of the Engineers would, we are informed, be preferred.

Canada.—On General Amherst completing the conquest of Canada in 1760, by the surrender of Montreal, Smollett calls it "a conquest the most important of any that ever the British arms achieved; whether we consider the safety of the English colonies in North America, now secured from invasion and encroachment; the extent and fertility of the country subdued; or the whole Indian commerce thus transferred to the traders of Great Britain."

East India Intelligence.

War in India.—We take the following from that excellent periodical, the Asiatic Journal:—We have mentioned the good spirit of the native troops; and it is gratifying to observe, from various testimonies now before us, that the alacrity of the Sepoys to engage in the expedition, and to cross the dreaded Indus, is striking and general. "Intelligence from all the stations in the Upper Provinces through which the regiments intended for service have marched," it is stated in the Englishman, "confirms the reports of the enthusiasm prevailing amongst the Sepoys. They seem to have an idea that they are going against a formidable enemy, whom it would be an honour to thrash. The feeling is shared by the European troops, who are quite intoxicated with joy. Each corps, on leaving cantonments, shouted continuously for miles; in fact, their delight set at defiance all the efforts of commanding officers, whose words of command were drowned in the deafening cheers of the men." Another paper says,—"The accounts of the high spirits and alacrity which pervade the troops ordered on service, men as well as officers, Natives as well as Europeans, present a most gratifying omen of the event of the impending contest, let the enemies to be encountered be whom they may. There is scarcely an officer holding a post likely to prevent him from joining in the campaign, who has not urgently requested leave to resign it, however valuable, in order to return to his regimental duties; and the Sepoys on leave of absence at the different stations have actually beset all who could give information, with inquiries whether their corps was ordered for field service, and on receiving an answer in the affirmative, they one and all abandoned the remainder of their leave, and set out to join immediately."

Advance of the Army of the Indus.—Kurnaul, Nov. 8.—This morning Major-Gen. Sir Willoughby Cotton, and the staff of the 1st division; the brigade of Horse Artillery, under Brigadier Graham, C.B.; the 13th L.I., 16th and 48th regs. (forming Col. Sale's brigade); the 31st N.I., under Major Thomson; the brigade under Col. Roberts, consisting of the Eur. Reg., commanded by Major Warren (Col. Orchard being F. Officer of the day), the 3d company of Sappers and Miners, and the 35th and 37th N.I., marched for Ferozepore. The 21st N.I., under Col. Palmer, likewise marched to join the escort of the Governor-General. The 21st N.I., and the Horse Artillery proceed by Umballah, as did the 3d Cavalry; but the others march respectively by Khyatul and Pahavar, as previously arranged.

Kurnaul, Nov. 9.—Major-Gen. Duncan marched yesterday morning with Brigadier Roberts's brigade. The corps which marched this day were the 3d Buffs, the 2d, 5th, 42d, 43d, and 53d regiments of N.I., and a company of Sappers. They proceed by Pahavar and Khyatul, according to the divisions to which they respectively belong.

Routes of the Army.—The following are the routes by which the four columns of the Field Army will move upon Ferozepore:—

via	via	via	via
Meerut	Kythut	Puhawa	Kurnaul
Delhi	Durbal	Golah	Shahabad
Syndpore	Sungowal	Munsorpoor	Umballah
Nahora	Bhudoun	Bhasoor	Rajpoora
Beroke	Bagapatan	Bussereah	Sirhind
Kut Kupora	Moodka	Mozah	Loodianah

Right Column, via Umballah.—3d and 4th L.C., 9 troops of Horse Artillery, and 2 companies of Foot Artillery; 16 stages, 3 halts and marches from Kurnaul, 7th Nov.

Right Centre Column, via Puhawa.—European Reg. Sappers, 5th, 28th, 35th, 37th, and 53d regiments; 17 stages and 3 halts, marches from Kurnaul, 8th Nov.

Left Centre Column, via Khyatul.—Buffs, 13th Lt. Inf., 2d, 16th, 27th, 31st, 42d, 43d, and 48th regs.; 16 stages and 3 halts, marches 9th Nov.

Left Column, via Delhi.—Lancers, 2d Cavalry, and Camel Battery; 35 stages and 4 halts.

Lieut. Kewney, of the Quartermaster-General's Department of the Army of the Indus, we are sorry to say, shot himself on the morning of 5th Nov. No cause can be assigned for the act, unless exposure to the sun, by riding out constantly, as was his habit, during all hours of the day.—Bengal Hurkaru, Nov. 28.

The 14th N.I. do not, we learn, proceed to Futtehgur. Sickness, to a considerable extent, prevails in this reg., and has continued for the last seven months and a half. In this period 65 men have died, and 100 men sent to their homes by the Station Medical Committee.

The Naval force now proceeding to the Indus is to be commanded by Capt. Pepper, an able and experienced seaman. The promotion of Capt. Rose and Commander Haines to their respective grades is also confirmed. We have also learnt that the Court of Directors had sent circulars to the officers of the Indian Navy in England, and to such as they had advices of having left Bombay, offering pensions to one-third of the service. Pensions were accordingly accepted by Commander Wells and Lieut. Boscawen. By this provision, Captains are entitled to pensions of 800*l.* in rotation, whether they retire or remain in the service.—Bombay Gazette, Nov. 14.

Minister to Runjeet Singh.—The Governor-General of India has been pleased to promulgate the following arrangements:—Capt. C. M. Wade, Political Agent at Loodianah, will proceed at the proper season to join the army of Maharaja Runjeet Singh, at Peshawar, and will be charged under such instructions as shall be furnished to him with the superintendence of all affairs of the British Government connected with the dominions and troops of his Highness. Capt. Wade will be assisted at Peshawar by the following officers: Lieut. F. Mackeson, British Agent for the navigation of the Indus, and Lieut. J. D. Cunningham, of the Bengal Engineers.

Movements of Her Majesty's Regiments.—The following movements of H.M.'s regs. have been carried into effect in the manner specified as soon as practicable.

H.M.'s 9th Reg. of Foot.—From Chinaurah to Hazareebaugh, when the necessary carriage, cattle, and camp equipage are supplied, embarking their sick by water to Dinapore, whence they will march to Hazareebaugh.

31st Reg.—From Dinapore to Ghazeepore, as soon as furnished with the requisite carriage, embarking their sick by water.

44th Reg.—From Ghazeepore to Meerut, on the arrival of the 31st, embarking their sick by water to Ghurmuckteir Ghaut, and thence by land to Meerut.

49th Reg.—From Hazareebaugh to Dinapore as soon as practicable.

We learn that Lieut. Charles Darby, 52d N.I., has been discharged from the service by sentence of a General Court Martial. The particulars have not yet transpired.

Insubordination in the 48th N.I.—This regiment had been reported to the Commander-in-Chief for certain disorderly conduct on the subject of carrying their knapsacks. He accordingly issued an order in which he represented the inconvenience which would accrue to themselves if they marched without having about their persons the articles they are ordered to carry, and likewise ordered three sepoys, who were principals and instigators of the insubordination, to be discharged the Service.

Movements of Artillery and Local Horse, Head-quarters, Simla, Oct. 31st.—The 1st troop, 1st brigade of Horse Artillery, will commence its march for Ferozepore as soon as practicable, for the purpose of being attached to the escort of the Governor-General, on his Lordship's march into the Punjaub. The 4th troop, 3d brigade Horse Artillery to which this duty was originally assigned is placed under the orders of Col. Simpson commanding the force in the service of Shah Shoojah-ool-Moolk, and will continue attached to it, until relieved by the two troops of Horse Artillery, commanded by Capt. W. Anderson. Two ressallahs from the 2d Local Horse are to be detached.

THE LATE LIEUT.-GEN. SIR JOHN ELLEY, K.C.B., K.C.H.

THIS truly-gallant veteran of a hundred battles expired on the 23d of last month, at his seat, Ampton House, near Andover, Hants, at the age of 75, having been born on the 9th of January, 1764. It may, indeed, be said of Sir John, that of the brave he was one of the bravest, for never yet did soldier deal out heavier blows on the foes of his country than did this gallant warrior. He was born at Leeds, in Yorkshire, his father being a respectable paper-manufacturer of that town, who gave his son a good education, and placed him with a solicitor, 16th Depot—Capt. [illegible] that the regt. will not be taken the command. It is [illegible] relieved this year from Indi..

21st—This regt. having fallen very much below its establishment, orders have been issued for all the recruiting stations of the districts in the United Kingdom to enlist men for it. It is to be regretted that Scotland cannot furnish recruits for one of its oldest national corps.

trooper by Corporal [illegible] and [illegible]ncreased to a comp. fr[illegible] He was promoted to Troop Quartermaster, 4th June, 1790, and was Acting Adjutant in the campaigns of 1793, 4, and 5, in Flanders, and was present at most of the battles fought, and at the siege of Valenciennes, &c. He was appointed Cornet, 6th June, 1794, and the 26th Jan., 1796, he obtained a Lieutenancy in his regt.; 24th Oct., 1799, was appointed Captain-Lieutenant; 26th Feb., 1801, Captain; Major, 29th Nov., 1804; and Lt.-Col., 6th March, 1806. He served as Assist. Adjt.-Gen. to the cavalry in Spain, in the campaign of 1808 and 1809, and was present at the affair of Sahagun, Majorca, Benevente, and Lugo, and in the battle of Corunna. As an Assist. Adjt.-General, he was attached to the cavalry in Spain and Portugal, during the campaigns of the following years; was in the battle of Talavera; had the command of the rear-guard of cavalry, which covered the advance corps of the army when it retired over the Alberche; was in the battles of Fuentes D'Onor, Salamanca, Vittoria, Orthes, and Toulouse; in every action of importance; and finally served in the Netherlands, and was present at the battle of Waterloo. For his services on these occasions, he was appointed a K.C.B., and received a cross, and two clasps, from the British government. He was also appointed a Knight of the Austrian Order of Maria Theresa, and a Knight of the fourth class of the Russian Order of St. George. He obtained the rank of Colonel in the Army, 7th March, 1813; 12th August, 1819, that of Maj.-Gen.; and 10th Jan., 1837, that of Lieut.-General. He was appointed Colonel of the 17th Lt. Dragoons, 23d Nov., 1829. Sir John held also the Governorship of Galway, a sinecure, which will not be filled up. He represented Windsor in Sir Robert Peel's Parliament, of whose party and politics he was, while in the house, an active supporter, as far as voting went. He spoke but seldom. It is recorded of Sir John Elley, in Scott's "Letters to his Kinsfolk," that there were found on the field of Waterloo more than one of Napoleon's cuirassiers cleft to the chine by the stalwart arm of this gallant officer.

The following letter evinces the generous feelings of the soldier towards his old and attached war-horse:—

"Union Club, May 22d, 1826.

"MY DEAR RAMSBOTTOM,—Custom in some measure reconciles, if it does not justify, a liberty taken with a very old acquaintance, and when the subject is known to you, I am certain I need not add any other apology for this communication.

"I am engaged as counsel to plead the cause of a poor old war-horse, whose cognomen is Salamanca, and his age 24 years. This gallant animal embarked at Portsmouth for Lisbon in the year 1808, then six years old, and shared the dangers of the following battles—Talavera-de-la-Reyna, Busaco, Fuentes D'Onor, Salamanca, (severely wounded, and remained on the field throughout the night unable to rise), Vittoria, Pyrenees, Orthes, and Toulouse, returning to England with the Army at the peace of 1814.

"In the following year, embarked at Ramsgate for Ostend, and stood the brunt at Waterloo; returned once again to England when the allied armies quitted France, and in the year 1820 embarked for Ireland, and in this year for the last time to Old England, drooping from extraordinary length of service; still possessing undaunted courage, exhibiting the remains of a fine and generous animal, which never lost a day's work, but from wounds, during the period of 18 years.

"In the course of the coming month I am recommended to go abroad for the benefit of health, deranged by many and severe wounds, and having no means within myself to afford this faithful slave repose by turning him out, I am induced to seek your kind offices with our universally esteemed friend Lord Harcourt, to admit within his Lordship's rangership this worthy pensioner. I really consider this object of my solicitude would be an ornament among the cattle enjoying freedom and repose in the royal domain of our beloved Monarch; and I am persuaded, should it not be in the power of my Lord Harcourt to meet this appeal in correspondence with my wishes, I shall have the benefit of his Lordship's forgiveness for this liberty, arising out of pure humanity, and an anxiety to pay the debt immense of endless gratitude to the animal that has carried me in safety through many a hard-fought day.

"Believe me to remain, with true regard, my dear Ramsbottom, yours sincerely and assuredly,

"JOHN ELLEY.

"J. Ramsbottom, Esq., M.P., Windsor."

It is almost needless to say that the request of the gallant officer was immediately acceded to by George the Fourth, and the old charger ended his days in the quiet shades of Windsor Park.

From Grant's "Recollections of the House of Commons," published in 1838, we will add a few passages regarding this noble veteran. We have but little faith in Mr. Grant's opinions, but his sketches have an amusing interest.

"Sir John Elley did not often trouble either himself or the house with his speeches, but whenever he did 'drop a word or two,' to use his own expression, he was always listened to with attention. There was something, indeed, so indicative of good nature in his appearance, that no other feeling than one of kindliness could be shown towards him by the house. Both his matter and manner were generally humorous. His speeches had always the merit of originality. He never attempted argument; nor did he try his hand at declamation. The utmost extent of his ambition, as a parliamentary orator, seemed to be to excite a laugh in his audience. His observations had generally something humorous in them; and their effect was greatly heightened by his odd manner of delivering them. He spoke in a slow cautious manner, and in a curious lisping tone of voice, caused in a great measure by the loss of some of his teeth. There was a perpetual smile on his countenance when on his legs, and whenever he came to the end of any sentence, which he deemed adapted to produce a laugh, he buried his head in his breast, and waited patiently in that position, until the features of honourable members had resumed their wonted gravity. There was something unspeakably odd in the way in which Sir John managed his head and neck when addressing the house. His shirt-collar was always so high as to press against his ears, consequently very little of his neck was seen to ordinary circumstances. The moment, however, he rose to speak, he stretched his neck to such an extent, that one could not help inferring that it possessed something of the elastic properties of India rubber. The sudden transition from this crane-like appearance of Sir John's neck to the insertion of his head in his breast, as if he had no neck at all, had, as I have just said, a very ludicrous effect and this oddness of his manner, coupled with the humorous character of his matter, afforded much amusement to the house; which seemed to be in Sir John's estimation the great business of a legislator.

"He was a most exemplary Tory in so far as his votes were concerned; but he showed no traces of party virulence in his speeches. They were full of good nature. He made no party allusions to any one. He seemed to be on good terms with everybody, and everybody in return seemed to feel kindly towards him. Sir John Elley is a man considerably advanced in years. He is upwards of sixty. The active military service he performed in the Peninsula, and various other parts of the world, has contributed to make him look older than he really is. He has somewhat of an infirm appearance. He is tall, and rather slenderly made. His face inclines to the angular form. His nose is sharp, and of large proportions. His complexion is sallow, and his hair of an iron grey colour. He has moderately-sized whiskers and large eyebrows. Sir John was manifestly uncomfortable in the house. It was a mistake in his destiny to send him there. He usually leaned on his staff with both hands. At times he was to be seen resting the back of his head against the wall, for he almost invariably sat on the backmost bench. In such cases he usually took a nap to himself, especially if the proceedings, which was then no uncommon occurrence, had a soporific tendency. The only time he ever seemed to enjoy himself, was when military matters were under discussion. He was in the third heaven when Mr Maclean, or Lord Mahon, or any body else, brought the affairs of Spain before the house. At all other times he was so much out of his element, that he appeared as dull as if he had, like Alexander Selkirk, been the sole inhabitant of some desert isle. Legislation had no pleasures for him; and he proved this by the frequency of his absence from the house. His great source of enjoyment is in talking over the adventures of his military career, in the Junior United Service Club. But for that club, life would have but little attractions to Sir John. It is an institution dear and dear to his heart. He talks about it wherever he chances to be. He thought about it, and longed to be in it, when performing his parliamentary duties, and it was then, as it still is, the subject of his frequent visions by night. He is excellent company there: his society is much counted by the members; as, indeed, from the blandness of his manners, it could not fail to be.

"Sir John, though not in the habit of attacking others, was fond of being attacked himself. I have actually seen him literally implore honourable members to attack him. One day in the beginning of March last year, Mr. Hume, in bringing the subject of the late brevet before the house, made an attack on various officers in the army. Sir John listened with most exemplary attention to every word the then member for Middlesex said, and when he sat down, there was an evident expression of disappointment impressed on Sir John's countenance. I was quite at a loss to account for this, as almost every one else seemed quite delighted to see Mr. Hume resume his seat. But the secret was soon out. Sir John rose, and after remarking that the honourable member had attacked several other officers, he said, in most emphatic terms, 'Why did not the honourable member attack me?' However, he soon got, or rather took an opportunity of revenging himself on Mr Hume for the neglect of the latter. Sir John had been eulogising some friend of his as a most loyal subject, when the following smart affair took place:—Mr. Hume—'Who is not a loyal subject?' Sir John Elley—'Joseph Hume is not.' [Loud laughter, and cries of 'Order, order.'] Mr. Hume—'I tell the gallant gentleman that he has given utterance to an untruth. There is not a more loyal subject than I am in the empire.' [Hear, hear! and cries of 'Order!'] Sir John Elley—'I beg to refer to the honourable gentleman's conduct in the Canadian affair.' Mr. Hume again rose, amidst great uproar, when the Speaker called on Sir John to withdraw his charge of disloyalty against the honourable member for Middlesex, which having been done, order was restored in the house.

"I have no notion that Sir John will again solicit the suffrages of the electors of Windsor, or of any other constituency. If he do, it must only be from the conviction that every Tory ought, while he has life, to oppose to the utmost of his power the progress of the 'revolutionary mania.' All his private predilections would lead him to divide the remainder of his days between his own home and the Junior United Service Club."

TOM ALLEN.

"Here a sheer hulk lies poor Tom Bowling."—DIBDIN.

THE monuments and memorials of our own immortal Nelson are widely scattered over the kingdom, to die only when the name of British valour shall be forgotten; but the living witnesses and partners of his glory are fast passing from among us, and one of the most interesting though least conspicuous of the few that remained was lately struck down by the hand of death, in the person of his long-tried servant, Tom Allen, with almost as much celerity as if he had fallen with his master on the deck of the Victory.

It appears that his wife had made an excursion to town, and that he started to meet her on her return, in a raw and foggy evening. On assisting her from the omnibus, however, she was found so ill, that she was unable to walk—her husband ran back for the invalid chair belonging to the Hospital, in which she was carried as far as the entrance-gate, when Allen himself suddenly dropped, and died in a quarter of an hour, either it is supposed from apoplexy or the breaking of a blood-vessel, induced by extreme cold.

This fine specimen of the true British sailor was born at Burnham Thorpe, Norfolk, in 1764; he entered the service on board the Agamemnon, 64 guns, in the early part of 1793, under the command of Capt. Nelson. His period of service was during pretty nearly the whole of the hero's career; that is, during the most glorious epoch of our naval history, and his share in the perils and triumphs then encountered was large. He was shortly afterwards selected by his brave Captain and fellow-townsman for his confidential servant; and in that capacity, such was his integrity and devotion to his master, that the really unlimited reliance of the hero on his zealously-attached follower was quite proverbial. Tom had the custody of his keys, plate, jewels,—everything, even his person, was in a great degree in Tom's custody, for on all visits ashore, or when ill from wounds, Tom slept near his master; and when from the latter cause, as was sometimes the case, Nelson had not strength of voice sufficient to awaken his "wally de sham," a string was affixed to Tom's shirt-collar for that purpose.

When Lord Nelson quitted Merton to sail for Cadiz on board the Victory, in Sept., 1805, Tom was left there (at Merton) with orders to join his master as soon as possible, which, unhappily, was impracticable, the last ship having sailed before his arrival at Portsmouth: this was poor Tom's great misfortune, and a frequent subject of unavailing regret.

From 1805 to 1831, he was left much to his own resources, and in the neighbourhood of his birth-place was in various services and occupations to enable him to support his family, and lastly in that of Capt. Sir W. Bolton, R.N., at Costessey, Norwich. On the decease of that gentleman, he was again reduced to the alternative of seeking an asylum of the humblest kind at his native village—possibly the poor-house—from which he was rescued by the representations of Mr. P. N. Scott, Surgeon, of Norwich, aided by the powerful influence of Sir Thomas Hardy, then one of the Lords of the Admiralty, and Sir William Beatty, M.D. (Physician at the Royal Hospital at Greenwich), and placed in that honourable retreat, he ended his humble but not inglorious career on Friday, 23d Nov., 1838.

There are now at Greenwich many nobler wrecks of the English veteran than Allen personally presented, but there are none who are a more complete sailor in thought, feeling, and action. He is said to have furnished the anecdotes of Captain Chamier's "Ben Brace," and to have betrayed some indignation when he understood that he had made his appearance in the world under any name but his own; but, in fact, a very different character was there engrafted on some events of his life. Allen always reminded us of the shattered mast of his former dwellings; his face was seared by wind and weather, but there was an unyielding strength about his short and stunted frame that seemed to defy the attacks of time; his long hair was almost as black and his eye as piercing as when he was in his youth, and might, according to his own belief, "have married either of the Princesses of Naples, if he had been so minded." He was a mixture of honest hardihood, untutored simplicity, pardonable vanity, and nautical prejudice—a fine example of the British tar, who acknowledges but three principles of action—love for his country, hatred of her enemies, and veneration for his Captain; and of that country Tom deserved well, for beside being the faithful "wally de sham," as he styled himself, of her noblest hero, he wore away the vigour of his arm in her defence (to use his own words) "in fourteen skrimmages and fifteen reg'lar engagements" (not to reckon "affairs" of inferior note) being wounded three several times, once most severely; but as Tom often said, "Thanks be to God, his 'precious eyes and limbs' were spared."

Lord Nelson had, in his earthly resting-place, the finest compliment ever paid to departed greatness—for the dome of St. Paul's is indeed a mausoleum worthy of a nation's thanks. Allen lies at Greenwich Hospital, as splendid a tribute, in its way, from English gratitude to her true-hearted defenders. Peace be with the greater and the less! We shall not be blamed in thus classing together the honourable and the honest—we can never forget the first—we ought not to forget the last of the "Agamemnons."

Allen was received into Greenwich Hospital 20th [illegible] Commander-in-Chief, without [illegible] his conviction that the Bengal army cannot furnish [illegible] instance of so lamentable a want of correct military feel- [illegible] that exhibited on the present occasion by Lieut.-Colonel [illegible] affording, as it does, an example injurious to all its grades, [illegible] and Native.

[illegible] have no personal knowledge of Lieutenant- [illegible] Charter, but if he evinced "a want of [illegible] military feeling," we think his conduct [illegible] have been submitted to a Court of Inquiry, [illegible] case stands, it is a disgrace to the Indian [illegible] Whereas we are assured that enquiry would [illegible] own that the Lieutenant-Colonel had long [illegible] plated retirement. He is a martyr to gout [illegible] eumatism, and being unable, from bodily [illegible] ss, to continue on the march, his proposition [illegible] ement ought not in any way to affect his [illegible] er as a soldier. His reputation, however, [illegible] ed for ever if this General Order is not [illegible] d or qualified. It is well to have a giant's [illegible] h, but not to use it like a giant.

[illegible] have much gratification in publishing the [illegible] ing "circular," issued by the Secretary at [illegible] and which is confirmatory of the opinion we [illegible] he wo[illegible] always expressed [illegible] subscription, now every has been set on foot, which has already the patronage of the present Earl Nelson and family, Sir T. Hardy, Sir J. Brenton, Admiral the Hon. F. P. Irby, Lieut.-Col. Harvey, Sir W. Beatty, M.D., and other friends at the Royal Hospital and elsewhere. We will only add, that we shall gladly receive any contributions for the poor widow, and there are many friends of the immortal Nelson who will not be unmindful of this appeal to their benevolence.

Tom Allen's eldest son is now an honest labourer, living at Fakenham, Norfolk; his name is Horatio, and the great Lord Nelson was his godfather.

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

THE ROYAL ARTILLERY CORPS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Through the medium of your extensively-circulated Journal, grant me the indulgence of pointing out the most neglected branch of Her Majesty's service, viz., the Royal Artillery; the task of publishing whose claims should devolve on a more able pen than mine. Devoted as you are to the interests of both services, I trust, in claiming your advocacy to the welfare of the subjects of this letter, I shall not be wrong;—that the Artillery possesses the least inducement to young men to enter it, from its ranks being barred the privilege of succeeding to commissions, is true; but this is not the only point of inferiority under which it labours; for it is even inferior in its promotion of Non-commissioned Officers, as the following statement will show:—

A battalion of the Line, per late establishment, with 740 rank and file, has 42 Staff Serjeants and Serjeants.

A battalion of Artillery, with an establishment as at present, of 648 rank and file, has only 27 Staff Serjeants and Serjeants.

Thus it will be seen, that in the Line one out of every 17 may attain a Serjeant's pension; whereas in the Artillery only one out of 24. The pension is the only star to which the ultimate hopes of the Non-commissioned Officers of Artillery are directed,—surely then if they claim the same as the Line, it is nothing more than right? Why they should not have the same advantages, perhaps your better judgment may inform me. It cannot be that they are less deserving, or that their duties are not so arduous. The chances of the Cavalry again are two to one in comparison, their proportion being one to 14. The chances to promotion for men enlisting are decreasing; for with the augmentation of the years 1826 and 1828, 1152 men have been added without any corresponding proportion of Non-commissioned Officers; and such has been the scarcity of them lately, that a squad of about a dozen Non-commissioned Officers could not be sent to the Repository without appointing an equivalent or greater number of Supernumerary acting Bombardiers to do their regimental duty meanwhile. There are at detached stations even to the amount of seven acting Bombardiers, some of whom, indeed, have responsible charges of stores, and receiving no extra pay. In the Artillery, such is the limited number of Serjeants, that it is not reckoned long if a man can get a Serjeancy in fourteen years after his first appointment; and perhaps it will be scarcely credited, that there are a great number of the Artillery Non-commissioned Officers who have, without intermission or blemish of character, served as Bombardiers and Corporals from ten to fourteen years; and it is but lately that two or three men were promoted who had been standing Corporals ten and eleven years. Successive Coronations had taken place, but without unfolding to them the hope of a Brevet.

What I have stated are plain facts, without any colouring, and it is hoped that it is not too late to remedy the evil, especially when it is not long since the Sappers had an augmentation of one of each rank to their companies. The reduction of a Corporal, with the substitution in lieu of a Serjeant per company, would nearly put them on a par with the Line; but with the expected augmentation of eight men per company, it would be more reasonable and beneficial to grant an additional Serjeant altogether.

PASSAGE OF RECRUITS FROM IRELAND TO ENGLAND.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—The average number of days occupied in the passage from Cork or Dublin to Gravesend is five; it has been eight, and sometimes three and a half. The recruit, if brought by a careful Serjeant, lays in a small stock of provisions, from an advance of two days' pay; but when on board he finds that a deck passage only has been provided for him; that the steward will not allow of his cooking, and below he dare not show himself. In the steamers from Cork he has no shelter from the weather; and let the voyage be long or short, he must "bide the pelting of the pitiless storm" in the best manner he can. It is true, the Serjeant in charge receives a number of greatcoats for their use, but often a less number than men; and was each man supplied, it would not be a sufficient protection from the weather, nine months in the year. The boats from Dublin are better, as from having a shed, called the horse-stall, the recruits can frequently avail themselves of its shelter. But should the voyage be five or six days, what quantity of food can a soldier procure on board a steamer with his bare pay of 1*s.* 1*d.? Why, one meal, and that must be a light breakfast. Then their clothing, Sir; why the majority of recruits from Ireland have scarcely sufficient to cover their nakedness, and yet they are exposed to rain and wind, laying the foundation of coughs, colds, and rheumatism, at the outset of their career. If not for the recruits' sake, for the good of the Service let us hope this may be remedied.

The Serjeant conducting the recruits is allowed (by courtesy, I presume) to sleep below. Recruits for the Royal Artillery, or men returning from station, are provided with a fore-cabin passage, themselves paying the difference; but this would not suit the Infantry recruit, he has enough to pay as it is—neither would it be desirable. But steamers contracting to bring over soldiers should be obliged to have a shed on the deck with some straw or benches, and large enough to contain twenty or thirty men. And why not ration the men on board, even if the whole of the pay was required? I recollect when we received recruits from Scotland, they were rationed with two meals, at 9*d.* per diem, on board the smacks; and what is to prevent the same on board the steamers? I am not positive as to its being still the case, but the steward of one of the Dublin boats was accustomed to ration the recruits coming by his vessel, for 1*s.* per diem, giving a bowl of coffee and some bread morning and evening, and meat and potatoes for dinner; a small quantity certainly, but plenty for the money. The evil is serious, discouraging to his spirit and injurious to his health, yet easy of remedy—A shed to protect him from wet; a greatcoat to shield him from cold; a bench in the shed to sleep on; and two meals per diem, in lieu of pay. The recruit would then join his regiment in good spirits and health.

The subject I know has been mentioned to persons connected with head-quarters, but no alteration has been made. Let me hope, Sir, however, that it will not exist another winter. If there are any sceptics on the point, let them witness a party from Ireland landing at Gravesend, and they will wonder at the half-clad lads being able to stand so rough a voyage. CHEVMON.

[Since this letter was in type, a circular has been issued from the War Office to remedy the evil—see p. 73.—ED.]

* I have known instances where the recruits have actually laid among the pigs on board to shelter them from the cold.

INCREASE OF THE NAVAL FORCE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I have, in common with, I presume, most officers of the Navy, read with attention the various publications relative to the present state of the Naval Force of this country, as compared with that of other powers: and although I look without any alarm at the reported strength of the Russian and other fleets, yet I think we should have some force at home in readiness for any pressing emergency; and I believe I can point out the means of doing this at a trifling expense, compared with the importance of the object in view.

The crews of the Guardships to the Ordinaries are at present ineffective; that is to say, the men belonging to them are not seamen; indeed, it cannot be expected that any such will serve. Jack is a gregarious animal, fond of his messmates and society; delighted to tell his long yarns, and sing his old chaies; and however hard he may be worked on deck, when he goes below he finds a cheering scene; those only who have witnessed it can understand the pleasure a sailor feels on those occasions; this indeed is his home. How different in the Ordinary! there the men are detached in twos and threes; separated from their messmates, they mope about, and end by running away. Instead of the old hulks now used for this Service, I would commission one of the finest of our two-deck ships at each of the ports of Portsmouth, Plymouth, Chatham and Sheerness; to have the full proportion of officers of every description; all the petty officers; one-third of her seamen and the whole complement of marines; the guns should be taken on board, and all the stores held in readiness to be embarked at an hour's notice. The guard of the Ordinaries to be placed under the control of the Commanders-in-Chief, reporting in the first instance to the Captains of those ships (the officers of which should be deemed to have the general superintendence thereof); the ships to be moored as nearly as possible in the centre of the harbours for facility of communication. The actual charge of the ships to be undertaken by a party of mariues from head-quarters, to be relieved every six months; the officers of that corps belonging to the guardships looking after their internal arrangements, and visiting them occasionally by night as well as by day. Three Warrant Officers to be attached to each of the large ships, and the Carpenter, with a Gunner or Boatswain, to the others, not to be subject to constant removal as at present, which destroys all their comfort; and to be allowed a boy as a servant, which I consider to be of great service, as they soon become accustomed to boats, and eventually make smart men-of-war seamen.

I have merely touched on the heads of the plan,—the details can easily be followed. The advantages are, first, that without much additional charge there will be four capital ships in readiness for any service, as the remaining two thirds of the seamen can easily be got together from the pensioners; the petty officers and seamen already on board having been well drilled, the others will fall into their places immediately. Secondly, an increase of that valuable corps the Royal Marines to 1500 men, at the same cost as the people at present employed to take care of the ships; which number will suffice for twelve line-of-battle ships, all trained, and accustomed to being afloat. Thirdly, restoring the Superintendents to their original civil capacity, and applying all their attention to the care of the dock-yards. I could enumerate many others, but for the present I will content myself by observing, that if the flag-ships at the ports were placed upon a similar footing, we could at any time put three first rates and four first-class second-rates at sea within ten days; thus imparting a feeling of security to the timid, and forming the nucleus of a powerful fleet.

London, 23d Dec. 1828. REGENERATOR.

TESTIMONIALS FROM SEAMEN.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—In a note to the continuation of Capt. Sleigh on "Nautical Discipline," in the Gazette of the 26th of Jan., you say you are compiling a work which will contain the names and rank of all officers who have been presented (by the seamen of the several ships which they commanded) with honourable gifts, in testimony of the esteem they were held in by the ships' companies, as also the particular circumstances attendant thereon. Allow me, Mr. Editor, as an old officer who has been beloved by the ships' companies he commanded, to request that you, who evidently have the good of both Services at heart, will seriously consider the tendency of such a work before you commit it to print. My decided opinion is, and I think you will find it the general opinion of the Navy, that it would be most injurious to the well-being of the Service. PATRIOT.

To Readers and Correspondents.

Subscribers wishing to bind the N. & M. Gazette may obtain, at the Office, 19, Catherine-street; of Mr. Burrill, Library, Chatham; and of Mr. Yates, Bookseller, Dublin, such back Numbers as are not out of print.

The letter of "A Constant Reader" (Sheerness), would have been more acceptable, had it contained the information to which allusion is made—"A Subscriber," (Leadenhall St.), is assured that the matter is in progress.—"A Married Sub." shall have attention next week: also Commander Consett on Foreign Fleets.—We are much indebted to "Chevron" for his last note.—"Stella," we understand, will be acceptable.

The Post Captain's "Gleanings of the Navy," shall have due attention next week; although there is not one signal idea in his Paper.

If one "Out of the Service" will carefully condense his statement respecting the Coast Guard, we will then publish it: he must consider the demands on our time, that our space is limited, and correspondents numerous.

We have been much surprised that some "General Officer," in imitation of the "Flag Officer," has not addressed a letter on the state of the Army to the "Duke of Wellington." In all truth the writer could make out a much stronger case of want of troops, than the "Flag Officer" has of ships. We have no wish to imitate his example, and vamp up an article detrimental to the interests of the country; and, after all, we think it very probable that the tables could be turned on us, and an equally able and satisfactory reply be put forth from the Horse Guards, as we have lately noticed from the Admiralty, by some old and faithful public servant.

Holding ourselves strictly impartial, we have no objection to give the fullest publicity to the sentiments of "Nemo," apart from the personalities he has introduced, which would only provoke replies ill adapted to our columns. We should be glad to have, in strict confidence, the name of our correspondent, by which we might correctly estimate the value of his support, as well as of his opinion respecting a "Naval Writer," that opinion being different from any we have ever received.

We acknowledge the receipt of the second letter from "Syphax." Surely he must admit that enough has been advanced respecting the "Flag Officer" and his preposterous statements, which would never have attracted notice had not the Times published them. The Rear-Admiral has incurred the odium he labours under, not for drawing attention to the real state of the Navy, but for making a fallacious one as regards our own in comparison with foreign navies; and not only endeavouring to excite alarm at home, but to bring our Naval power into contempt abroad. It is evident that he is totally unacquainted with the present, or probably the past, state of the Navy, so far as regards a dozen years or more, for the proposal to raze some frigates into corvettes has been adopted long ago upon "Curaçoa," "Magicienne," and "Tribune."

We understand, from a correspondent, that Captain Hewett, acting under the advice of his friends, has commenced proceedings against the papers which have been circulating atrocious calumnies relative to the gallant officer, not by an action for damages, but by the only legal proceeding open to an honourable mind in such cases. The whole merits of the case will shortly be before the public; but, in the mean time we may state that the crime for which the man was punished was an attempt to murder his superior officer; and that the punishment awarded was 30 lashes, instead of 216—24 of which were only carried into execution by the second order of the "murderous Captain;" and instead of the fellow being sent to the hospital, he resumed his ordinary duties within an hour after his punishment.

The Naval Distribution will be given next week.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1839.

AMIDST all the abusive tirade and unworthy vituperation which some parts of the press have, of late, been pouring forth against the Admiralty, the true cause of the evil of which these writers complain, namely, that of the present inefficient state of the Navy (even admitting such to be the fact), has been wholly omitted.

This cause, as must be manifest to every one who will honestly reflect on the subject, is the want of means at the disposal of the Admiralty to keep up our Navy in the state in which those opponents of the Government now, at length, discover that it ought to be maintained; for whilst the Chancellor of the Exchequer has been obliged, in order to meet the views of the Messrs. Hume and Co., and the other false economists in the House of Commons, to limit the Navy Estimates to the extent at which they have been of late fixed, it was wholly impossible for the Admiralty to increase the number of ships, or even the number of men serving in those that were in commission. The fault, then, rests altogether with those ultra-economical members of the House of Commons who have hitherto tied the hands of the Government in the granting of the supplies for the Navy; and our best hope now is, that these one-sided politicians have at length seen their error, and that they will, in the approaching Session, patriotically come forward and avow their mistaken views, and thus at once put at the disposal of the Admiralty the means of equipping ships, equal in size, and in every form, to those of other Navies now at sea, when the country may be assured that our present Naval Administration will rejoice at having the power to do this and every other thing that can tend to add to our Naval renown, which, as Captain Berkeley so ably stated at Bristol, we are positive no Board of Admiralty ever had more warmly at heart.

A CORRESPONDENT from Plymouth has drawn our attention to some alteration in the dress of the officers and men of the Infantry, and has proposed the discontinuance of the tape-lace in front of the jackets of the men; the introduction of worsted epaulettes for the privates, as now worn by the serjeants; and of a gold stripe down the sides of the officers' trowsers in full dress. As far as regards the private soldier, we believe that the tape-lace is much prized by them; first, because it much strengthens the coat, particularly at the button-holes, and makes the coat sit better than it would otherwise do; in the next place, the lace sets off the figure by the mode in which it is laid on; and, finally, it gives a gay and clean appearance to the uniform. The writer proposes that there shall be two rows of buttons: these we hold to be quite useless, and only calculated to give needless trouble—a single-breasted coat is the best for all soldiers. We have only one small objection to the gold lace on the officers' trowsers: it is adding one more item of expense to the already expensive uniform. Such are the opinions we have heard from several experienced officers and soldiers, and we give them as freely as we have heard them uttered. We believe that anything in lieu of the present disfigurements which are stuck on the shoulders of the private soldiers of the line, would be received by them and by their officers with thankfulness. The greatest improvement in the Infantry coat would be a superior quality of cloth, closer and finer; the present quality is, we believe, that of fifty years ago; and while our manufacturers have improved the quality worn by all other classes since that period, the cloth for the soldier has been continued, by special instruction, of the old and coarser quality. The Cavalry, indeed, receive a clothing of a much superior sort to the Infantry; and it would be difficult to assign a good reason for giving the one a good, and the other a bad-wearing article.

With no less pain than astonishment we have read the following General Order, issued by the Governor-General of India:—

Simla, Oct. 22, 1838.—Lieut.-Col. Charter, of the 5th Regt. N.I., is permitted to retire from the service, from the date on which this order may reach the camp of that corps.

The Right Hon. the Governor-General cannot allow a Lieut.-Colonel to resign his professional duties, and give up the command of a regiment, at the head of which he has been placed for several years, at a moment when the corps is in progress to join the force assembling for active service in the field, under the personal command of his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief, without expressing his conviction that the Bengal army cannot furnish another instance of so lamentable a want of correct military feeling as that exhibited on the present occasion by Lieut.-Colonel Charter, affording, as it does, an example injurious to all its grades, European and Native.

We have no personal knowledge of Lieutenant-Colonel Charter, but if he evinced "a want of correct military feeling," we think his conduct should have been submitted to a Court of Inquiry, —as the case stands, it is a disgrace to the Indian Army. Whereas we are assured that enquiry would have shown that the Lieutenant-Colonel had long contemplated retirement. He is a martyr to gout and rheumatism, and being unable, from bodily weakness, to continue on the march, his proposition of retirement ought not in any way to affect his character as a soldier. His reputation, however, is blasted for ever if this General Order is not cancelled or qualified. It is well to have a giant's strength, but not to use it like a giant.

We have much gratification in publishing the following "circular," issued by the Secretary at War, and which is confirmatory of the opinion we have always expressed, indeed the opinion entertained throughout the Army, of his Lordship's desire to redress grievances when brought under his notice. Further, we have no hesitation in stating that Lord Howick has done more for the Army than any of his dozen predecessors in office, Whigs and Tories, during the last half century; and we have pretty good recollection of all their proceedings:—

30th January, 1839.

The Secretary at War having made arrangements that suitable accommodation under cover shall be provided for any detachments or escorts that may embark at , on board steamboats, for conveyance to different ports of the United Kingdom, Commanding Officers will make known to any parties that may embark from the corps or detachments under their command, that they are entitled to be accommodated under cover, and will desire that when it is not afforded, a report of the circumstance shall be made on the arrival of the party at the place of its destination.

Already we have endeavoured to show the necessity there is for officers of the Royal Navy, who aspire to the command of steam vessels, to render themselves conversant with the mechanism of the steam engines; and though precisely the same causes may not be immediately applicable to those gentlemen who are ambitious of the honour of similar commands in the mercantile marine, they are, remotely so, in a greater or lesser degree, to them also; as, should a war take place, the ocean steamers will doubtless be armed, or, in great likelihood, be occasionally employed on services or in climates to which objections might be injurious as to the results. Whether or not, the Commander should in no way be inferior to any one under his command; we have, it is true, heard of merchant ships commanded by very young gentlemen, who were totally ignorant of the professional qualification of seamanship; but that care was taken, however, to provide experienced Mates as their attendants, the relative position between whom and the Captains was similar to that of the young aristocratic "Henry Bertram," and the humble preceptor "Dominie Sampson." The analogy may be extended to the steamer; where, if the Commander knows nothing of the steam engine, he must be held in leading-strings by his attendant engineers. That this has been the case until within a few years back, is most true; but the application of steam power to marine purposes, being itself but recent, this palpable defect was unavoidable, —nay, even engine men were scarce; and to this day we have not too many scientific engineers to select from. As steam power, however, extends, steam proprietors very properly require that those to command shall have previously qualified themselves by probationary observation in the engine room; and the London companies have, we are told, very liberally granted permission to applicants to pass months on board their vessels during their voyages to and fro,—a well-judged liberality which is likely to be attended with its own reward, —as the more thoroughly conversant the officers are with machinery, the more readily will they detect any neglect on the part of the attendants; and the question may be fairly put to the Managing Directors of Steam Companies, whether they have not found the expenses for repairs diminish, in proportion to the superior acquirements of the officers employed. Engineers may be very excellent men, and very trustworthy, but it is the natural frailty of human nature that subordinates must be looked after;—no merchant would implicitly trust to his clerk for the transaction of his business, and neglect looking into accounts himself; but should he be unacquainted with the mystery of figures, he would have to content himself with the neatness of the form in which they were presented, without the ability to detect errors, accidental or intended, and his ignorance be made available to the indulgence of idle habits, or of designing views. "The master's eye maketh the horse fat," is an aphorism not absolutely inapplicable when speaking of horse power, and of the necessary care which the steam engine requires. The frequent attendance of officers in the engine room, with adequate knowledge of its mechanism, to converse scientifically with the superintendent engineer, cannot fail of beneficial effect on each individual employed about the complicated machine, and will most effectually insure the very necessary precautionary measures of blowing off the boilers (where that is not obviated by Hall's or other improvements), clearing firebars, &c., at stated periods; to say nothing of the advantages of discoveries likely to emanate out of constant intercourse and watchful observation; whether as to the properties of coal, the draft of the furnace, adequate means of regulating injection water when the vessel is plunging, lessening the friction of engines or paddle shafts, &c. Advanced as we are, still steam is far from having attained that perfection of which it is capable. We know the power; we know its application upon high-pressure principles as well as in condensing engines; but we have much to learn on the score of economy;—the more diffuse, however, the study of the science becomes, the more rapid will be our approach to discovery and excellence. The extension of steam power is progressing rapidly;—in 1814 we had but two steamers of the combined tonnage of 456 tons,—we now have in England 600 vessels of 67,969 tons; and report announces new companies forming for Plymouth, Glasgow, &c., for Atlantic and Pacific communication; and surely vessels of their costly outlay will not be placed in the hands of officers totally ignorant of the steam engine; especially since the application of a few months in the engine room of a steamer, aided by some scientific work on the subject, will render the aspirant tolerably efficient; and certainly sufficiently so to maintain a commanding position, whensoever he holds converse with his engineer. It is, therefore, incumbent on every individual who aspires to the trust of these superb vessels to study, not merely the mechanism of the engine, but likewise the properties of steam, and make himself, in short, master of the science in all its bearings; not only as creditable to himself, but in justice to those who employ them. Might not yellow fever suddenly consign the three engineers to the sands of Africa, or the seas of India, East or West? and suppose the officers ignorant of the steam engine! This is no impossible case, and worth consideration.

We regret much to observe, by the "Naval Appointments" in another column, that Captain Toup Nicolas, of the Hercules, has been compelled, by late severe domestic afflictions, to resign the command of that ship, in order that he may remain a short time at home with his family under their painful bereavements.

It has been long evident, that, however admirably constituted the Coast-Guard might be for the prevention of smuggling, the existence of such a force had ceased to be of use to the Navy. As at first established, it formed, or was intended to form, a reserve of several hundred seamen, instantly available in case of emergency; but in its present altered condition, not only has it wholly ceased to be available in this respect, but detrimental, by acting as a continual drain upon the Navy, absorbing a portion of the best men from every ship that is put out of commission.

The reasons which induced Sir James Graham to surrender the control which the Admiralty exercised over this reserve have been variously stated, and that surrender, now generally deprecated, has been excused upon the plea of the draughts being found totally inefficient for the purpose designed, when occasions arose to put it to the test. This was not, however, the fault of the plan itself, but of the manner in which it had been carried on; and if the seamen (so called) draughted on the several occasions required, were found incapable, the evil was in allowing incompetent persons to enter the force, and not in the principle of the measure itself.

It would appear from Sir John Barrow's observations, and the various reports lately circulated, that the intention is meditated of reorganising the Coast-Guard upon a plan which shall render the seamen composing it available for service when required; or, at all events, that a stop will be put to the system that now obtains of permitting our best seamen to retire to the Coast-Guard. There are difficulties in the way of effecting this, on account of the inducements put forth by the Admiralty Circular of the 13th of June, 1831, under which many seamen, who have since entered the Navy, have a good claim for the advantages it offers; and it will be impolitic to break faith with these men on this or any other score; or even let it be supposed that any advantage will be taken of them, because the regulation is found in practice objectionable.

It will be necessary, therefore, to give due notice of any alteration to be effected, so that men entering in future may clearly understand the conditions of their engagement, and the benefits which a faithful performance of their duty will entitle them to; and as the effects will, therefore, be prospective, this announcement, if a change is meditated, cannot be made too soon.

We should not have noticed the matter at present, had not some of our contemporaries, on the faith of Sir John Barrow's remarks, and the reports in circulation, drawn attention to the subject. It is one of those, however, in which discussion can do no harm, for we think the establishment of the Coast-Guard might be so reorganised, as to protect the revenue as well as at present, and also to afford a reserve of several thousand good seamen when required, and thus place at disposal the means of equipping a considerable fleet in a very short period. Good men might still be eligible for appointment to that service on the recommendation of Captains, but it should be with a liability to serve in the Navy on certain conditions, and not, as at present, wholly exonerated and protected from such service, whilst their time is reckoned for pension. As regards the "Maritime Militia" of which Sir John speaks, we cannot discover in what respect it will aid us in manning a fleet, if, as he proposes, it is to be composed of landmen; landmen and ordinary seamen may be had in any numbers by offering a very small gratuity, such as one or two months' wages: but Marines are probably better than these, particularly for steamers. It is in procuring seamen the difficulty exists; and the difficulty must increase when the demand extends, necessarily producing augmented wages. We conceive, therefore, it is to this point the proposed measures should be directed. A Coast-Guard, or any other source capable of supplying 3,000 good seamen, would be equivalent to three or four times that number of men composing the run of ships' crews, and these latter can be always calculated on in sufficient numbers from our fisheries, &c., or, what would be better, by extending the Marine Corps.

There is one point which Sir John Barrow has advanced, that we do not think is borne out by the Parliamentary returns—we mean where he alludes to a decrease of seamen in the coasting trade, caused by the number of steam-vessels employed, each of which of course performs the work of several coasters. We believe it will be found, however, that notwithstanding this, the number of our seamen in the coasting as well as foreign trade, is continually increasing from year to year—at least it would appear so by the Parliamentary returns of the number of vessels registered in the ports of the United Kingdom—the only criterion to be guided by, the reports inwards and clearances outwards not being of any value for estimating this point, and swelled up by the repeated voyages of the steam-vessels.

We have before us the Annual Report of the Secretary of the United States Navy, one of the briefest productions, we believe, that has for many years issued from his department; the American state papers being generally very diffuse. By the following summary it appears that, on one plea or another, many of their ships in commission are ordered home for the present; and, as they do not contemplate increasing their Naval force, this precaution is possibly adopted lest the tendency of affairs on the Canadian border might produce disputes, and also on account of the imposing British force now stationed on the coast of North America and the West Indies.

The Report states, that all the ships from the Mediterranean, except one sloop of war, have been ordered home for repairs; but that the Ohio of the Line was despatched thither, and Commodore Hull would shortly be joined by a frigate, and a small vessel.

Most of the ships composing the squadron in the Pacific have also been ordered home; they are to be replaced as soon as convenient, so as eventually not to diminish the force in that quarter.

No change is to be made in the Brazil squadron.

The frigate and sloop-of-war lately arrived at Boston from the Gulf of Mexico and West Indies, are to be replaced immediately, and a slight increase of force made to the squadrons in those seas.

The frigate and sloop in the Indian seas have been ordered to visit the Sandwich and Society Islands.

There appears to be no vessel of war cruising upon the Atlantic coast, agreeably to the resolution of Congress, in order to afford relief to vessels in distress, except the Fulton steam vessel. Neither are there any vessels available for the surveys, &c., ordered by the Government.

The Report describes the Navy Pension Fund in a declining state, whilst the claims upon it are yearly augmenting; and points out the necessity for Congress making some provision to maintain it.

The Privateer Pensioners' Fund is described as having failed altogether in 1836; and although the certificates for pensions were granted for life, nothing has since been paid to the pensioners, thirty-six in number, having claim upon it.

The Secretary urges the building [of a dry-dock at New York, and the establishment of a Naval academy. Also the building of five small brigs or schooners; but we find no mention of eleven sail of the line, which Sir John Barrow states in a note to his supplemental chapter, have been contracted for by the United States Government. The Report is wound up by the Secretary's declaration, that he "declines to suggest any alteration or improvement in the system, on account of his want of experience in his department"—a piece of modesty that we did not expect to find exhibited in the official report of an American functionary.

The Court.

The Queen and the Duchess of Kent continue in the possession of good health. On Saturday Her Majesty gave audience to Viscount Melbourne. On Sunday Her Majesty remained within the Palace all day. The Queen gave audience on Monday to the Earl of Albemarle, Viscount Melbourne, and Lord Hill. During the morning Her Majesty sat to Francis Chantrey. On Tuesday the Queen gave audience to Viscount Melbourne, and to Count Sebastiani, the French Ambassador. Her Majesty walked in the Palace gardens during the morning. In the evening Her Majesty went in State to Drury-Lane theatre. On Wednesday Viscount Melbourne had an audience of the Queen. Viscount Melbourne and Lord Hill had audiences of the Queen on Thursday Her Majesty gave audience yesterday to the Earl of Albemarle and Viscount Melbourne. The Queen went in State, last evening, to Covent-Garden theatre. The Queen, it is expected, will hold a Privy Council on Monday, at which Her Majesty's speech on opening Parliament will be arranged.

Colonel Wemyss has succeeded Lord Alfred Paget as Equerry in waiting on Her Majesty.

Orders have been issued from the Lord Chamberlain's office for the Court to go into mourning 31st ult., for the Princess Mary of Orleans, Consort of the Duke Alexander of Wurtemburg. The Court to change the mourning on 7th Feb.; and on 14th to go out of mourning.

THE 'WINNING OF CALES,' (CADIZ,)
Taken in June 1596.

[This graphic description, from an old ballad, of the sacking of of the city is supposed to have been written by one who was present.]

Entering the houses then, of the most richest men,
For gold and treasure we searched each day,
In some places we did find, pies baking left behind,
Meat at fire roasting, and the folks all run away.
Dub a dub, dub a dub, they strike their drums;
Tantara, tantara, the knights man comes.

Full of rich merchandise, every shop catched our eyes,
Damasks and sattens, and velvets fair,
Which soldiers measured out by the length of their swords,
And of fine commodities had equal share.
Dub a dub, &c. * * *

When our brave General saw they delayed all,
And would not ransom the town as they said,
With their fair wainscots, their presses and bedsteads,
Then joint stools and tables a fire we made,
And when the town burned all in a flame,
With tara, tantara, away we all came.

On Monday despatches from Sir John Harvey, Lt.-Governor of New Brunswick, were received at the Colonial Office. On Wednesday Mr. Amiot arrived in town with despatches from Sir John Colborne, G.C.B., Governor of the Canadas. Mr. Amiot had an interview with Lord Glenelg. Despatches from Governor Light, at British Guiana, were also received at the Colonial Office. Despatches were forwarded from the India Board for Lord Auckland, the Governor-General of India, and for the officers administering Her Majesty's Government at the Presidencies of Bombay and Madras. On Thursday despatches from Maj.-Gen. Middlemore, Governor of St. Helena, were received.

The Marquis of Anglesey has arrived at Uxbridge House, greatly improved in health. Lord Clarence Paget has returned from foreign service in the Pearl sloop of war.

Among other improbable rumours now afloat, is one of Lords Melbourne, Durham, and Brougham, having quietly settled all their differences.

The Duchess-Countess of Sutherland died on Tuesday, at her house in Hamilton-place, after a short illness, in the 74th year of her age.

The Earl and Countess Grosvenor have just experienced a deep affliction by the death of their daughter, Lady Evelyn Grosvenor, a few days since, at the family seat in Dorsetshire. She was in her thirteenth year.

The Duke of Wellington has arrived in town in an improved state of health, and will give a grand banquet, on Monday to Conservative Peers.

The Duke of Sussex.—On Monday the tradesmen attended at Kensington Palace with their bills, in consequence of a circular issued by Mr. Stephenson, the comptroller of the household. It is the intention of the Duke to go abroad for three years, immediately after his return from Lord Dinorben's seat.

Mr. Duncombe will move the following amendment on the address:—"That the amendment, in 1832, of the representative system, has disappointed the people; that it is not, and cannot be, a final measure; and that the constitution of the Commons' House of Parliament requires further and immediate reformation."

The nobility and gentry are returning fast to town, in consequence of the near approach of the meeting of Parliament. The inns on the roads leading to the metropolis are now in full business, and the railroads are also profitting by the increased number of travellers.

Major-General Lygon is confined to his house, in Grosvenor-place, by illness.

The Queen has appointed Joseph Hawker, Esq., Norroy, to the office of Clarenceux King of Arms, and Principal Herald of the south east and west parts of England, the same having become vacant by the decease of Edmund Lodge, Esq., late Clarenceux: also Francis Martin, Esq., Windsor Herald, to the office of Norroy King of Arms, and Principal Herald of the north parts of England, vacant by the promotion of Mr. Hawker. Also Robert Laurie, Esq., Rouge Croix, Pursuivant of Arms, to the office of Windsor Herald, vacant by the promotion of Francis Martin, Esq., to the office of Norroy King of Arms; and William Courthorpe, Gent., to the office of Rouge Croix, Pursuivant of Arms, vacant by the promotion of Robert Laurie, Esq.

The veteran Royal Academician Sir William Beechey died at Hampstead on Monday, aged eighty-six. His son, Capt. Beechey, R.N., is well known as an experienced and meritorious Naval Officer.

We have authority to state that in the announcement of Lord Ellenborough's marriage, contained in the John Bull newspaper of last Sunday, that paper was grossly imposed upon. The account was altogether a fabrication.

Intelligence has been received of the death of Prince Lieven in Italy, after a short illness. The Prince was many years ambassador at the British Court from the Emperor of Russia.

Goodwood.—Preparations are already being made for the festivities attendant on the Earl of March attaining his majority on the 27th of February. A grand ball will be given by the Duke and Duchess of Richmond on that day to about 700 of the nobility, and on Friday (1st March) a grand dinner will be given to the tenants on the family estate in this county. All the labourers are to have a week's wages presented to them. On the Duke's estates in Scotland public dinners will be given at the expense of his Grace.

The Court of Queen's Bench on Wednesday passed sentence on Mr. Lawson, the printer and publisher of the Times, for the libel on Sir John Conroy—one month's imprisonment in the Marshalsea and a fine of 200*l.*

Daniel Whittle Harvey has addressed a letter to his constituents, the electors of Southwark, acquainting them that he has resigned his office, in consequence of the legal opinions of Sir W. Follett and Mr. Austin, to the effect that the office of Registrar of Hackney-coaches came within the scope and intendment of the statute of Anne, and disqualified him from sitting or voting in Parliament."

Mr. Richard Lossack, aged seventy-three, a gentleman of property, residing at West Malling Abbey, Kent, died suddenly on Sunday last, at 7, Northumberand-st., Strand. His brother, who was a Captain in the Navy, died suddenly at Florence, last May; his sister also died suddenly in Conduit-st., a few years since; and his father also died in a most sudden manner. Verdict—"Died by the visitation of God."

Slander and Assault.—At the Guildhall, Plymouth, on Saturday, Mr. J. S. Mackenzie, formerly an officer in the Indian Army, preferred charges of assault against Messrs. T. and J. Husband, the sons of the banker, and Mr. J. Wyatt, solicitor, of Devonport, for assaulting and horsewhipping him. The complainant said that Mr. T. Husband horsewhipped him twice in the morning, and Messrs. J. Husband and Wyatt attacked him at the door of the hotel, and beat him very severely. The defendants, who were much excited, and called the complainant a "fraudulent swindler," said that they did commit the assaults complained of, the complainant having circulated a most vile and libellous handbill, alleging that he had been defrauded at play whilst gambling at the defendant's house. The magistrates said that the conduct of the complainant, if substantiated, was open to indictment, and that the defendants were not justified in taking the law into their own hands. They, therefore, fined the Messrs. Husband 3*l.* each, and Mr. Wyatt 40*s.* and costs.

The city of Bath was on Saturday thrown into a state of consternation seldom witnessed, by a tragic scene, fortunately not often heard of in England. Mrs. Tugwell, wife to the senior partner of the Bath Bank, having desired the butler to give her a decanter of sherry, took her children into a summer-house in the garden, saying she was going to give them a treat. Having proceeded there, she mixed some prussic acid with the wine, which she administered to the whole of the three children, and then took some herself. Fortunately the eldest boy (10 years of age) did not like the taste of the wine, and drank only a small portion, which, as he says, caused him to sleep, and upon awaking he found his mother sitting apparently asleep, with his two brothers, who were twins of 8 years of age, the one lying at her feet, and the other across her breast. Finding himself very ill, and having in vain tried to awaken them, he rushed to the door, which he found locked, but at length succeeded in alarming the house, when the servants found their mistress and the children dead. No cause can be assigned for this melancholy act. An inquest has been held, and the jury have returned a verdict of "Insanity."

The project of presenting Mr. Joseph Hume with a service of plate has been abandoned, owing to the fact of only eight persons being found to attend a meeting called for the purpose.

At the Woolwich Sessions on Monday, Thomas Warden, a bugle-player, belonging to the band of the Royal Sappers and Miners, was charged with a gross assault upon Ann Maithew, a young woman with whom he had been acquainted some short time. The prisoner, who pleaded drunkenness, and said he did not recollect what had occurred, was fined 5*l.* for the assault, but not being able to pay, was conveyed to the gaol at Maidstone to suffer two months' imprisonment.

A frightful massacre was committed on the 19th inst. at Assun, near Tarbes, by an unhappy maniac, who, having got possession of a hatchet, killed with it his father, his brother, and one of his sisters, and dangerously wounded two other sisters. He then threw himself into a well, and was taken out from it lifeless.

An iron steam-ship was launched at Dumbarton on 22d inst., 145 feet long, and 25 feet broad, intended for South America. On being launched, this vessel drew only 18 inches water, and, with machinery and cargo, will not exceed three feet. She is intended for passengers chiefly, of whom she can carry a thousand.

The long-pending question of the claims of the British Officers and men who served in Portugal under Don Pedro is about being satisfactorily adjusted. The government agrees to a fair compensation, provided the Cortes will sanction the same upon the plan which Ministers have in view.—Lisbon Correspondent.

FRANCE.—Marshal Soult has addressed a letter to Louis Philippe, in which he respectfully declined taking any further steps towards the formation of a Cabinet.—The Moniteur publishes a Royal Ordinance, dated 22d inst., promoting Rear-Admiral Charles Baudin to the rank of Vice-Admiral, as a recompense for his gallant and skilful conduct at the capture of the fortress of San Juan d'Ulloa.

PRUSSIA.—The annual festival of all the Prussian orders was held, as usual, at Berlin, on the 20th ult., the anniversary of the King's coronation. The Prussian State Gazette has seven columns filled with the details of this festival, giving the names of 498 persons who received insignia. Only one decoration of the Order of the Black Eagle was conferred, and that was on General de Grolman, Commandant of the 5th Corps of the Army.

Bentley's Miscellany.

Waterloo.—At three o'clock of the morning of the 18th June, when his troops were snatching a brief repose, the Duke wrote three letters, two of which were in French, to Sir C. Stuart, the Duc de Berri, and the Governor of Antwerp, calmly describing his situation, and expressing unshaken confidence in the result.

Moving Bog.—On the night of the eventful storm, three acres of the bog of Glounamuckalough, within four miles of Newmarket, and eight of Kanturk, moved completely from its position, and, after traversing a distance of a mile, and crossing a rapid river, landed on the opposite side. Not an atom of surface was to be seen where the bog left, but mere yellow mould. The occurrence, fortunately, has not done any injury to houses or cattle, but it is an incalculable loss to the owner of the land, Mr. James Barry, as the bog rests on the very best portion of his farm.—Limerick Chronicle.

On 13th Feb., 1804, died, at Kingston, Surrey, the sole survivor of Anson's memorable voyage round the world, sixty years before; this "ancient mariner," whose name was George Gregory, having attained the immense age of 109.

Literary Notices.

Excursions in the Interior of Russia. By R. Bremner, Esq. H. Colburn.

THERE never was a moment when a book like the present was more wanted, to put to flight that foolish and almost criminal panic which has recently prevailed respecting what are deemed by some the overweening progress and the overwhelming power of Russia, more particularly as regards that peculiar arm in which England has hitherto stood, not merely without a rival nation, but without any one that in its wildest dreams ever even thought of rivalling her. Sir John Barrow's book has happily dispelled all the lingering doubts that may have existed in regard to the positive power of England's navy, as regards all the rest of the world; and now the author of this excellent work comes in, most opportunely, to set all to rights relative to her comparative power as regards Russia, not only in her navy, but in every other department of her powers and political pretensions.

He has, in fact, given us that rara avis in the present day, a thoroughly impartial book about Russia, in reference to all those particulars on which her political power depends, and on the manner in which her real capacity to do mischief corresponds with her insane projects to that end. That it is the spirit of the Russian monarchy to aim at universal empire, cannot now be doubted; and that the present Emperor possesses qualities for the embodying of that spirit, which no ruler of modern times—not even Napoleon himself—has combined in an equal degree in his individual person, is what we hold to be equally undeniable. But happily such a spirit, even when aided by such qualities, must now-a-days prove its own antidote, and serve only to set forth in a stronger light than would otherwise reach it, that antagonist spirit of true enlightenment which gives the prevailing character to the times in which we live.

Mr. Bremner sailed in a merchant-vessel from Stockholm in the summer of 1836; and, on reaching the Baltic, found himself suddenly in the very midst of the now famous fleet which annually haunts those waters (as the Flying Dutchman used to do), to the momentary dread and discomfiture of every British sailor who first casts his eyes upon it. The ocean phantom, however, like that of old, vanishes on being looked at fearlessly, and turns out to be little more than the ruinously costly plaything of a monarch who, on this one point, is evidently a little crazy; for what man in his sane mind can suppose that a serviceable navy can be built of green oak, manned with landsmen, and officered by padded and perfumed dandies, who (not to mention that they literally do not know "the stem from the stern of the ship") allow themselves to be mast-headed like an English middy of twenty years ago, and (occasionally) caned like a cabin-boy or a powder-monkey!—Mr. Bremner reaches St. Petersburgh by way of Cronstadt (of which place he gives some highly interesting details), and having taken a brief glance at the sights of the great capital of the Czar, interspersed with many valuable notices connected with its manners, institutions, state of society, &c., devotes the latter half of his first volume to an exposé of the character, policy, projects, power, &c., of the Emperor Nicholas. We particularly recommend this admirable sketch—or rather this finished portrait—for such it is, to the best attention of our readers. It is drawn with perfect impartiality, and makes us fairly acquainted with the real dangers against which we have to guard as a nation, at the same time that it affords us a striking and most interesting view of one of the most extraordinary men of modern times.

The second volume of this work is devoted to excursions in the Interior, and it treats, with great clearness and good sense, of a vast number of matters that have been very little touched on by the dandy travellers who have alone favoured us of late with notices of this highly important country. The descriptions connected with Moscow, and its institutions and society, are highly interesting, and abound with information; as also are all the numerous hints to travellers, which occur in this part of the work. From Moscow the author proceeds to the now famous fair of Nishnei Novgorod, a more than rival to that of Leipsic; and then, after tracking the banks of the majestic Volga for a considerable portion of its course, "cuts away" through the country of the Tartars, pays a flying visit to Toula, the Birmingham of Russia; traverses the famous corn-growing districts of central Russia, passes through the singular country of the Cossacks, the Ukraine; crosses the Dnieper; and finally, passing across the curious and interesting Steppes, closes his extensive and eventful journey and his book at the famous port of Odessa; picking up at every portion of his tour scraps of curious and valuable information; and pointing and applying them all in that sensible, clear-sighted, and unprejudiced manner which constitutes the very best quality a traveller can possess, both as regards himself, and those whom he may afterwards seek to aid and instruct by a relation of his adventures and peregrinations.

Upon the whole, we must pronounce Mr. Bremner's book one of the most valuable of its kind that we have had for some seasons, and doubly valuable from the opportune period at which it makes its appearance.

Memoirs of John Bannister, Comedian. By John Adolphus, Esq. 2 vols., 8vo. R. Bentley.

NATURE must have been in one of her most genial moods when John Bannister was born, an event which took place in "the merry month of May." His handsome face, his manly figure, and the tones of his cordial voice, at once prepossessed his audience, and prepared them for the rich humour, the nice and even profound discrimination and exhibition of character, and the occasional deep pathos which were to follow. In those days the stage could boast of voices whose ordinary utterance went, as the poet has said, "far beyond singing." There are no such speakers now. Who is there to recal the hearty melody wherewith every word of Elliston was invested? What cunning mimic of them all can bring again to life those sounds which waited on the speech of Jack Bannister? And where shall we seek for even a faint resemblance to those tones which, in coming from the lips of Mrs. Jordan, found their way direct to the heart, filling it with impulses of joy and benevolence?

The Life of Bannister is a delightful thing to contemplate. Happy in himself, he made others so, both by his rare dramatic art, by his wit, and by his private virtues. Among his associates were to be found philosophers, men of letters, artists, and those members of the Aristocracy who knew how to estimate talent and elevation of character. Being thus surrounded, it is obvious that Bannister must have been in possession of abundant anecdotes of men about whom the public are greedy to obtain intelligence; and it will be readily inferred that these stores could not fail to be communicated to so intimate a companion and confidential friend of the comedian as Mr. Adolphus, the present biographer, was known to be. The volumes before us are accordingly rich, not only in stage-lore, but in pictures of society, and in sketches of famous personages, including Fox, the Duke of Norfolk, Sheridan, the Earl of Barrymore, the Prince of Wales, at whose table Bannister was a frequent guest, and others in the great world. Mr. Adolphus has produced a work deserving to rank with the celebrated Memoirs of Cibber.

The Life of Lord George Anson, Admiral of the Fleet, &c. &c. &c. By Sir John Barrow, Bart., F.R.S. John Murray.

WHILST last year noticing Sir John Barrow's "Life of Earl Howe," we expressed a hope that the talented author would extend his labours, and favour the profession and public with authenticated memoirs of other celebrated Naval Commanders; we are gratified to find that he has not only furnished the present memoir, but that he intends to avail himself of the data to which his official situation gives him access, to continue his labours, and devote his leisure hours to a faithful record of those brilliant exploits which have exalted the renown of our British Admirals.

There are many passages in the present work which clear up disputed points, explain reasons for what have hitherto appeared inconsistencies, and by comparison with former periods, show how greatly the Naval service has been improved, and our Navy successively grown in strength as well as in efficiency, as compared with the fleets of other nations. Just at this time, when the offensive pamphlet put forth by "A Flag Officer" has caused such general indignation throughout the service, at the conduct of one of its members; perhaps the most forcible extract we can lay before our readers will be the account of the fate of the gallant Vernon, who had attained his rank for something more than capturing a few small craft of the enemy with a greatly superior force.

"That unfortunate irritability, which was the ultimate ruin of this brave officer, would not allow him to remain quiet on the present occasion. His propensity for writing and indulging in intemperate and abusive language against the Board seemed to be more congenial with his feelings; nor did he stop here. To give the greater publicity to his grievances, and at the same time a vent to his angry and impetuous temper, he published two anonymous pamphlets, in which were inserted the official letter he had received from the Secretary of State, as well as those from the Lords of the Admiralty, together with his own voluminous correspondence, in which he goes out of his way to combat their opinions, passing strictures on their acts, and giving his own notions in opposition to theirs, on matters that had no relation to his command. This seems to have been considered so outrageous a breach of confidence, that the Board directed their Secretary to call upon him to avow or disavow his being the author of the said pamphlets. The letter of Mr. Cleveland was certainly not couched in such courteous terms as were calculated to soothe the irritable feelings of this gallant officer, who said he disdained to answer a question that no one had any right to put to him, and that he should answer it, if at all, to the Board of Admiralty. He was accordingly summoned to appear before the Board, which he immediately did, and in consequence there of the following proceeding took place:—

"'At a meeting at the Admiralty-office, the 16th of April, 1746, in the evening.

Present—His Grace the Duke of Bedford, Earl of Sandwich, Rear Admiral Anson, Mr Grenville, Mr. Legge, Lord Barrington.

"'Admiral Vernon attending, was called in; and his Grace the Duke of Bedford acquainted him, that the Lords had taken notice of some things that had passed, and, as First Lord, he spoke to him as the mouth of the Board, who represented the Lord High Admiral. That, upon seeing two pamphlets published in print, called "A Specimen of Naked Truth, from a British Sailor," and "Some Seasonable Advice from an Honest Sailor to whom it might have concerned, for the service of the C—— n and C——y," they had ordered their Secretary to write to him, to know whether he was the publisher of them, or knew any thing of their publication; and, as he had given no negative answer thereto, they now demanded from him a plain and categorical answer, whether he was the publisher of those pamphlets, or whether they were committed to the press by his direction, consent, or knowledge? Mr Vernon replied, that he had always a great honour and veneration for his Grace, allowed his Grace was right in saying he represented the Lord High Admiral, but that he was mightily surprised at such questions, which were upon a matter of a private nature, and that, as he thought he had the liberty of a subject, he did not look upon himself obliged to answer them; that he had pleasure in saying he had always served as a faithful servant of the Crown, and, as an Officer, was always ready to obey their Lordships' commands.

"'Upon which his Grace replied, that he was sent for as an Officer, and that he spoke to him the sense of the Board in telling him that, as he did not deny the questions put to him with relation to the publication of the aforesaid pamphlets, they could not but look upon him as the publisher of them. To which Mr. Vernon replied, that he was surprised his Grace should ask such a question, and then withdrew.

"'Friday, 11th April, 1746.

"'Present—The same Board as on the preceding day.

"'His Grace the Duke of Bedford acquainted the Lords, that he had attended the King this morning, and had informed his Majesty of what had passed between them and Admiral Vernon, with relation to the publication of two pamphlets, entitled "A Specimen of Naked Truth, from a British Sailor," and "Some Seasonable Advice from an Honest Sailor, to whom it might have concerned, for the service of the C—— n and C——y," and what had passed at his attendance here last night thereupon, and signified his Majesty's pleasure that the said Vice-Admiral Vernon* should be struck off the list of Flag-Officers

"'Resolved, that the same be done.'"†

We cannot but observe that the power thus assumed by the Admiralty was extremely tyrannical, and that a similar act would not be attempted at the present day, when the Service has its organs of the press to watch over and protect its interests. We disapprove of the writings of the "Flag Officer," but would be the first to support him against official persecution.

Anson died on 6th June, 1762, and his biographer thus sums up his character:—

"To say that Anson was a perfect seaman would be no great compliment to an officer who, like him, had spent the first thirty years at least, after leaving home, in the various duties of the profession; and few men had more painful experience of the dangers, the difficulties, and the melancholy disasters to which a seaman's life is exposed, than he had in those which fell to his lot to encounter in his enterprising voyage round the world. In that voyage he gave ample proof that he was a truly brave man—morally and physically brave—a man of firm nerves, and of great resources in time of need—for the exercise of which, occasions were neither slight nor few. To say he was so is no special praise. All the world knows that a naval officer is and must be brave: it is a virtue common to the whole profession, they are instructed from their earliest youth to be so, and it is a plant that grows with their growth but like other qualities it has its degrees, and requires occasions to bring it forth. It did not happen to fall to the lot of Anson to distinguish himself particularly in action with the enemy. His engagement with the great Acapulco ship, with his reduced and feeble crew, just one-half in number to the enemy, was highly creditable to him, his officers, and ship's company, and perhaps still more so, after all their sufferings, cheerfully to go forth with the true undaunted spirit of British seamen to seek and meet the enemy. Nor was it a less strong feature in the character of Anson, that, soon after taking his seat at the Board of Admiralty, at a time when the public were dissatisfied at nothing having been done for the first two years of the war, he volunteered to hoist his flag, and assume the command of a fleet for the purpose of intercepting two combined squadrons of the enemy, of which he had received certain information, a step that could only have been taken on public grounds, united with a desire to do something that might distinguish him, and render him worthy the situation he held in the public service. But Anson's character is to be looked at more closely in the civil department of the Navy, in which it has been seen he acquitted himself with great ability, diligence, and impartiality. Under his administration, many years before and during the Seven Years' War, the British Navy attained a pitch of power and pre-eminence to which it had never before arrived; while the fleets of France and Spain were completely humbled, and almost annihilated, the remaining portion of them being mostly shut up in their ports during the last three years of the war. * * Anson's attention was not merely confined to the ordinary routine of the civil and military duty; he had seen and sufficiently experienced the miserable kind of ships ours were, as compared with those of other nations, not to take advantage of his situation for their improvement. He knew that the old system of building ships, on the plan established by Order in Council of the year 1719, was deplorably bad, and that the ships built after it had not one good quality; yet it would have been little short of treason to break through it. Anson, however, had not been two years in the Board when, in 1746, he prevailed on the Duke of Bedford and Lord Sandwich to obtain a revision of the faulty system, and if possible to establish a better. * * Anson was not only thus a great benefactor to the materiel of the Navy, but equally so to its officers, whose claims had not been listened to with that attention which they had a right to expect from one of their own corps, usually placed at the head of the Naval Department. * * He was a man of great modesty and simplicity of manners, and so reserved in general society as to give some truth to the point of Williams's bon mot, 'that he had been round the world, but never in it.' Walpole, also, is not far from the truth in calling him 'the silent son-in law of the chancellor.' His silence and reserve, however, were not the offspring of any deficiency of knowledge or want of ability, either on general of professional acquirements, but from that natural diffidence of his own merit, and a reluctance of speaking in public, which very many men of considerable talents have not been able to overcome; while others, with a parsimony of intellect, are by no means deficient in volubility of speech. As a representative in the House of Commons, and subsequently as a peer of the realm—as a member of the Board of Admiralty, holding for many years the high and responsible situation of First Lord—it does not appear, from the parliamentary history, that he ever spoke on any subject, professional or otherwise, although many naval questions of considerable importance, in both houses, were brought into discussion; but there were always able civilians in the Board to represent his sentiments. In the records of the Admiralty there is abundant evidence of his constant and unremitting attention to the various duties of that department, and of the large share he had in them. * * The fleets that he had fitted out, with a rapidity never before known, afford no ground for the imputation of slowness: the truth appears to be, that he was slow to decide, but quick to execute. He was not certainly possessed of shining abilities, but a plain, straightforward, matter-of-fact man, attentive to the duties of his office, well acquainted with the practical part of his profession, and what is perhaps equally important with the character of the officers belonging to it, which he closely looked at and thoroughly understood—the more necessary in his time, as selection for promotion to the flag was almost exclusively the rule."

Minstrel Melodies; being a Collection of Songs. By the Author of "Field Flowers," "The Garland," &c. Longman and Co.

NAVAL, military, loyal, convivial, and love songs,—some good and many but indifferent. However, on the whole, we like the little volume. The author has avoided every idea or expression which might seem to run counter, directly or indirectly, to the moralities of any order of society. From the preface we shall take a passage on the influence of song:—

"What nerved the arm of the Saxon, when he battled for conquest with the Briton, but the verse which spoke of another mead quaffed from cups of gold, in the banquet halls of Thor, or Odin? Led on by what mighty spell rushed the Norman into conflict on the red field of Hastings, but the war song that told of the immortal deeds of Rollo? Before the torrent side of song-created Enthusiasm has the proud spirit of Despotism bowed the head, and sheathed the sword of vengeance, wrongs have been redressed, Justice has been obtained, and the meteor flag of freedom has been made to wave triumphant by a song. Yet not alone in the battle-field of valour has the power of song been acknowledged; by the bower of Beauty it has not passed unheeded; and it some of the most spirit-stirring sentiments of liberty owe their birth to song, so, also, do some of the most pure and refined ones of love."

The Last of the Plantagenets. Smith, Elder, and Co. THIS reprint of an historical narrative, illustrating some of the principal events and domestic and ecclesiastical manners of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, embodies much antiquarian knowledge, and is very pleasantly written.

The Only Daughter. Engraved by F. Englehcart, from a picture by Sir D. Wilkie. R. G. Moon.

NEXT to Mr. Doo's celebrated engraving of "The Preaching of Knox before the Lords of the Congregation," this print is the most exquisitely finished that has for a length of time appeared. Wilkie's original picture is well known to every admirer of the arts; the subject is one of agonising domestic distress, and which could not have been portrayed in stronger and more touching terms: it has all the pathos which distinguishes the master genius of Wilkie. A young girl laid on a bed of sickness, in that stage of fever which is the crisis of the disease, and where the question of life or death is immediately about to be decided. By all the main incidents of the picture, and by every accessory, the story is told in language as expressive as it is affecting. The partially-darkened room, and the phials which strew the tables with the melancholy evidences of the sick chamber,—though not noticed until after the eye (which is at once, and unerringly, directed to the principal group about the bed) has had time to wander from the melancholy drama there enacting, in search of objects less intensely painful—contribute, nevertheless, at the very first glance which falls upon the picture, to the full effect by which the argument of that domestic drama is unfolded. There is no incident, however trifling, of the design, which does not, long ere we have time to discover that such is the case, add its share to the general impression. The eye is first led (as should be the case) by the distribution of light and grouping, to the point at which the interest centres, and on which the denouement depends. The pale face and languid attitude of the young sufferer—the swoln eyes and distorted features which indicate the wild assaults of the fever that is pouring its liquid fire along her veins—earliest attract the spectator's gaze, and are, at once, most plain and most touching exponents of the suffering past and the dreaded future. And yet it is a positive relief to turn, even to that principal actor in the mournful drama of moral and physical anguish, after getting a glimpse of the mother's face. She sits by the bed-side of her suffering child, with a look which seems caught from the shadow of that dreaded death, whose advancing tread her spirit seems already to hear,—and a brow on which the anguish of a few hours appears to have done the work of many long years. All this is indicated, with a power that is like a spell. A fearful example of the painter's mastery over the heavy secrets of the human heart does that mother's face display. Contrasted with her look of unspeakable anguish, and just opposite, is the sad and thoughtful brow of the physician (a portrait of Sir Anthony Carlisle), who sits with his finger on the wan wrist of the young girl, anxiously watching the progress of the disease, and counting the throbs which are the mysterious witnesses in this trial of life or death. Not on her child, but into the physician's face (which carefully shuns her's), the mother is gazing to catch the first indications of his verdict; though it seems as if no verdict and no time should ever have power to lift all that load of anguish from her heart, or clear away that depth of shadow from her brow. At a distance from the bed stands the father, gazing on the scene with a sorrow less fearful to contemplate than that of the mother, but perhaps more touching in the evidences of its mastery over the strong and stalwart man. His hand rests on the volume from whence his present slender hope flows, and his future high consolation is to come, if the final sentence shall go forth this day against his child. At the foot of the bed stands the young patient's pet-dog, looking wistfully up into the face of his mistress, which has no welcome for him now; and, though the back of the animal alone is seen, the sentiment of distress is distinctly conveyed. All things announce one of those dreadful moments into which are crowded the feelings of years—one of those fearful trials of the heart which, be their issue what it may, never leave the spirit as young, nor the forehead as fresh, as they found them. About the room are scattered many little accessories, which are the poetry of the picture, and repeat its moral in language to which the sternness of the main reality is wanting, and which help to soften down the horror of the whole. On the walls of the apartment, for example, hangs the dying girl's unfinished sampler—the cage of her bird is muffled, to exclude the light and silence its song—near the sampler is suspended her lute, with a string broken—and, not far off, a barometer, with the mercury low down. Over the looking-glass is thrown the necklace which the poor girl had taken off ere she lay down in that bed, round which the angel of death now hovers. Each of these little emblems hints, in its own touching and appropriate language, the same question—the answer to which the human hearts, in that in that chamber of suffering and sorrow, are waiting to hear.—This print will greatly add to the reputation of the eminent engraver Mr. Engleheart, and gives Mr. Moon, the spirited publisher of fine engravings, a further claim to the liberal encouragement of every patron and friend of the arts.

To the Merry Greenwood; The Cup of Peace; In Summer's Cot. D'Almaine and Co.

THESE simple and graceful compositions, by E. J. Loder, and which have attained celebrity through that delightful songstress, Miss P. Horton, at Covent-Garden Theatre, are calculated to gratify the ear of taste, and equally suitable for private singing as for the stage. They cannot, indeed, fail in being liked from their happy and original melodies.

New Light for Lighthouses.—The Polytechnic Institution, in Regent-street, has just added to its numerous attractions one which deserves particular mention at our hands; since, if we mistake not, it is destined to effect very important results in connexion with our Naval Service. We allude to what is called, "THE BUDE LIGHT"—so designated from the birth-place and residence of its inventor, Mr. Goldsworthy Gurney. This "new light"—for so it must be deemed in the best sense of the phrase—has long been under a course of private experiments at the Trinity House, with a view to its adoption in all our Government lighthouses; and we understand that adoption has been at length fully determined on by the brothers, and the "Bude Light" is now in the course of erection at the Isle of Wight. This beautiful and remarkable discovery consists of a most ingenious mechanical apparatus, by which a cotton wick, on the Argand principle, but of a long elliptical form, and burning turpentine instead of oil, is supplied with a perpetual atmosphere of pure oxygen gas in place of common air. Thus much, briefly, of the lamp itself. But a very important feature of it is the adjunct of a newly-invented hemispherical reflector constructed on strict mathematical principles, and so placed as to direct the light in the required line, and exclude it from every other. The result is a light of such intense brilliance and power that it can scarcely be looked at by the unprotected eye; and we have been assured by an eye-witness, on whose testimony we can place implicit reliance, that he has himself read a letter by this light at more than half a mile distance in a night of perfect darkness. We shall certainly return to this important subject. In the meantime, the exhibition of the "Bude Light" at the rooms of the Polytechnic Institution, in Regent-street, cannot fail to excite unusual interest, and greatly add to the other attractions of that popular and truly praiseworthy establishment.

AN INCIDENT OF THE BATTLE OF WATERLOO.

THE regiment into which Capt. Leslie had exchanged before his marriage, was ordered into Belgium. Walter longed for glory; and Helen, his young wife, was too sensible to pain him by unavailing regrets—even on their parting she had striven not to unman him; and when the first natural grief was over, she took her station at the small window of the Inn, which commanded a view of the scene of action. Could an uninterested observer have gazed upon the plain of Waterloo at that moment, it must have appeared a splendid pageant. But Helen thought how many ere sunset would have gone to their final account; and she shuddered at the thought, that perhaps her Walter might be among the number. The distant cannonading told that already the work of death had commenced. Several random shots had struck the inn, and warned its inmates to take shelter in the barn. With them did Helen sit during that long day, sad and silent, yet with the same confidence in God's protection that had always marked her character another time. She could have smiled at the volubility of her companions, who never ceased speaking, in a mixture of bad French and Flemish. But it made her only more sad; she felt that she was indeed among strangers. Oh, the agony of suspense, the fear of hearing that Walter was among the fallen! Her beauty and girlish appearance, added to the knowledge that her husband was in the field of battle, gave her an interest in the eyes of her companions, and many were the hopes they expressed, in French, that Captain Leslie might return in safety. The day passed, twilight succeeded, followed by the almost immediate darkness which characterizes a continental summer; and still Helen sat in all the agony of suspense. The action had ceased: random firings succeeded the constant and fearful din of war; yet still Captain Leslie returned not. She was roused from the state of stupor into which she had fallen, by the sound of approaching footsteps; and some soldiers entered the barn, bearing a wounded officer. It was with scarcely definable feelings that Helen discovered it was not her husband, but a young officer of the same regiment. For a few minutes any other feeling seemed lost in the anxious attentions necessary for the severe wound of the sufferer. Helen had, fortunately, provided everything necessary; with the kindest gentleness she dressed the sufferer's wounds; and then attempted to restore him to consciousness—her efforts were successful. Aided by the people of the inn, she succeeded in making him swallow a restorative: and in a short time he was able to thank the gentle hand which had ministered unto him.

Helen with eager earnestness exclaimed, "Walter! where is he?" Mr. Grant turned his head away, He could not bear the sight of the agony he knew his answer must inflict. "Speak! in mercy tell me that Leslie is safe!"—Helen paused a moment, and then continued, "I know it all, Walter is dead!" There was a frightful calmness in her manner, no tear escaped her. "Did you see him fall?" she said at length, "tell me all, it will do me good; I feel as if tears would cool this scorching pain," she said, pressing her hand to her bosom.

Mr. Grant complied. He felt that tears would relieve her. "I was at his side," said he, "a moment before he fell. He had taken a small pocket Bible from his breast:—had pressed it to his lips—" Helen covered her face with her hands, "It was the Bible I gave him on our wedding day!" she gasped, "tell me, tell me all." "'If I fall, Grant, give this to my wife,' he said. I laughed at his forebodings. 'You will return,' I said, 'to tell her of the events of this day.' Before he could reply, we were summoned to action. A few minutes after a shot struck him, and he fell!" Helen burst into an agony of tears, and for some minutes continued silent: at length her resolution seemed to be taken. She came to the couch upon which Mr. Grant was lying, and begged him to describe the spot where her husband fell. She received the description in silence. A few minutes after she had stolen from the small inn yard, and stood alone on the spot where she had last seen her husband.

Helen was in years a mere child; and there had been a time when she would have shuddered at a recital of the horrors through which she now passed, with a trembling step, though with an undaunted heart,—but what will not love in woman undertake?—"God has as much power to protect me here," she thought, as the distant firing caught her ear, and caused her for a moment to pause, "as in a crowded room!" The thought of "what had she to live for?" rendered her a moment incapable of proceeding; then silently imploring strength from God, she persevered.

What a scene of horrors presented itself to her! The spot, where a few hours before she had gazed on the brilliant ranks of the contending armies, was now occupied by the dead or dying. Occasionally a wounded horse dashed wildly among the heaps of wounded. There were a party employed in stripping the dead—at her approach they looked up, and for a moment a superstitious dread crossed their minds. Her white dress made them suppose her a ghost, and when convinced of their mistake, they let her pass unmolested, observing with an oath that she was seeking perhaps for her lover. Helen passed on. As she approached the spot described by Grant, she examined earnestly the faces of the dead. She was almost beginning to despair, when, from beneath a heap of slain, an outstretched arm caught her attention. On one of the fingers was a ring, one of her first gifts to him. With trembling hands she put down the small lantern she had brought, and removed the slain. It was, indeed her husband who lay there; and a long fit of weeping relieved her; she raised him, and the head fell back upon her shoulders. Approaching footsteps alarmed her: they were those of two men of her husband's regiment. One of them explained that they had followed her at Mr. Grant's desire. Between them was the body of Capt. Leslie borne into the inn of Mont St. Jean.

A surgeon was then dressing the wounds of Mr. Grant, and his immediate attention was given to Leslie. Helen stood with her husband's hand clasped in hers; with a calmness which was more affecting than the most violent agitation could have been. Bruised as Leslie was, there was no wound to be found. The surgeon placed a glass before his lips—then exclaimed, with an interest he had not often felt,—"He still lives!"

The effect of joy is often more acute than that of grief. Helen gazed for a moment wildly round, then sank on the floor in a state of insensibility. Hours passed before she recovered consciousness. When she did, she found that it was not a dream. Leslie still lived. The shot which had struck him down was found embedded in the Bible which he had but a moment before thrust into the breast of his coat. But, had it not been for the timely assistance of his wife, he must have perished. He was saved almost by a miracle from being crushed to death; fortunately, however, the spot on which he fell was hollow; and he is still alive.

The incidents of this sketch are strictly true. Those who have visited ——— must have seen the small Bible, which is regarded by the family with feelings of the deepest veneration. It is still kept under a case, and will for ever perpetuate the heroism of the soldier's bride at Waterloo.

[From "Dearden's Miscellany," a new periodical of very great promise, and having contributions from Richard Howitt, James Montgomery, and other popular writers.—ED.]

The Duke.—We take the following passage from a speech made by Sir F. Burdett, on Saturday last, at a Conservative public dinner, at Ashby de la Zouch:—"Looking to the whole of the public career of this distinguished man; the wonderful combination of rare and exalted attributes which met in his character; his deeds unexampled of glory and renown, amidst difficulties, trials, and sacrifices of which they could form no adequate conception—looking to his own despatches, a collection worth all the classics, and which ought to become a book of study in all places of education, a collection exhibiting as it did in so remarkable a manner such singleness of purpose and aim and devotion to his country, such energy of character, such transcendent ability, such unerring judgment and perseverance surmounting every obstacle, such loftiness combined with such simplicity of character, incapable of any mean or sordid motive—for all those qualities which were thought to be carried to such a pitch of perfection among the ancients,—looking to the whole connected career of the Duke of Wellington, he defied all Greek and Roman story to produce his equal. All history did not hold up to the admiration and imitation of mankind a character in all respects so perfect and complete, or one which presented less to tarnish or bedim the lustre of its admirable qualities than that of the Duke of Wellington (loud cheers); and whatever might be thought of the state of the country, so far as those in power were concerned, the transcendent glory of the achievements of Wellington and Nelson still maintained its far-famed character for Military renown. With such leaders, and inspired by their example and spirit, the British Army and Navy, from the officer to the soldier in the ranks, and the sailor before the mast, acted with that bravery and unison which overcame every obstacle, and made resistance impossible.

Naval Comforts.—On a late occasion, when a sloop-of-war was going out of this harbour, and a shower of train prevailed at the same time, a Midshipman was seen prudently walking the quarter-deck with an umbrella over his head. What would Hosier's ghost say to this? —Hampshire Telegraph.

Weight of Articles borne by the Sepoy Soldier.—The total weight of what a Sepoy carries on his body (exclusive of coat and trowsers) is 42¼ lbs. In light marching order the Sepoy carries 33 lbs. 10 oz., and the rest goes on camels. Some idea may be formed of the number of camels now in camp, when it is mentioned that each regiment is allowed eighty-two camels, exclusive of those employed to carry the mess and the baggage of the European Officers.

COURTS-MARTIAL.

MAJOR F. T. FARRELL.

Adjutant-General's Office, Poona, Nov. 22, 1838.

AT a General Court-Martial, assembled at Deesa, Nov. 14, 1838, and of which Col. T. Valiant, K.H., of H.M. 40th reg. is President, Major T. Farrell, of 6th regiment N.I., was tried on the following charges:—

1st Charge—For highly irregular and unofficerlike conduct, in breach of his duty as senior officer in charge of the regiment, in the following instances:—

For having, in a letter addressed to the Adjutant-Gen. of the Army, dated Surat, March 24, 1838, knowingly made a false report, for the information of His Exc. the Commander-in-Chief, "that a regular and respectable officers' mess had been formed in the regiment," thereby tending to deceive the Commander-in-Chief, as no mess was then kept up as defined and directed in G.O. by the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India in Council, under date the 16th May, 1836, and republished and declared to be applicable to the Army serving under this Presidency on 8th July of the same year.

2d Charge—In having, betwixt 24th March, 1837, and 12th Oct. 1838, knowingly signed false certificates, that a regimental mess was so formed and maintained, thereby sanctioning the Government allowance for the same to be drawn, contrary to the rules laid down in the aforesaid G.O., as no regular mess was, during the above-specified period, bona fide established and kept up on the principles therein set forth.

3d Charge—For highly irregular conduct, as senior officer in charge of the regiment, in having, in a paper dated Camp, Deesa, 9th July, 1838, proposed and sanctioned part of the regimental mess-house to be rented to an officer of the regiment, thereby diverting that part of the premises from their intended use and purposes.

Upon which charges the Court came to the following decision:—

Finding—That the prisoner, Major F. T. Farrell, 6th reg. N.I., is, with respect to the first charge, not guilty, with respect to the second charge, not guilty; with respect to the third charge, not guilty.—The Court are of opinion that the prisoner, Major F. T. Farrell, 6th reg. N.I., did sanction part of the regimental mess-house to be rented to an officer of the reg., to which the Court attach no criminality. The Court do, therefore, most fully and honourable acquit the prisoner, Major F. T. Farrell, 6th reg. N.I., of all and every part of the charges preferred against him.

Approved. JOHN F. FITZGERALD, Major-Gen.

Major Farrell is to be released from arrest, and will return to his duty.

AT a European General Court-Martial, assembled at Bombay, Oct. 29, 1838, Ensign J. S. Cahill, Bombay Eur. Reg, was tried on the following charge, viz.:—

ENS. J. S. Cahill, Bombay Eur. Reg., placed in arrest by my order, for disgraceful conduct highly unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentlemen, in the following instances:—

First—In having appeared at a Regimental Court-Martial, of which he was a member, on the 27th inst., in such a state, from the effects of intoxication, as to be totally unfit to perform his duty. Second—In being in the state described in the first instance of the charge, from the same cause, on the same day, he being on duty as regimental officer of the day. J. T. [illegible], Major, in charge of Bombay Reg. Eur. Inf.

Upon which charge the Court came to the following decision:—

The Court having maturely weighed and considered all that has been adduced in support of the prosecution, as well as what has been brought forward on the defence, is of opinion, that Ensign J. S. Cahill is guilty of both instances of the charge, in breach of the Articles of War, in such case made and provided, and does therefore adjudge him the said Ens. J. Cahill, to be dismissed the service.

Approved and confirmed. JOHN KEANE, Lt.-Gen., Com.-in-Chief.

The name of Ens. J. S. Cahill is to be struck off the strength of the reg. of European Infantry from this date.—STRATFORD POWELL, Lt.-Col., Adjt.-Gen. of the Army.

ON DUELLING.

"Thou wilt quarrel with a man for cracking nuts, having no other reason but because thou hast hazel eyes."—Shakspeare.

THE recent duel at Wimbledon (which, if it had not been tragical, would have been ridiculous,) has drawn public attention very strongly to the practice in general; has produced a history of duelling, and various commentaries, all combining to reprobate the cruelty and absurdity of the practice. Arguments of the most forcible kind, which have brought religion and morality to their aid, have been advanced to bring discredit on the custom, and even ridicule has been brought into play to point out the folly of its continuance to the present day. The most forcible example of the last has been given by Franklin, whether from experience or imagination is of little consequence. As it is perhaps generally little known, it may not be thought intrusive to give a sketch of it here. Two persons sitting on the same bench in a coffee-room, one said to the other, "Sir, I shall be obliged to you to sit farther from me. The answer was, "Why?" "Because, Sir, you stink." "What do you mean by that insulting language? You shall meet me, and give me immediate satisfaction." "I have no objection," said the first speaker, "but I cannot see how that can possibly settle the argument; if you kill me, I shall stink as bad nearly as you do now, and if I kill you, you will stink, if possible, still worse." But neither argument, ridicule, nor the punishment of some of the parties engaged in the late affair alluded to, have had any effect in putting a stop to proceedings of this kind; two or three duels took place a fortnight after that trial.

This being the state of the case, it is natural to seek the causes why the practice should continue in face of these obstacles. Custom, and the usages of society, have been brought forward, but they are not sufficient. The strongest and most powerful reason is, the insufficiency of the laws to screen society from turbulent and troublesome characters. It throws its ægis over the persons and property of all the citizens, but offers no safeguard or compensation for wounded feelings. "Father Antick" is too much a matter-of-fact personage to enter into the nice shades by which a man may be attacked in a way quite as hurtful to him as if his person or property had been put in peril. The stigma of society rests on him, which custom and use have rendered of all other things the most painful to endure.

> "Good name in man or woman
> Is the immediate jewel of their souls."

The law will grant a man, under some uncertainty, satisfaction for a written libel, and also for words spoken in defamation of character, that may injure him in his trade or profession; but makes no provision for the malicious insinuation or sly innuendo that equally stabs at a man's character. A person sitting in your company may call you a pitiful scoundrel, a liar, or coward. What satisfaction does the law give you? It tells you that if by these threats, or abuse, the other party means to provoke you to fight a duel, he shall be bound over by sureties to keep the peace. If the bully should carry his insolence farther, throw a glass of wine in your face, or insult a lady in your company, he may be prosecuted for an assault, and fined five or ten pounds, as the case may be; but does such compensation come up, in any degree, to the injury inflicted? Certainly not; and the only alternative left is to obtain personal satisfaction, although, without a question, the penalty falls as often on the injured party as on the other. The practice of duelling seems to follow the progress of civilisation, and there is more of it now in North America than all the nations of Europe who have received the custom from the quarrels of the feudal ages. In England it has gradually fallen into disuse as manners have improved, but it is rather problematical whether it can be altogether done away with, unless a court of honour should be established, to which cases of that kind might be referred, or the law amended, or rather its provisions extended so far as to protect people's feelings as well as their persons.

By the late proceedings it would seem to be the intention to put down the custom, if possible, by punishment, and in this case it has fallen on the right shoulders, for in three cases out of four the seconds are more to blame than the principals, who are almost always mere agents of the discretion of their friends. These alone can decide on the moment when things have gone far enough and are to be stopped. But in enforcing the law several anomalies and contradictions arise. In the first place, meeting to fight a duel is no crime: it is only a misdemeanour, as tending to a breach of the peace; then again the parties may fire "pistol loaded with ball" at each other for any given time without notice being of the affair, in case no injury occurs; they may be both wounded without the law being the least discomposed, but if one of the two is killed in fair fight, then it is to be murder—which has never yet been enforced according to the full penalty, except in the case of Major Campbell, and then properly enough; it was not a "fair fight," the parties having proceeded without witnesses. I recollect once a case that occurred in the Isle of Wight, in the year 1813-14, where an officer was killed in a duel, his antagonist and one of the seconds were put on their trial at Winchester; the other second, who had kept out of the way, thought that he did not run any risk by trying to be of use to his friend in a dilemma, and came forward to give his evidence. His name, however, had scarcely been pronounced, when he was suddenly removed from the witness-box to the dock, arraigned with his two friends, and in a space of time that must have seemed to him to have been inconceivably short, was found guilty, and sentenced to be hanged until he was dead, &c. Any one that has ever seen Sir Vicary Gibbs, will allow that it was anything but a pleasant sight to see him put on the black cap; and it had a very awkward effect on the nerves of the good-natured Irish Lieutenant, who had volunteered his services to his friends. Rallying however, a little, he looked up and said, "Sure it is very hard on me, on my way to join my Regiment in the West Indies, to be stopped here to be hanged." He was not, however, suspended as he expected, all the parties having received pardon.

This question ought to be settled in some definite shape; but without a tribunal of honour, or extension of the existing laws to protect people from insolence, it will be in vain to hope for a termination of the practice of duelling. If persons are not allowed to settle their quarrels in this country, they will cross the water to arrange the matter. It may, after all, be best to allow the practice to wear out by the gradual improved feeling produced by advanced civilisation, and the lessons inculcated by the forgiving spirit of Christianity, which, if followed up in their true sense, would have long since extinguished personal enmity amongst individuals in society. In four cases out of five the origin of these quarrels arises in mere trifles, which, from arrogance on one side, and opposition on the other, lead to offensive expressions, that, according to the received notions among gentlemen, cannot be atoned for in any other way than by meeting in the field. Here it is that the value of a real friend is found out, and how seldom that office is properly fulfilled a hundred instances are within the recollection of the writer of this paper. One, a recent case, when, from stupidity, or want of knowledge of affairs of this kind on the part of a second, an expression of no very insulting nature was not allowed to be retracted; and although the principal on the occasion felt that he might have recalled his words conscientiously, yet, having put his honour into the keeping of his (query) friend, who forbade him to do so, he was forced to meet a man against whom he felt no personal enmity, and was unfortunate enough to see his adversary fall. Thus, by want of judgment on the part of the second, the public service was deprived of two of its servants—the challenger having died of his wound, and he who received it being dismissed from Her Majesty's service by the sentence of a Court-Martial, hitherto unprecedented in our military annals.

A person thus brought into the field is no longer a free agent, and is forced to act, perhaps, contrary to all his feelings of generosity and humanity, unless he takes the other alternative, and finds himself shunned by all his former companions and comrades. This being the state of affairs, it may be proper to suggest, that the seconds in the quarrel should be the principal in the punishment that it may be thought necessary to inflict, as generally the fault lies with them, either from perversity of judgment, or a foolish vanity of showing off their own courage at the expense of their friends. If it were the practice that the second should be made to bear the onus of the quarrel, duels would diminish, if not cease. People would be very chary in calling on friends, and they, on the other hand, would look well about them before they undertook the office.—West of England New Monthly Magazine.—The first number of a new Periodical of a very superior character, and deserving of success.—ED. N. & M. G.]

The volunteer of the second class, professionally instructed in astronomy, navigation, and seamanship, passes, and invariably, if deserving, ultimately obtains the warrant of Master, passing through the intermediate grades of Assistant and Second Master. In the rank the progress is gradual, well-timed, and importantly regulated for the ends of inspiring zeal and urging advancement, being progressive from a sixth to a first rate ship of war, giving promotion, advance of pay, consequence, and rank. The volunteer of the first class, passing through the grades of Midshipman, Mate, and Lieutenant, expects to be rewarded by the posts of Commander and Captain; and, if his life be spared, ultimately hopes to obtain the farther elevation to a flag *.

These are the three executive grades of the Royal Navy, where in this lies the wrong, where the injustice, where the neglect? In the last mentioned grade interest has certainly its due weight, and will, and ever must, predominate, but when combined with merit, it loses its sting, and cannot be judged unfair. If the due and exalted influence of the Royal Navy be not consulted, and in reality aided by the advancement of hereditary rank and individual greatness, the service would soon retrograde and fall. The possession of natural elevation in society is seldom found to destroy talent or merit; on the contrary, it invariably secures a tenacity of principle and developes honour. Let us now direct our attention to the other service, and anxiously search for that encouragement offered to its members, suitable to their calling, that service which it becomes our immediate task to scrutinise, from the nature of its wants, the condition of its manners, relation to the Navy, and the powerful influence it must ever exercise over the destinies of the country. Where in the trading marine can we discover that reward by advancement, that desired and deserved promotion, that equity, that common law? Is it in the neglect of merit, or in the disregard of the wants and sufferings of the seaman, or by the infliction, in a thousand shapes of oppression? Justice may be in vain sought for—favour is exclusively awarded to those of mercantile influence. Compare the considerate treatment shown in the Royal Navy, and particularly examine even that branch of the trading marine which attempts to imitate it, although it never could hope to bear the faintest outline of its perfection; yet it might with success in solicitude for the comforts and welfare of its seamen, were that thought fit. That service, from the possession of immense wealth and power, and many other advantages favouring it,—yet it only avails itself of those restrictions or severities which the Navy has got the credit of practising (and indeed would be legally excusable were it even so); but which are undue in the East India Company's service—the branch of the trading marine alluded to. The severities occasioned in that service by the absurd attempts to vie with the Navy in practices which would be of importance in the latter service, but are literally useless in the former, have been of the greatest evil to the country's Navy. Many a seaman has it banished from his country's service, influenced by the causes already adverted to, and which operate upon the minds of the trading mariners.

Between the hardships and petty oppression of the general trading marine, and the labour and vexatious tyranny in the East India Company's Service, the seaman is led to shun the Navy, which he has been taught to consider as worse than either. But contrast the rewards, advantages, and hopes, which exist in the Navy, the established laws by which it is governed, and those which delude in the trading marine. The system in the latter is a specimen of that vexatious authority which is arbitrarily assumed by a few over a number. They possess sufficient power to tantalise and goad, but not to destroy by immediate oppression. There cannot exist a more tyrannical sway, than that which the shipowner holds over both the actions and mind of the master, influencing his judgment and understanding; nor can there be a more powerful ascendancy than that which the master also holds over the mates and subordinate officers of a trading ship, who have neither will nor intellect at their own disposal. Thus, through a progression of transferred and assumed power vested in one mind, with the physical aid of many to whom he is not accountable, and whose opinion he disregards, and who probably might be deluded by a promise of recommendation to the owner, the master may (and does often) practise with impunity the most violent excesses, should he unfortunately be so inclined. The few who generally form the authoritive portion of a trading vessel, combined with the limited number who make the subservient part, give an opportunity to the former of doing evil without the immediate fear of disclosure, from there being no scrutiny of responsibility, character, disposition, or actions, or from the one fearing the reproof or reproach of the other for any act of oppression; it equally avoids disclosure and chastisement, as it emanates from one source; even the anticipation of reproach is not dreaded, unusual as it is to discover the shipowner who ever reprimanded his master for the ill treatment or oppression of the mariner. Even in the common but important issue of provisions, the master and mates have not only a superior quality but a greater quantity, the crew being frequently placed upon a very limited allowance. This is the treatment which the trading mariner receives, the encouragement offered, the inducement held out to enter that service, the advancement of which, and the influence and number of those whom it employs, so materially tend to the security and aid of the state and enrichment of the nation.

All these evils become, if not directly, at least collaterally, injurious to our Royal Navy, as they diminish the numbers of seamen, and stamp them with ideas of undue severity being practised in that service. Even supposing that the laws were tyrannical, there exists in every ship-of-war so numerous a body and so mixed a classification of human nature, modified by education, understanding, and moral conduct; influenced by individual sentiments, and accountable to one another, although subservient in subordination; so that an abuse of power is impossible, and cannot occur. How, before the eyes of hundreds, and in the presence of a number of enlightened officers, in whom a rectitude of principle is inculcated, could a Commander (were one so unlike the officer of the British Navy to be found) have temerity, or stupidity enough to abuse power and inflict wrong? No! the same laws govern superior and inferior alike; the high and the low, the rich and the poor, the prince and the subject. That Prince who, with the noble energy of his exalted and chivalrous mind, boldly identified, his royal arm and personal intrepidity with this so distinguished profession before destiny crowned his hereditary glory, as late lamented Sovereign of the realm; even he gladly, to his immortal honour be it recorded, voluntarily submitted to those undeviating and just laws which govern the Navy; and became as subservient to its customs as he was solicitous of its welfare and renown. Thus giving a striking example of the nature of that duty which is required of the British mariner, from the Admiral to the youngest seaman, not only on the ocean but also in the field and in the breach. This peculiar instance of Royal devotion and intrepidity is well described in the interesting memoir of that gallant officer, Sir Charles Shaw, descriptive of the operations under Sir Thomas Graham, now Lord Lynedoch, while before Antwerp in 1814. Many corroborations of these statements could be produced; few indeed have been the acts of wanton cruelty in the Royal Navy.

* Many instances may be cited in order to substantiate the above assertion, and prove, where genuine merit is displayed, the consideration of Government, particularly in the cases of several Masters, and even Second Masters, of the Royal Navy being advanced to the rank of Lieutenant.

MOXON'S

EFFERVESCENT MAGNESIAN APERIENT, decidedly the most generally useful Medicine ever offered to the public.

The unrivalled efficacy of the Magnesian in all Disorders of the Stomach and Bowels has obtained for it the uniform recommendation and approval of the Faculty.

This unique preparation unites all the active powers of the most approved saline purgatives with the palatable qualities of a glass of soda water. In torpid state of the liver and bowels, bilious affections, cholera morbus, pains in the head, or disordered state of the stomach, nausea, and violent sickness, it will be found a safe, speedy, and effectual remedy. It gives instantaneous relief in the heartburn, is of great service in preventing piles, fistula, and gout, and in alleviating the febrile symptoms attendant on the latter affection. Derangement of the stomach and head, &c., arising from too free indulgence in the gratifications of the table, is speedily removed by a tea-spoonful taken early in the morning.

Prepared only by BENJAMIN MOXON, Chymist, Hull.

Wholesale Agents—Barclay and Sons, London; J. and R. Raines, Edinburgh and Dublin. J. DELCROIX AND CO., Perfumers to Her Majesty Queen Victoria, &c. &c.
No. 158, New Bond Street (opposite Stevens's Hotel).

The great superiority of J. Delcroix and Co's Perfumery has been so incontrovertibly established by the distinguished patronage of her Majesty Queen Victoria, the Queen Dowager, the various Members of the Royal Family, and by the Nobility and Gentry generally, as to render it unnecessary for J. Delcroix and Co. to do more than enumerate their leading articles, viz.

BOUQUET DE LA REINE VICTORIA, a new perfume, prepared expressly for her Majesty.

HIS LATE MAJESTY GEORGE IV.'S PERFUME, BOUQUET DU ROI, prepared expressly for that Sovereign.

ESPRIT DE LAVANDE AUX MILLEFLEURS, so universally admired in every quarter of the habitable globe.

DELCROIX'S VEGETABLE EXTRACT, for cleansing the Hair, &c.

POMMADE REGENERATRICE, for the growth and preservation of the Hair.

VEGETABLE CREME des SULTANES, for preserving, beautifying, and whitening the skin.

DELCROIX'S celebrated POUDRE UNIQUE, for dyeing the hair, &c.

PATE D'AMANDE A LA REINE, so justly esteemed for its healing and softening quality.

The TRUE OPIATE of the Circassian Ladies, for the preservation and embellishment of the Teeth.

To Ladies.—POUDRE SUBTILE, for removing superfluous Hairs.

DELCROIX'S ANTI-SCORBUTIC ELIXIR and ANTI-SCORBUTIC TOOTH POWDER, for preserving the Teeth and Gums from decay, and curing the Toothache.

To Gentlemen.—For the comfort of easy shaving, they call, with every satisfaction, recommend their Vegetable Polish Soap Paste, and Pasta del Castagna.

ALMOND OIL SOAP, for Rough or Chapped Hands, and for softening and improving the Skin.

Also, Farina's Genuine Eau de Cologne—Eau Aromatique—Real Swiss Arquebusade, and all other articles of Perfumery of the very best description.

 J. Delcroix and Co respectfully request that attention be particularly paid to the address upon their labels, No. 158, New Bond-street. No others can be warranted genuine.

WHITE'S ESSENCE of EGLANTINE.—A highly fashionable and peculiar HANDKERCHIEF SCENT, possessing extracts from the most fragrant flowers, and forming a perfume at once sweet, agreeable, and refreshing.

Prepared only by Thomas White, Chemist, 24, Cornhill, London. In bottles at 2s. 6d. and 4s. 6d. each. Also by the following Agents:—Mr. Binnington, 55, Haymarket; Mr. Wagstaff, 122, Piccadilly; Mr. Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Mr. Burfield, 180, Strand; Mr. Huntsman, 309, High Holborn; Mr. Vinson, 124, Leadenhall-street; Mr. Sarel, 5, St. James's-street, Brighton; Messrs. H. and E. Greville, Northampton; Mr. Drury, Lincoln; Mr. Taylor, 8, St. Ann's-square, Manchester; Messrs. Butler and Colquhoun, 24, Castle-street, Liverpool; and by all respectable Chemists and Perfumers in the kingdom.

BARFIELD'S DIAMOND PLATE POWDER, warranted not to wear the Plate.

It instantly clears tarnish and dirt, and magically produces a most inimitable polish upon Gold, Silver, Plated Goods, Brass, Tin, Copper, and makes British Plate Zinc, and Pewter, look as white as the best Silver.

Sold, wholesale and retail, at Hallet and Co.'s British Plate Factory, 16, Ludgate-street, Bateman, Clamlet to the Queen, No. 8, Castle-street, Leicester-square; S. Chapell, 81, Lombard-street; Wilson, 67, Fenchurch-street; Thomas and Co., Old Kent-road; Russell, 67, Whitechapel-road, and at the Manufactory, 92, Fenchurch-street.

Agents Wanted for every Town in the Kingdom.

N B.—Plate cleaned with this Powder will not again tarnish.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Bouilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, No. 72, Welbeck-street, Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sams, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand.—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c. &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading or any other Sauce.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA,

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Mat jesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfume superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop, 63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 3s. 6d., 7s., and 15s. each.

TO MESSRS. ROWLAND & SON, 20, HATTON-GARDEN.

GENTLEMEN,—I take the liberty of addressing my thanks to you for the great benefit I have received from your truly valuable Macassar Oil. Having had the misfortune to lose almost all my hair at the age of twenty-five, in consequence of a fever, which is very prevalent in this part of the country, I was lately induced, at the instance of a friend, to make a trial of your excellent specific. I can only say the effects are most surprising; for in a very short space of time my head (which was before perfectly bald) was covered with thick and strong hair. I am now fifty years of age, and would scarcely have expected that, after having worn a wig for twenty-five years of my life, I should ever be able to throw it entirely aside. I think it but justice to yourselves and the public to add my testimony to the virtues of your truly inestimable Oil. You have my full permission to make this letter public, or refer any one to me for proofs of the merits of this invaluable discovery. I am, Gentlemen, your obliged and obedient servant,

Wm. Charles Pridgaux.

Spilsby, Lincolnshire, March 21, 1812.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL

Prevents hair from falling off or turning grey; restores grey hair to its original colour, frees it from scurf and dandriff, and keeps it firm in curl, &c., unimpaired by damp weather or perspiration; it also produces Whiskers, Moustachios, &c.

The lowest price is 3s. 6d., the next 7s., and 10s. 6d., and 21s. per bottle.

Ask for "Rowland's Macassar Oil." Sold by the Proprietors as above, and by respectable Perfumers.

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

WITHIN a period of Two Months upwards of Three Hundred Patients were successfully treated at the Metropolitan Hospitals with FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

By Joseph Henry Green, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London:—

"I have made a trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba.

"16, Lincoln's-inn Fields, April 15, 1825."

This invaluable Medicine is confidently recommended in all cases of Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Urethral Discharges, Spasmodic Strictures, Irritation of the Kidneys, Bladder, Urethra, and Prostate Gland, its purifying effects upon the general health render it particularly applicable in all cases of relaxed fibre and nervous debility.

Prepared only by George Franks, Surgeon, 90, Blackfriars Road, London; and may be had of all Wholesale and Retail Patent Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom, in Bottles at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each.

Mr. Franks may be consulted daily until Two o'clock.

Caution.—The Public are protected against Counterfeits by the name "George Franks, Blackfriars Road," being engraved on the Government Stamp attached to each Bottle.

Application for Shares to be addressed, post paid, to the Secretary, at the Company's Office, 20, Rue de l'Ecu, Boulogne-sur-Mer; or to Messrs. Thompson and Co., 6, Waterloo-place, Pall Mall, London, where Prospectuses and further information may be obtained.

The laws of France limit the responsibility to the actual deposit.

The undoubted validity of this patent, the superiority of the invention, and the extremely moderate sum for which it has been purchased, have induced the Directors to reject the overtures recently made to form a junction with other companies.

The allotment of Shares will take place on Thursday the 14th of February, after which no application can be received.

BRITISH WATERPROOF, 432, West Strand, near the Lowther Arcade.—Woollen Cloths, Camlets, &c., rendered Waterproof without impeding the escape of perspiration.

To the Directors of the British Waterproofing Company.

GENTLEMEN,—Having impartially tested the merits of your process, in accordance with my promise, I state the result, which is a firm conviction of the decided superiority of your system. To this invaluable discovery of Waterproofing I have for a long period devoted great attention, and was the first who publicly introduced it, since which I have had great practical experience in connection with it, and having fully ascertained the relative merits of the various systems now before the public, I feel no hesitation in stating that the results of my experiments and experience are decidedly in favour of your process. I make this avowal that so valuable a discovery may not at the onset get into disrepute, through the introduction of any of the comparatively inefficient substitutes that others have offered to me.

I am, Gentlemen, yours respectfully,

WALTER BERDOE, Tailor, 69, Cornhill.

CAVALRY.

Rl. Horse Gds.—On Monday morning a duel took place at Wormwood Scrubbs between Capt. the Hon. C. Forester and Capt. W. E. Hanmer. The former was attended by Capt. the Hon. J. W. B. Macdonald, 1st Life Guards, and the latter by Lieut. Conroy. Three shots were exchanged without effect, when the seconds would not permit the affair to proceed further. The meeting had become unavoidable, in consequence of an altercation between the principals, accompanied by extraordinary circumstances.

6th Drag. Gds.—The Marquess of Headfort has left town for Ireland, to visit his afflicted relative, the Hon. Gen. Taylor, Colonel of this corps, who lies dangerously ill at his seat, Downstown, Meath.

16th Lancers—Her Majesty's Lancers, with the 2d Lt. Cavalry, reached Delhi last Friday, and again left, together with the Camel Battery, in progress to join the Grand Army of the Indus at Ferozepoor. The very soldier-like appearance of the whole Brigade exhibits how strenuous the exertions of each Commandant must have been to support the credit of his regiment. That of the Lancers was particularly so. we do not remember, during the long period of our residence in India, ever having seen any European corps its equal. To express our opinion in a few words, we would say, that the men were well mounted and the horses even better. We venture to assert, that a finer body of men have never yet taken the field in any country.—Delhi Gazette, Nov. 7.

17th Lancers—We last week furnished the only correct record of the services and career of the late Colonel of this corps. At Windsor, on Monday, the last tribute of respect and esteem was paid to the honoured remains of this undaunted and intrepid soldier. He was followed to the last resting-place of all earthly combatants by friends and comrades who had gloried in him as much in the field, as they had loved and esteemed him in the retirement of private life. Amongst all his friends (and they were not a few), there were none more regretted him than his former constituents of the royal borough, to whom he was well known as their representative in the Parliament of Sir R. Peel; and secondly, as the Colonel commanding the Royal Horse Guards (Blue), in which distinguished regiment he sprung from the firm and valiant trooper to wield the sword and the authority of its Commanding Officer. The high reputation of Sir John Elley is well known to all military men. No individual ever possessed truer courage, or more freely sacrificed himself in feats of daring and intrepidity. He was another Nelson in the field, and, like him, earned with his blood "a gazette of his own," which no patronage could confer. The battle of Salamanca saw this brave soldier in the very midst of the enemy's Dragoons, cut off from all support; but his steed was as true as his steel, and he hewed his way to a victorious return. Our readers will remember a Court-Martial that made great noise a few years ago. "Where is the place (said the counsel) for a Colonel of Dragoons when going into action?" "For God's sake, where should you think, but in the front of his men?" said the witness. This witness was the hero of our notice. In private life he was universally beloved and admired. The perfect soldier and the gentleman were seen in him: his colloquial powers were of the very finest order, and his wit and humour were inexhaustible. Sir John was in politics a staunch Conservative, but to his honour be it spoken, he always set his face against that cruel and unnatural persecution got up by a rabid faction of the Tory party against the British Legion of Spain; and in the House of Commons he gave most ample testimony, from his own personal knowledge of every yard of the scene of warfare, how grossly calumniated were those brave but ill-used men. The last words he uttered on this subject, in the House of Commons, were as follows:—"These gallant men, with their no less gallant leader, have, with most unequal means, achieved the most prodigious results."

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Mr. Grant has been happier in his sketch of Sir John Elley than he generally is, many even of his personal descriptions presenting the strangest specimens of blundering. He has, however, done him less than justice in saying that "the utmost extent of his ambition" in Parliament "seemed to be to excite a laugh," and that "he never attempted argument." He frequently employed it, and with success; and his speeches (generally, though not always on military topics,) were remarkable for strong sense and candour, as well as humour. To use a homely phrase, he generally "hit the right nail on the head." His candour was exemplified in his defence of General Evans and the Legion, which silenced the mere party railers for a time. With respect to his person, Mr. Grant calls him "rather slenderly made." He certainly appeared so latterly, but it was from the wasting of flesh, not the deficiency of bone or sinew, which were indeed, on a deliberate inspection, remarkable for size, and rendered his feats as a swordsman easily comprehensible. He had the hand of a giant. He always reminded me, both in person and manner, of some of Scott's old barons and warriors. There is an engraving in one of the Keepsakes, from a picture suggested by an anecdote of Sir Walter's, of "the Laird's Jock," an old Border Chief, which might give some idea of Sir John Elley's appearance,—the costume, which is rather scanty, excepted,—in later days. His character altogether was that of a true Englishman of times gone by.—T. T.

INFANTRY.

Scots Fusilier Gds., 1st Batt.—moved on Saturday from Windsor to the Tower.

2d—The confusion at the embarkation of this and the other regs. of Sir John Keane's force at Bombay, has been commented on severely by the Press of India. We have elsewhere noticed the matter. This reg. has ceased recruiting.

3d—The recruiting for this regt. has been restricted to its own parties, the supernumeraries being nearly completed.

4th—This regt. much requires drafts from the depot; a letter from Madras dated 20th Nov., states, that it is the weakest of Her Majesty's regts. in that presidency.

6th—We observe by the Bombay Gazette that Capt. Minton has retired, and that Lieut. Beebee has purchased his company. Capt. Lumley and Lieut. Dyke are returning to England on medical certificate. The regt. on the 1st Dec. was still in the Deccan, but expected the route for Bombay.

8th—The Horatio has sailed from Cork with the draft.

9th—Capt. Telford is about to retire from the service by the sale of his commission.

10th—Capt. Strickland has got two months' leave. Major Power is also on leave.

11th—Extract of a letter from an officer:—

Fredericton, Dec. 8th.

"We are to perform the journey hence to Quebec on sledges, over the snow and ice. It was accomplished last winter by the 43d, 34th, and 85th regiments, the time occupied by each division being seventeen days, and the distance upwards of 350 miles. Their transport cost about 8,000*l.* Had proper measures been taken during summer, this winter march and expense might have been avoided."

We have heard with regret of the death of Brev.-Maj. M'Crummen, of this regt., who died at Chatham, after a short illness, on the 6th inst. This officer was brother-in-law of Sir John Macdonald, the Adjutant-General.

12th Depot—The Magistrates of Tralee have dismissed a trumpery charge of assault by a female against two officers.

17th—This corps was crammed into vessels in Bombay Harbour in Nov. last, and sailed for the Indus, but such was the absence of all good management on the part of the authorities, that the men were without rations the first day.

18th Depot—presented Maj. Doran, on his quitting the service, with a handsome drinking cup.

19th—On the 24th ult. the Officers gave a farewell dinner to their late Commanding officer, Lieut.-Col. Raper. On the cloth being removed, Col. Hamilton proposed the health of their distinguished and respected guest, and in a very happy and feeling strain, alluded to the long services of Col. Raper, which he described to have been highly honourable and beneficial to the corps, and congratulated himself on having succeeded an officer who had left him nothing to do, but to follow a system which had worked so well. The health of Col. Raper was drank with loud and reiterated applause, the band playing the old 19th mand of partisan Hussars. Yet this is precisely the course we follow. The Austrians, in 1791, did the same. Heavy Bohemians, solid Germans, irritable Italians, true Tyrolese, and chivalrous Croats, were alike formed into heavy infantry, and placed under officers destitute of sympathy in their national ideas and hereditary traditions. The Delhis of Yousouf Pasha and Hassan the Wild rode over them in the open field, and the scimitars of the Janissaries grew rusty with gore when called to confront their courageous but philosophically-led adversaries in the open breach. In Flanders the same result followed; Saxe Coburg's disciplined veterans, irresistible in their own mode of fighting, found that the French conscripts fought them in a different way. At Wagram the last Austrian regular army perished. The war of 1814 was one of nations and of races. The nationality of every regiment has been ever since restored, and in every respect, save the inferior weight of cavalry horses, the Austrian Army now stands confessedly the first in Europe. For quick movements and rapid onslaughts the Croats, Tyrolese, and Transylvanians are trained expressly, whilst the gallant Germans are no longer exposed to confusion from having mixed in their ranks such mercurial allies. May not something of the same sort be said with reference to our own soldiers? Do not those corps, recruited like the Guards, solely with Sassenaig, stand pre-eminent for steadiness; and were not our best skirmishers, on the other hand, almost invariably Celts?

Buenos Ayres affords a melancholy instance of inattention to nationality, which may illustrate some former observations. The natural affinity between the Irish and the Spaniards enabled the latter to seduce well-nigh all the Catholics from their allegiance, whilst the Presbyterian Scots stood firm and true. In Egypt, on the other hand, the Irish, from hatred of Mahometanism, remained faithful, whilst not a few of the Scots embraced the Predestinarian creed of the Arabian prophet. In Ireland, during the Democratic and Catholic revolt of 1798, there was no instance of a Welchman or Highlander failing in his devoir, whilst every other regiment, English or Irish, suffered awfully by desertion. Suspicions were, on the other hand, felt about 1780, that, in the event of a Scottish outbreak, the Scotch Serjeants scattered through even the English regiments would seek to paralyse their force. Had Welch and Highland regiments alone been sent to Buenos Ayres —and there were Welch and Highlanders serving at home sufficient twice over to compose Whitelocke's force—a Cymraeg settlement would have been established on which every Spanish effort of fraud or force must be thrown away. Ten thousand Irish, on the other hand, would have annexed Egypt to the British Crown, and added at least one hundred and twenty millions to the national wealth.

In the remarks, Sir, with which you favoured my former papers, you observe that the plaid is forgotten in Wales; pardon me for stating, that thanks to Sir Charles Morgan, Sir Samuel Meyrick, and Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, our ancient customs are beginning to revive, and at our Cymrogeiddions the dress of both sexes is in part at least of the country plaid; for the gentry now begin to perceive that it is only by reviving the fine feelings of ancient feudalism that they can foil radical efforts for winning over the people to republican principles. Amongst the half-Anglicised Welch those principles have already taken deep and deadly root. In what respect a Welch can be deemed more objectionable than a Scottish plaid for trews I know not; nor do I see any reason why the proudest need scorn a vesture which the descendants of Ivor Hael and Rhys ap Thomas condescend to wear; it is quite as warm, and to the full as lasting, as the dark-grey trousers now worn by the (nominally) Welch corps, 23d, 41st, and 43d. Without a distinctive mark by which the enemy may know their presence, half the advantage of the national corps is thrown away. Who has not heard of Seidlitz and his Death's Heads? Scotland owes her continental fame solely to the Highland plaid; yet her Lowland sons of the Royals (late 94th) Scots Brigade were but less firm, although, for want of a distinctive garb, they were confounded with the mass of marching regiments, and caused less terror to a foeman's eye. Why, were another Waterloo to occur, the sight of five hundred cockneys in kilts would daunt the survivors of D'Erlon's corps to a greater degree than the presence of five thousand good soldiers clad in the uniform of those mixed corps, which, "dixisse pudet," ran away.

From your opinion with regard to black eyes, I must likewise crave leave so far to differ, as to express hope for a speedy visit on your part to the country of the Silures. In Glamorgan, Monmouth, and Cardigan—a few red-headed Celts excepted—you will find it difficult to discover a light-eyed man of pure Welch blood; and about Merthyr especially, the people are, nine cases out of ten, as swarthy as their Basque ancestors: and this peculiarity continues unabated in such as settle in England. Lord Caernarvon was on this account seized for a spy in Spain, his countenance proving indisputably his Basque origin. The North Welch are undoubtedly more mixed, for the aboriginal population of their country was Celtic, and in Pembroke many Normans and Flemings settled under Henry the Second, although, till recently, the native Cymraeg refused to intermarry with the blue-eyed Haverfordwest colony as beings of inferior blood. Caermarthen is also dark, but less so than Glamorgan, a Roman colony, composed probably of Piedmontese mountaineers, having intermarried with the native women. King Arthur, like Constantine the Great, was a cross betwixt a Roman senator and a Cymraeg chieftainess. In Brecknock and Radnor also the proportion of dark-eyed natives is very large, although strangers are apt to confound with the native Welch the descendants of Saxon miners, who have colonised the country within the last hundred years; nay, in England, Sir, I believe, that in a vast majority of instances, you may trace black eyes to a South Welch marriage. I am not aware of any strictly dark race beside in the kingdom, except only the Milesian chiefs of Ireland and the French colonies in the silk-weaving towns. ARTHUR.

[We certainly were not aware that the wearing of the plaid had been already revived in Wales, and our objections to it were merely grounded on its long disuse, which we should have imagined had caused it to have been forgotten by all but antiquaries. With respect to the colour of eyes, &c., in the Principality, we must say that our observation, as far as it has gone, would lead us to very different conclusions to Arthur's, as to the sum total of light or dark, which is all we pretended to speak of. The actual descent of individuals is not always easy to be ascertained by a resident in a particular spot, and of course impossible to a stranger. As to the Basques, they are undoubtedly much fairer than the other Spaniards, and many travellers intimately acquainted with them (amongst them, Capt. Henningsen), describe light-coloured eyes as decidedly prevalent amongst them; they certainly are not uncommon. Zumalacarregui himself, for instance, possessed them.—ED.]

TRISTRAM'S SECOND PART OF HIS CHAPTER OF NOTHING.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR—I am necessitated to trouble youwith the second part of my Chapter of Nothing, in consequence of hearing an occasional whisper in the club, that "Tristram is playing into the hands of Barrow, as the several paragraphs in their chapters are nearly verbatim." I can, however, satisfy those whisperers upon that point, by declaring that I never saw Sir John's supplementary chapter to his life of Lord Anson, until I saw the Plymouth Gazette of the 26th ult. where it is inserted. The paragraphs alluded to are those in which Tristram and Barrow propose the keeping of a fleet of the forty thieves (small class seventy-fours) for the North Sea and Baltic service, and the constructing of more first-class frigates, from 50 to 60 guns; also both chapter-writers animadverting or badinaging upon Commander Craufurd's pamphlet, and describing the destruction of the French fleet at the Nile, composed of one 120, three 80's, and nine 74's, flanked with four frigates and batteries, by a British fleet of twelve small 74's, one 60, and a brig. These several coincidences of opinion and comparison arose solely from each author taking up the same subject at the same critical moment; each presuming to be studied in British Naval history; each knowing the capabilities of the present British fleet, and the resources of his country for maritime dominion. It is evident by the proofs in both chapters, that England is not prepared with a sufficient number of first-class frigates in the event of a war, except the Admiralty makes the small class 74's available as cruisers against the French and American double-banked 60's, of 650 men each; but then more 80's, 84's, and 90's would be required for the line, to combat the French and American treble-banked liners. Under all these circumstances, it cannot be advisable, as I before observed, to give any one of the forty thieves an extensive repair; but when seriously damaged or defective, as the Malabar or Warspite, it would be advisable to instantly

"Cut the thief down by the knee,
Like a rogue for forgerie."

Thus transmogrified into a 50, and masted accordingly, she will play her part with her long 32's and 500 men in turnation fine style, opposed to any one "Almightyer," in the shape of a frigate, from Yankee waters.

The present Naval Administration has immortalised itself in the Army by fitting out ships-of-war exclusively as troopers, and commanded by Masters only, for reasons I have so repeatedly and successfully submitted. Undoubtedly, in case of emergency, an executive ship must be employed for the immediate transport of troops for urgent service; but as soon as emergency ceases, an executive liner, or executive frigate should not be so employed, as a considerable time must elapse before discipline and order can be restored after the contaminating effect of a free and easy military corps. A battalion pipe-claying regimental small-clothes on the lower deck; the ship's company scrubbing trousers on the main deck; the inexpressibles spread out on the booms, boats, and hammocks; the ducks shaking in the rigging; a barrack below; a ship aloft; a privateer from stem to stern; or, as Jack emphatically calls her, "a Sodger's Hooker." It was admirable, indeed, for Sir John "to set a springe to catch a wood-cock" in this question, "Which ship was more serviceably employed for the country—the Hercules, without her lower deckers, conveying troops to Canada, or the Russel in Lisbon, at anchor, with her lower deckers?" I answer, the Russel, because she was there moored for a state necessity, the protection of British interest, life, and property: she there rode a proud guardian of British rights, armed with all the majesty of a ship-of-war; she was an honour to the nation. The Hercules, on the contrary, was deprived of a half of her armament: she was divested of her appearance and appendages of a ship-of-war, and converted into a ship of burthen, at a great expense of wear and tear of herself and equipment, barrack-fittings, and of personal ease and comfort of both the crew and regiment. How many thousands will repair the Malabar after her short service as a trooper? Will not the Minotaur, 74, when jury-rigged and fitted as a trooper, commanded by a Master, with six Second Masters, and 120 or 130 men, be navigated for a fourth of the expense of the Hercules, Malabar, or Cornwallis? Would the Unicorn or Resistance, so fitted and commanded with 80 or 90 men each, be as expensive as the Pique and Inconstant, thrashing out their hulls and equipments to and from Halifax in the winter season. A frigate-trooper, en flute, and jury-rigged, would have scudded as dry as a dogger, when the Inconstant was pooped with a mizen-topper, and lifted her stern so high as to see a-head over the fore-topsail yard—just such another whopper!—Vide Hampshire Telegraph.

These two Chapters of Nothing, and Sir John Barrow's one chapter of something, must convince how injurious to the Naval officer it is to write a PAMPHLET, an edge-tool which can only be man-handled by a pupil of YON SCHOOL, that with it worked so skilfully its own ruin.

I write a stave—a column—an epistle—an arguficator—a clincher—a twister—a chapter—a ponderer—an overhauler; in fact, my page takes any shape but that of a PAMPHLET!

MANNING THE NAVY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—It must be gratifying to every lover of his country to see that preparations are at length being made to place our sea coast in a state of defence,—the apathy engendered by the rage for economy has too long hovered over the land. But England has at length aroused from the trance.

The dribbling system will no longer do. Who among seamen cares for the promise of bounty in futurity, provided a bounty be given at all? If men are to be procured, the registry must be re-established upon a principle full and complete, of every seafaring man in the kingdom, and a bounty proffered at once, with the assurance of faith being kept in regard to limitation of service, and the ships commissioned at once; for your prime seamen choose to know, not only the craft in which they are to sail, but the officers, the Captain and First Lieut. particularly, under whom they are to serve. Ask any Captain or old First Lieut. whether it is any uncommon thing for a seamen to visit the ship he makes choice of two or three times before he will finally determine to enter? We may, it is true, get ordinaries and mechanics in plenty—men of no use to the mercantile marine; for many such are wanting bread from lack of employ; but seamen are in no such strait, as they seldom want ships in this great commercial nation; and though bounties are not beneficial to them, in actual fact, yet as the publicans benefit, so they find it their interest to second the efforts of officers employed in raising men at the out-ports, and are, positively, the principle source through whom officers on this service obtain their best men.—I speak this from personal knowledge. He knows the best men; and when their money is short, does not hesitate to give credit to the amount of the bounty, and has no difficulty in inducing them to prefer a man-of-war to a merchantman and, if in a Naval port, adds to his interest by securing their future custom when on leave from their ship. But, Sir, this curse of economy, if persevered in, will prove the destruction of England. If you want men, you must purchase their services*, not only by prompt payment in part, but by securing to them future provision in old age. Restore the pension after 14 years' service to seamen, and that of the warrant officers' widows, or you destroy the incentive to continued good conduct, as well as inducement for seamen to aspire to this rank. Lastly, let the nation no longer be niggard in awarding medals for victories. I have nothing to do with the mercantile marine, but let the shipowners and parties concerned establish an asylum in the principal ports for the reception of apprentices on their return into harbour, and they will not want good seamen themselves. Hitherto, they have neglected their own interests; hereafter, if this is not remedied, we shall have the best men. The Navy of 1839 is not that of the commencement of last war, and the mercantile marine can hold out no such advantageous inducements as the national Navy.

AN OLD SAILOR

*The pay of Petty Officers should be considerably increased.

 Letters in type, "Chevron;" "Brittox;" "A Half-Batta and Half-Tontage Sub.;" "Philotheorus;" and "Fact."

Now Ready, in demy 8vo, price 7s. 6d.,

THE NEW ARMY LIST, exhibiting the Rank, Standing, and various Services of every Officer in the Army on full-pay, including the Ordnance and Royal Marines, distinguishing those who have served in the Peninsula, who have received Medals or other distinctions, and who have been wounded, and in what actions; with the period of Service, both on full and half-pay. Giving also the date of every Officer's Commissions, and distinguishing those procured by purchase.

The letter of " Miles" on "Military Strategy," appeared in our Paper of 29th Dec. last. The subject is worthy the attention of our very able and valued correspondent " Arthur."

We admit the excellence of Mr. Surtees' Naval tables, but they would occupy much space, and only interest a very limited number of officers. We are obliged to cater to the tastes of our numerous readers, Army, Navy, and East India.

We assure " Mentor" we have never denied the power of impressment to be in the Crown, neither are we aware that any of our correspondents have done so: but we deprecate the policy and the injustice of pressing men on ordinary occasions, and for ordinary purposes, as was done last war, and will be done again if that practice is revived. There is great difference between pressing men to defend the realm from danger, and for the purpose of sending them to Cronstadt to burn the Russian fleet. In the former case, as in cases where it is necessary to call out the power of the country by posse comitatus, no man can question the authority of the executive. It is the abuse of this authority, not the exercise of it, that we have so frequently protested against, and shall continue to do so until other means are substituted.

" X. Z." shall appear, and we hope most earnestly to hear further, for the record of such traits of service cannot but promote the interests of the British Army.

We cannot allay the anxiety of our Military readers by notifying what amount of augmentation will be proposed by Lord Howick in the forthcoming estimates, but we believe we are justified in stating that it will be limited to rank and file. Some further arrangements for the relief of corps will probably be stated, in pursuance of the measures of 1836.

Major-General Sir Charles Napier's letter on National Corps reached us when at press: it shall appear in our next.—From a press of matter, the Distribution of the Navy is unavoidably postponed: but the changes are few since our last publication of the List.

Mr. John Brown should apply to the Admiralty, Somerset House, for the names of the ships in which a late Master, R.N., served.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1839.

We understand that the Master-General of the Ordnance is about to submit to Parliament the necessity of an increase to the strength of the corps of Artillery. Whether he will propose an addition to the number of companies, or an augmentation in gunners and drivers to the existing companies, we have not been able to learn; but, taking into consideration the state of the reliefs, which, in some instances, are five years in arrear, we should hope that his plan would embrace an increase in the number of companies as well as a general augmentation to their establishment.—Without additional companies we cannot see how the reliefs are to be carried on—certainly not with regularity. In the extensive and highly important section of the empire, Australasia, we have not a single Artilleryman; companies are required there—were demanded—but could not be spared. In Canada, Nova Scotia, and Malta, an augmentation is required; at the Cape of Good Hope there is but one company for the duties of that extensive colony; Mauritius, one; the Windward and Leeward Island command has only four companies; in fact, there is not a colony which does not imperatively require to be reinforced, and that, extensively, if we expect to be able to retain it on a sudden outbreak of war. We have always been of opinion, that the very extensive reduction of the corps, which took place in 1816, was most impolitic; that it would have been better to have retained ten battalions of ten companies each—each company to have consisted of 120 non-commissioned officers and gunners, and to have employed such a proportion of them in foreign garrisons as would have allowed of the disposal of three or four regiments of the line for other duties.

It should be borne in mind, that it takes a considerable time to make a good Artilleryman. By having a strong force in such garrisons as Gibraltar and Malta, in the event of a sudden emergency, which is very likely to occur on a declaration of war, such a force could be immediately withdrawn, as the exigency of the service might require, and be competent to the duties of their profession. At this time it is with the greatest difficulty men can be found to replace the casualties of the service, and certainly not so competent as if they had been some time in training in such garrisons. In the present reduced state of the corps, we are of opinion, that, should a war occur, it would be next to an impossibility to furnish the reinforcements which would be required at the several foreign commands; indeed, we have complete proof of this in the difficulties which we know have been experienced in finding men for Canada, and therefore most sincerely hope that the Master-General will so lay the matter before Parliament that such an augmentation will be granted as will make the corps efficient for the probable exigencies of the country.

Embarkations have been at last ordered from some depots in this country for the regiments in India. We have been informed that very great dissatisfaction is felt, and with good reason, both by the officers and men, at withholding from them this order; for by this means they are kept in a state of uncertainty, and thereby prevented making such arrangements as a long voyage and their remote service in India render necessary. The humblest soldier in the ranks has his affectionate, though humble relatives and friends, with whom he wishes to communicate, and in many cases, we believe, the kind remembrances, and even pecuniary assistance of the soldier's family, have arrived after the poor fellow has embarked. The "silent system" is considered, we believe, by some idiots to indicate "staff discretion." What example has been better followed than that of the sage and discreet A.D.C., who declined telling a regimental officer what o'clock it was, saying, "He really could not tell; for the General had just mentioned the hour in the office, and he wished his Staff not to repeat anything they heard." We can assure those of our readers who are concerned, that they will find a more considerate and more communicative spirit at the Adjutant-General's Office, where only confidential matters are kept secret, and not those by communicating which officers may be convenienced without injury to the service. The "pomp and circumstance" of office do not exist at the Horse Guards; and, from Lord Hill to the porter at the door, every individual is certain of obtaining a more ready reply to his inquiries than from those under whom he may serve in any station at home or abroad.

We understand that on Wednesday last there was a proof ostensibly of Merchant's guns at Woolwich; but, if we are not misinformed, these guns are intended for the Russian Government to arm their war steamers. We are also assured that others for the same parties have been previously proved. They consist of 68-pounder guns, of 8 feet 6 inches long, and 60 cwt.; and carronades of 8 feet long, and 42 cwt., something about six inches longer than our carronades of a like nature, and about six hundred-weight heavier, which renders them a superior piece of ordnance. The carriages are so constructed, we hear, as to give them an elevation of 36 degrees, from which they will possess a very extensive range, and be most suitable for the bombardment of coast towns.

Parbury's Oriental Herald for the present month contains a well-written and convincing article on the question,—"What has England done for India?" &c.

We very readily admit, that the only ground on which the assumption of sovereignty by Britain over India can be justified, is by showing that it is employed for the benefit of the people of that country. We fear that still better information than we possess would prove that England has done little for India. In forcing peace throughout the country, we have evidently only done so to save ourselves expense and to augment our revenue; but we have not prevented incursions, invasions, and insurrections, by making our rule loved by the people of India. We do not employ the natives in Military or Civil Offices of trust or emolument. We have levied, in the last sixty years, from India, 1000 millions of pounds sterling!—What have we given in return? Have we made roads, canals, tanks, and towns? Have we introduced our arts, science, and a better government? We have been grinding India from the first, and we grind her still. We make no return for the wealth we draw from her soil. Well indeed may the natives exclaim, "Why should we wish for the continuance of British rule? French or Russians may use us better—they cannot use us worse." We boldly assert, that unless conquerors make the conquered better than they found them, the conquest is unjust and unjustifiable.

The letter of A Married Sub., which we annex, states one of the many hardships to which Officers of his class are liable in the Army. He states, with great truth, the impossibility of an Ensign's meeting the charges on appointment, joining his regiment, and embarking for foreign service, out of 5*s.* 3*d.* per diem. By those, who have been appointed from the ranks, the necessity of commencing their career as Officers with a heavy debt is totally unavoidable,—and to this state of debt at starting, and inability by every exertion of economy to clear themselves for many years, may be fairly attributed the numerous instances of these formerly estimable and honest men becoming, in the sphere to which their merits had raised them, disreputable and even dishonourable in their transactions. Poverty in the Army, when it amounts to the want of subsistence, is fatal to character; and until Ensigns at least are better paid, and not liable to their present expenses, promotion from the ranks is another expression for the "road to ruin." We quite agree with our correspondent, that fees on commissions should be abolished—that the expenses of a band, ordered to be kept up, should be defrayed by the public, and not out of the Officer's march. Col. Raper declared that the present high state of discipline, as acknowledged by every General Officer who had inspected the regt., he mainly attributed to the cheerful and willing support which he had invariably received from the officers, non.-com. officers, and privates. He confidently hoped that they would continue to afford the same to his worthy successor, who was deservedly a favourite with them all, and finally, that he would to the end of his days continue to watch with increasing interest the progress of a regiment in which he had served so long, and so happily. He then drank success to the old 19th. The health of Capt. Burns, now the oldest hand of any rank in the regt., was proposed and drank in a manner highly flattering and complimentary. Capt. B. returned thanks—alluded to his long services in the regt. with his old friend Col. Raper (they had served as Ensigns together), and to the many happy years they had spent together—he sincerely wished Col. Raper every happiness in his retirement, in which he was sure he was joined in by every individual in the corps. The gallant Captain sat down amidst much cheering, the band playing the British Grenadiers. The next bumper was to the health of Mrs. Raper, proposed by Major Hodgson, who eloquently described the merits of that esteemed lady, and the regret of the corps at her departure. This toast was loudly cheered, and the band struck up "Bonny Lassies." The party did not separate until a late hour.

27th—Lt. Jones, late of this regt., is appointed Capt. and Adjt. 2d provisional batt. of U. Canada Militia.

31st—Capt. Goodwin is about to retire from the service by the sale of his commission. This officer has been 25 years in the service, and is Junior Captain of the regt., which contains in it the oldest officers in the line, as will appear by a reference to Lieut. Hart's New Army List.

32d—Assist.-Surg. M'Gregor, late of this regt., is appointed to the 11th batt. U. Canada Militia.

40th—Maj. Jebb, we learn, is about to rejoin the headquarters of the regt., now at Deesa, on the N.W. frontier of India.

42d—Lord Cecil Gordon, late of 17th Regt., from which he exchanged, is returning from Bombay in charge of invalids. As this confers a free passage home, it has been considerately conferred on a lord, instead of some one of the many poor commoners of H.M.'s Army in India. As an officer of the 42d, we wonder what claim can be made out for conferring the command of invalids from the corps at Bombay on his Lordship.

55th—By the last accounts the invalids of this corps had started for Madras under the command of Lt. Hume Edwards, who would probably proceed home in charge of the party.

60th, 1st Batt., Depot—Capt. Pasley is about to leave Dublin. Major Cockburn commands.

64th Depot—Lieut. Battley is appointed Superintending Officer, Recruiting Service, Lewes.

65th—It is expected that Lieut. Drought, at present on the recruiting service in Dublin, will have to accompany the next draft to Canada, there being no available Lieutenant at the depot for this duty. Lieut. Smith is about to resign the Acting Paymastership. Lieut. Whitaker succeeds him.

67th Depot—A large detachment has been sent to the West Indies by the City of Rochester freight-ship.

69th—Bt.-Major Hooper and Lt. Moore came home in Her Majesty's packet Linnet. We regret to add that Lieut. Campbell, who was also a passenger, cut his throat with a razor in the water-closet, on the 30th January.

70th Depot—From Limerick to Clare Castle, by steam-ves. 31st Jan. Sailed on board the Etheldred tis. from Cork, to join the service cos. Major White, Capt. Durnford, Ens. Hawker, two Serjts., and 110 r. and f.

71st—The regt. is greatly harassed by keeping out reconnoissance parties constantly near the frontier line in Canada; and the Royals, from Montreal, were under orders to relieve them.

71st Depot—Major Lord A. Lennox, who has commanded the garrison at Buttevant since his return from Canada, has gone on leave to attend his Parliamentary duties.

72d Depot—Three Officers, three Serjeants, and 100 r. and f., have arrived at Cork to embark for the Cape, with the 27th and 75th.

73d Depot—From Clare Castle to Limerick, by steam-ves., 1st Feb.

76th Depot—Major J. H. Grubbe, on return from leave, will take the command, Major Clarke being ordered to embark in March, to join the service companies.

77th—Major Mason has arrived in the Boadicea from the Mediterranean, in charge of troops.

78th Depot—Capt. Tomkins, late 94th, has joined from leave.

79th—We have not time this week to notice the trial of four soldiers of this corps.

81st—Captain Baron de Rottenburg, late of this reg., has been appointed by Lieut.-Gen. Sir J. Colborne, Military Commandant at Belle Isle and the Bay of Trinity, U. Canada, with the local rank of Lieut.-Col. under Lt.-Col. the Hon. H. Dundas.

83d—In consequence of large drafts of the 67th and 89th depots having been embarked in the City of Rochester, freight-ship, to join the service-companies, three officers and fifty men of the 84th have been moved from Portsmouth to Gosport, to assist in the duties there.

85th—Assist.-Surg. Humfrey is appointed Surgeon to 3d batt. U. Canada Militia.

89th—Lieut. Horne came home in H.M.'s packet Linnet.

89th Depot—The City of Rochester has taken 5 off. and about 180 r. and f. of the 89th and 67th regs. to Barbadoes. Staff-Surg. Melvin, appointed to the Hospital at that island, has accompanied the above drafts.

92d Depot—Capt. Duff has joined. One comp., 2 officers, and 34 r. and f., from Birr to Banagher, 6th Feb.

93d Depot—The command at Buttevant has devolved on Major Burgh.

97th—The company from Banagher to Dublin, 6th Feb. to 12th. Two comps. from Birr to Dublin, 1st to 7th. Two comps., or all remaining, from do. to do., 2d to 8th. Ens. Given completed his pedestrian feat at Birr, of walking 72 miles in 24 hours, having five hours and 35 minutes to spare, performing the entire journey in 17 hours and ten minutes.

Rifle Brigade, 1st batt. moved on Saturday from the Tower to Windsor.

1st W. India Reg.—Major Mills (referred to in our paper of 12th ult.) came home in H.M.'s packet Linnet.

Royal Artillery—Second Lieut. Adair has embarked for Bermuda to join Major J. Wood's company, 8th battalion. Capt. Freer's company, 6th battalion, has been relieved in the duties of the field batteries by Maj. Moor's company, 3d battalion. Lieut.-Gen. Sir H. Bouverie has applied for an additional company for Malta.

G. O., 25th Jan.—The Master-General has been pleased to approve of Assist.-Surgeon Parratt being attached to the Horse Artillery, in Ireland, in the room of Assist.-Surgeon Williams, from the 17th inst. A. Dickson, D. A. General.

Garrison Order.—1st Feb.—The Commandant regrets extremely that the unfavourable state of the weather deprived him of the satisfaction of inspecting D Field Battery this morning, but the Commandant begs to assure Capt. Freer, the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men, of his high gratification at the report made by Lieut.-Col. Cleaveland of their zeal, diligence, and exertions during the ten months they have been under his instruction. Maj. Moor's company, 3rd battalion, will relieve Capt Freer's company, 6th batt. from Field Battery Service, as soon as the ordnance and equipments are handed over. Capt. Freer's comp. will rejoin the 6th battalion.

War Office, 25th Jan. 1839.

Militia.—Circular.—I have the honour to inform you, that from the 1st of April next, a compensation in lieu of clothing in kind, will be allowed at the rate of 2s. 6d. per month to the Serjeants, including the Serjt.-Major, who will on that day be entitled to biennial clothing for the period ending 31st March, 1831. The above allowance is to be issued at the expiration of each month, and charged in the pay list of the acting Paymaster. I have, &c. Howick.

To —— Colonel of the — Regiment of Militia.

The Wellington Statue.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer recently presented to the City Committee some bronze metal, estimated at 1,570*l.*, to be used in the construction of the City statue. The original subscription of 9,000*l.*, added to this tribute, amounts to the sum of 10,520*l.* which, in the hands of the first sculptor of the age, must secure a work of art worthy of the City of London, the Duke, and the artist's expectation.

The Etheldred freight-ship, having on board drafts, as under, sailed from Cove on the 30th ult. for the West Indies:—14th F., 2 Subs., 1 Serj., and 73 r. and f.; 70th, 1 Field Officer, 1 Capt., 2 Subs., 2 Serjs., and 110 r. and f. Staff—Assist.-Surgeon Robinson.

The Waverley convict-ship arrived at Kingstown Harbour, Dublin, on 30th ult., having on board a guard, as follows:—Lieut. Stirling, 2d F.; Lieut. Jones, 16th F.; 1 Serj. and 28 r. and f., 51st F.

The Hopewell freight-ship arrived at Cove on 28th ult., and, having provisions to take in, it was expected she would not be ready before the 2d Feb. to receive on board the drafts of the 56th, 64th, and 68th regs. for Jamaica.

Sir Robert Dick arrived at Bombay by the October steamer, on route for Madras, but it was supposed his stay there would be short, as he was desirous of assuming his divisional command.

Col. Warr, Commandant of the Chatham Garrison, gave a most delightful soirée on Wednesday evening last. Dancing was kept up with great spirit until three o'clock on Thursday morning.

We noticed in our last week's number that 1,000 men would be ordered for immediate embarkation for India, and the following vessels have been taken up to convey them: the Thames is to receive 350 for Bengal; the Kyd 200 for Madras, principally of the 21st Regt., with the augmentation establishment of officers, to meet the regt. on its arrival from New South Wales; and the Glenelg, to take 250 men for Bombay, in addition to those which have sailed during this week.

The Duke of Wellington's manly and most true assertion, that the Precursor Society was nothing but a scheme to put money in the pocket of its founder, will, no doubt, sink his Grace in the estimation of the foul-mouthed agitator, from the "stunted Corporal" down to the lowest of all common soldiers.

Masters—Lucius Bailey to Acorn. J. Davis (Second Master) and John Hughes (Master's Assistant) to Seaflower. T. Whillier (Master's Assistant, of Victory) to be Second Master of President. — Bowler (Second Master) to Rose.

Mate—E. M. Hugge to Seaflower.

Midshipman—R. Coote to Daphne.

Surgeon—Falzeevis (1836) to Hydra.

Assistant Surgeon—G. W. Pritchett (1838) to Atholl, vice Baird. Dr. James Mitchell to Hercules. James H. Steele to Plymouth Hospital.

Pursers—Thos. Woodward to Wasp. Thomas Rodham Tate (acting) to Polorus, v. Thornton, invalided. R. T. Crispin (Clerk in charge of Leveret) to Scout, v. Mason, invalided.

Clerks—C. Dealy (Clerk in charge) to Seaflower. J. Barrett (additional) to Donegal. C. E. Colman, Secretary's Clerk in board the President, bearing the flag of R.-Adm. Ross. Thos. W. W. Spear to Acorn.

Second Engineer—Geo. Walters to Spitfire.

Lord Minto held his first levee for the season this day; it was attended by upwards of forty officers of the Royal Navy, and Royal Marines.

Portsmouth, Feb. 8th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Daphne, Electra, and Boadicea transport sailed on Saturday morning, Daphne to Lisbon, Electra to Rio Janeiro, and the transport to the eastward. Ganges would have gone on Sunday afternoon, but a serious accident occurred while getting the anchor; a bolt, improperly used on the occasion, gave way, and the block and anchor got loose. Fifteen men were more or less hurt; four of them are in Haslar Hospital, but providentially no lives were lost. The patients in the hospital are doing well. Ganges sailed on Monday morning for Lisbon.—King's orders were changed on Saturday: instead of being jury-rigged, and sent to Liverpool in charge of the officers and men of the Victory, a Lieut. (Willson) is appointed to her, and she is to be a cruising receiving-ship for new raised men. She is in the basin, to be stripped of rigging and masts, and fitted in the regular manner. The City of Rochester freight-ship embarked detachments of the 67th and 89th from Gosport on Tuesday, and next day went to Spithead: the wind has been foul ever since, so that she cannot get down Channel. The Salamander has been detained, in consequence of a defect in the plates of her boiler. The dock-yard people will finish her this day, and therefore she will proceed to the North Coast of Spain to-morrow. The lost sheep, Pantaloon, came back on Tuesday, and is in the harbour to refit. She left Santander on the 29th Jan., and had a gale of three days coming home. Gorgon and Rose were at Santander; North Star and Rolla at Passages. Alonzo transport sailed for England on the same day that the Pantaloon did. Sapphire and Rattlesnake are ordered to be reported on, as to their efficiency as troop ships; it is believed that they will make very handy vessels of that description. Sapphire is 600 tons, the other 500. Seaflower and Cracker are the only ships in the port, except the Pantaloon and Ætna, and the customary flag and gunnery ships. Waterwitch will be taken out of dock on Tuesday, and Clio in dock to-morrow to be repaired. Ships in Port—Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Salamander, Pantaloon, Seaflower, Ætna, Cracker, Emerald, Messenger.

Plymouth, Feb. 7th.—(From our own Correspondent). Feb. 1st—Implacable, 74, was commissioned this day by Captain E. Harvey; she will be taken into dock the next spring-tides to have her copper scrubbed, and is ordered to be got ready for sea with all possible despatch. Meteor steamer, Lieut.-Com. R. D. Pritchard, was taken into dock, had her copper scrubbed, and undocked the next day; she sailed for Falmouth on 5th with a detachment of 29th regt., to relieve those doing duty at Pendennis Castle, and returned to this port the following day with the relief; she is taking in stores for the packets at Liverpool, and will sail in a day or two, and bring from thence the newly-raised seamen for the Navy. Hercules, 74, Captain E. Barnard, went out of harbour into the Sound; the crew were paid wages the next day, and on the 4th the supernumeraries, who are going in her to be put on board the different ships in the West Indies, were paid wages in advance; she got under weigh on the 6th, but the wind shifting to the S. W., she again came to anchor, but will start the moment the wind permits; she will take a regt. either from Barbadoes or Jamaica to Halifax. Arrived Spitfire st.-v., Lt.-Com. J. Shambler, last from Portsmouth, going to W. Indies. Sld. Tortoise tender, with stores for Pembroke Dock-yd. 2d—Arrived Rochester and Lively tenders with stores; the first from Pembroke, and the other from Deptford and Woolwich. 3d—Sailed Diligence, Navy transport with stores for Woolwich. Arrived Braganza peninsular steamer, Lieut. M'Leod, from Gibraltar, Cadiz, Lisbon, and Vigo; she sailed the same evening for Falmouth. 5th—Arrived Alonzo transport (c.) from Coast of Spain. Gorgon st.-v., on her arrival at this port from Coast of Spain, is ordered to accompany the Windsor Castle to Pembroke, where she is to be taken to pieces. Spartiate being found found not suitable for a convict hulk, it is reported that the Armada or Stirling Castle will be fitted for that purpose in her stead. We have seen a letter from an officer belonging to Pique, 36, dated Jamaica, 11th Dec, 1838, which states that Cornwallis, Edinburgh, and all the smaller ships were taking on board provisions and water, as much as they could stow, and were to sail the next day for Vera Cruz, under the command of Commodore Douglas; the Admiral, being unwell, intended to remain at Jamaica. Capt. the Earl of Hardwick has within these few days visited this Dock-yard, and minutely inspected every department thereof. Captain Sir W. Symonds, Surveyor of the Navy, has also been here on an official visit. In Harbour—Royal Adelaide, San Josef, Implacable, Acorn, and Spitfire, and Meteor steamers. In the Sound—Hercules.

Milford Haven, 7th Feb.—(From our own Correspondent.—Commander C. C. Dent has joined this station as Inspecting Officer of Coast Guard, vice Dobson, removed to Weymouth. Arrived during the week the Hamoaze and Tortoise, Naval lighters, with stores from Plymouth. The Goodwill and Duck from Chatham, and the Aid from Portsmouth. Sailed the Hamoaze for Plymouth. The Prospero steamer belonging to this station is undergoing repair at Woolwich; her officers and crew are in the Kite, employed transporting a vessel thence to Glasgow. The Windsor Castle is to come here to be taken to pieces, as old timber is much wanted to form slips and for other purposes. The Dock-yard is to be extended westward to its proposed limits, which will afford space for two building slips, or even a dock and slip. The Skylark cutter arrived here on Thursday the 31st inst., from Plymouth, after suffering much in the gales; she sprang her bowsprit, and will be supplied with another forthwith. She has taken on board men from the Shamrock (saved through the mercy of the God of the winds), lately arrived here, and will sail from Plymouth the first favourable occasion.

Deptford, 6th Feb.—Sailed City of Rochester freight and troop ship for West Indies. The Royal Sovereign is fitting for St. Helena, Cape, Ceylon, &c. Remains, Amity freight ship for Bermuda, Bahamas, &c.

Report gives the command of the Revenge, when ready, at Portsmouth, to Capt. Basil Hall, 1817.

The Diligence revenue cutter, which we notified in our last as being lost, was bound to the coast of Donegal, and came to in Glenarm Bay, Antrim, on the evening of 6th ult., and took on board a man belonging to the Coast Guard, recently promoted, and his wife and family of young children, to land at Donegal. It is supposed she was lost near the Giant's Causeway, as oars, timber, and part of a boat, with the Government mark on them, were in the course of the next week drifted on shore, near Ballycastle. Independent of her crew of forty-one men, she had also some passengers on board.

The Diligence.—(From a Correspondent.)—By the last accounts she sailed from Glenarm, at 3 P. M. of the 6th ult., having a fair wind from the south and eastward, and made all sail with the square-sail set. When she was last seen from the shore, she was off Red Bay, Cushendall, running with the wind on the starboard quarter, a fresh breeze, and was probably off Innishone Head when overtaken by the hurricane, and there is no doubt she foundered. Neither her hull nor any of her spars have drifted on shore, but the keel of a boat, and sundry interior fittings of a cruiser, as well as some of the wearing apparel of Mr. Tetley, have been driven on shore on the coast of Islay, and other parts of the coast. Sir John Reid, her Commander, was on shore at sick quarters, and the cutter was in charge of Mr. Tetley, the Chief Mate, in whom the public service has lost a most valuable, correct, and honourable officer, and a thorough good seaman; and the crew generally were as fine a set of men as any in the service. We are happy to state that the Swift, revenue cruizer, has not suffered in the late gales.

The Adder, off Dunmore, and the Royal George, off Weymouth, have picked up several kegs of spirits.

Lieut. Herbert J. Jones, R.N., and crew, of the Coast Guard Station, at Shanklin, crept up 93 tubs of contraband spirits, in Sandown bay, on 28th inst., and on the following day placed the same on board the Adder rev.-c., for conveyance to Cowes Custom-House.

The Kite steamer, Lieut. Hoseason, has left Woolwich with the Hecla steamer for the Clyde, thence to relieve the Gleaner packet at Holyhead, to come to be repaired at Woolwich.

Convict labour is to be immediately resumed in the Dock-yards.

Mr. C. Laider, Commander of the brig Bellissima, stranded off Looe, has presented a very handsome silver box to Lieut. W. K. Nicolas for his humane and persevering assistance, in causing a boat to be brought on men's shoulders full two miles, by which the crew were saved. The inscription is most gratifying.

Lieut. Kendall, R.N., has got the command of the splendid steam ship India, recently launched at Greenock, and which is expected to ply from the Cape of Good Hope to Ceylon, in from fifty to fifty-five days. Her tonnage 1286 tons, length 183ft., breadth 28½ft., depth of hold 25ft.

The Hebe, 42, is to be taken from the Medway and converted to a receiving hulk for the port of Woolwich.

A basin, 400 feet long, 320 broad, and 29 deep, with cuissons, &c., similar to those at Sheerness and Portsmouth, is commenced in Devonport Dock-yard, in which ships of all rates can be fitted out. The Spartiate, 76, taken at the Nile, is ordered to be fitted to receive five hundred convicts, to be employed in forwarding this long-required and most important undertaking.

H.M.S. Malabar, 74, Capt. E. Harvey, which we noticed last week as paid out of Commission, her timbers having, upon examination, been found defective, was launched at Bombay 20 years since, and has never undergone any repairs from that time to the present; she has therefore proved a good ship, and has done her duty well. The Malabar is to have her defects made good, and will be again ready for commissioning in about three or four months.

No inconvenience will henceforth be experienced respecting the completion of the crews of ships fitting. It is expected that if, from any cause, they are not ready in this respect, they will, as was the case formerly, be filled up by draughts from the guard-ships.

Wednesday 6th, being the anniversary of the battle of St. Domingo, was celebrated as one of the four festival gala days at Greenwich Hospital, according to ancient custom, and in the usual interesting manner on such occasions.

Nelson Monument.—A meeting of the committee was held on Saturday, at the Thatched House Tavern, the Duke of Wellington in the chair. The committee will afford the public a full and fair opportunity of judging of the merits of the several designs which have been sent in to them, before a final choice is made.

The inhabitants of Castletown, Bearhaven, county Cork, have recently presented an address and piece of plate to Lieut. Alleyn Evanson, R.N., 1815, on his removal from that place, where he was Inspecting Commander of the Coast Guard TEN years. Lieut. Evanson's services must have been of no ordinary nature—sixteen years an Inspecting Commander, ten at one district, is a pretty fair reward; there are eight others, Lieuts., similarly favoured in Ireland, whilst THREE years are glad to be got by Naval Commanders in England.

Lieut.-General Robert Hill Farmar, whose death on the 23d ult. we this day record, was appointed Second Lieut. R. Marines 10th Jan., 1776; and First Lieut. 4th Nov., 1777, in which year he served on board a guard-ship at Plymouth. In 1778, he served on the coast of Africa; in 1780, in the West Indies; 24th July, 1782, was promoted to Capt.-Lieut. In 1789, and three following years, he served in N. America. The 17th April, 1793, he obtained a company; in 1794, was in America and the W. Indies, 1st March of the latter year had the rank of Major; 1st Jan., 1798, of Lt.-Col. in the Army, and served in the channel fleet in that year, and 1801. The 21st Dec., 1803, he received the rank of Lt.-Col. in the R. Marines, and served at Malta and in the Mediterranean during that year; Col. in the Army 25th April, 1808; Second Commandant Royal Marines, 15th Feb., 1809; promoted to Major-Gen., 4th June, 1811; and to Lieut.-Gen., 19th July, 1821.

Seamen's Hospital.—On Wednesday the annual meeting of the Governor and patrons of this institution was held at the offices, King William-street, City. The Report of the Committee of Management stated that the Society had, since its first establishment, administered medical and surgical aid to 46,485 seamen of all nations. The number of patients admitted on board the Dreadnought in the past year, was 2,579, being an increase of 76; and medical and surgical aid had been provided for 1502 out-patients. As the preservation of the health and life of seamen is the grand object of this Society, the Committee suggest that a wide field is open for improvement, as appear by the following table:—Average Ages of Five Thousand Seamen Employed in the Merchant Service.—Under fifteen years, 59; fifteen and under twenty, 474; twenty and under thirty, 2,376; thirty and under forty, 1,130; forty and under fifty, 672; fifty and under sixty, 234; sixty and under seventy, 49; seventy and upwards, 6. This shows that the average career of seamen is shorter than that of any other description of labourer. The balance-sheet showed that the expenses last year were about 6,000*l.*; that the receipts were 8,041*l.*; that 1,956*l.* Stock had been purchased, making the balance due by the Society 564*l.* 13*s.* 10*d.* The report was adopted.

The Braganza, Lieut. M'Leod, Commander, and Lieut. J. Hall in charge of the mails, arrived on the 2d; great fears had been entertained for her safety; she had such tremendous seas to encounter on the voyage from Lisbon, that her escape and safety are remarkable. She left Gibraltar on 19th, where she was detained for the coming down of the Blazer steamer with the Malta mails, having on board Prince George of Cambridge, passenger for Cadiz, accompanied by Col. Cornwall; left Cadiz on the evening of that day; Lisbon, 22d; Oporto, 23d; Vigo, 24th; on which day the Tagus entered Vigo Bay at 3 A.M., put into Corunna on the 28th, and left on 29th.

H.M.'s packet Linnet, Lt. Griffin, arrived at Falmouth on 1st, with a freight of 50,000*l.* Capt. Hathorn, Capt. Wood, R.N., Lieut. Burn, Royal Naval Hospital at Port Royal; Lieut. Bulling, R.N., with several Army officers, were passengers. She left Barbadoes, Dec. 8th, where were lying the Seringapatam, Crocodile, and Pluto and Echo steamers; left Tobago on 10th, Trinidad on 16th, Grenada on 17th (where she received island mails from Echo steamer), St. Kitts on 20th, Tortola on 21st, St. Thomas on 23d, Porto Rico on 24th, Cape Henry on 30th, where she received mails from Tartarus and Colombia steamers. Commodore Douglas had hoisted his broad red pendant on board Cornwallis, and had gone to Vera Cruz, with most of the ships on the station, including Pique, Capt. E. Boxer; Rover, Capt. T. Symonds; Modeste, Capt. H. Eynes; with Seringapatam and Ringdove, which proceeded from Barbadoes, Dec. 1st, to rendezvous at Jamaica. Edinburgh, 74, arrived on the afternoon of that day from Portsmouth, after a tedious passage of 41 days, and followed the fleet for Jamaica immediately; they sailed for the destined port in company from Port Royal on Dec. 15th. A great mortality existed among the military in the islands, said to have been brought there by the Hercules from Gibraltar, whither she recently conveyed troops; the malign disease appears to be fever.

We regret to learn, by a private letter from Bermuda, that Admiral the Hon. Sir Charles Paget, G.C.H., was so seriously indisposed as to be unable to take command of his squadron; that, in consequence of his afflicted state, being deprived of the use of his limbs, Commodore Douglas hoisted his broad pendant on board the Cornwallis.

The following ships were lying at Malta, Jan. 9th:—Princess Charlotte (flag), Rodney, Asia, Vanguard, Bellerophon, Pembroke, and Minden, of the line; Barham, Caryafoot, Dido, Wolverine, Bencon, Magpie, and Ceylon; Rhadamanthus, Blazer, Hermes, and Firefly, steam-vessels.

The salary of Harbour-Master of Limehouse, which situation is now vacant, is 300*l.* a-year and half-pay.

ROYAL MARINES.—A most splendid ball took place on Friday night, Jan. 25th, at the mess-room of the Rl. Marine Barracks, Chatham, under the superintendence of the Colonel and the officers of this division. Above 200 ladies and gentlemen were present, elegantly attired. Dancing commenced early, and was kept up with much spirit until 7 o'clock on Saturday morning. The arrangements were highly creditable to all parties engaged, and we believe, with the exception of a faint or two among the ladies, everything went off admirably.

The Serjeant of the Rl. Marine boat at Chatham, and two of the men (boat's crew) having obtained leave on Monday morning, went down the river to shoot wild fowl; they have not since been heard of, and as the boat and two hats have been picked up, it is feared they have been drowned. They were all very steady men, particularly the Serjeant, whose absence has created quite a sensation at the Barracks.

We are happy to announce that Capt. George Bell (1809) has been selected for good-service pension.

MEMORANDUM.—Admiralty, 20th Dec. 1838.—Her Majesty having been graciously pleased to sanction, by Order in Council of July 8th, 1838, the establishment of further means of scientific education for a certain number of Officers and Mates of Her Majesty's Naval Service, under such regulations as the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty may frame from time to time, their Lordships have directed that for this object—Thirty additional Mates, who have passed both the examination in seamanship and in navigation, shall be borne on the books of the Excellent. They will receive sea-pay, and be in all respects under Naval discipline; but they will receive the usual allowance instead of being victualled, and be lodged in the Rl. Naval College. Any further expenses will be defrayed by themselves. They will be selected from such as have passed the Ordinary Examination on board the Excellent, and a preference will be given to those who shall have passed the best examination. They will receive Instruction at the Rl. Naval College for the space of one year, and then be discharged. An Examination will take place at the end of every six months. The Mate who passes the best Examination, provided he produces satisfactory certificates of character and professional ability from the Captains with whom he has served, and during the period of his instructions, will receive a Lieutenant's commission; provided always he attains a certain fixed degree of proficiency. A limited number (ten) of commissioned officers of any rank may avail themselves of the instructions thus afforded, for the space of one year. No expense will be incurred on their account; and they will be expected to pass the examination of the Excellent before they are admitted to the Instruction at the Rl. Naval College.

By Command of their Lordships, C. WOOD.

COURT-MARTIAL.

Head Quarters, Bombay, Nov. 2d.

AT an European General Court-Martial, assembled at Dapoolee, Sept. 27, 1838, Lieut. J. Brodhurst, of the Native Veteran Battalion, was tried on the following charge:—

For highly disgraceful conduct, unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in having, in cantonment, near Dapoolee, June 3d, 1838, gone to the shop of Naunah Paraugpay, a Shroff, residing in the said cantonment, and taken away several handsfull of pice, amounting to four rupees thirteen annas, belonging to the said Shroff, without counting the same, and without the consent of the said Naunah Paraugpay, and not returning the above sum, although asked to do so, till he was officially addressed on the subject by the Superintendent of Bazaars.

Upon which charge the Court found the prisoner guilty, and sentenced him to be dismissed the Company's service. Approved and confirmed, JOHN KEANE, Lieut.-Gen., Com.-in-Chief.

Remarks by the Com.-in-Chief.—Before confirming the above sentence, the Com.-in-Chief considered it his duty to direct inquiries to be made from the officer commanding the Native Veteran Battalion (who happened also to belong to the same regiment with the prisoner when both were on the effective line), in respect to Lieut. Brodhurst's previous character and conduct; and His Excellency greatly regrets that the report which he has received is of so unfavourable a nature, that it precludes him, with a just regard to the honour and respectability of every branch of the Army of this Presidency, from attending to the recommendation of the Court in this instance. The name of Lieut. J. Brodhurst is to be struck off the strength of the Native Vet. Batt. from the date on which this order may be received at Dapoolee, which is to be reported to the Adjutant-General of the Army.

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

STATE OF THE NAVY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I purpose at present to deal with the arguments of Tristram in his "Chapter of Nothing," which appeared in your No. of 26th Jan. Is it really "nothing" that Russia has a fleet of twenty-six or twenty-seven sail of the line in the Baltic, all fully equipped and ready for sea, a fact not disputed even by Tristram, while we have not above six or seven at the utmost that could be brought on any sudden emergency to meet them? Will Tristram deny that the mere appearance of a Russian Fleet upon our coasts in a warlike attitude, would spread a panic throughout the country, and depress the funds 10 or 15 per cent? He laughs at the idea of three Russian 110's, six 84's, and seventeen 74's "frightening an English officer out of his propriety!" Does he therefore suppose that twenty-six sail of the line, no matter if manned by "soldier-sailors in hessian boots," or by the greatest "riff-raff" that ever danced round a capstan, are to be at once taken or destroyed by six or seven ships notoriously under-manned, and generally reported to be otherwise defective. He may cry, "Hurra! the more Russian noise the more British work!" but where is the work to come from? It is mere idle vaunting, and will be so regarded by every dispassionate mind. By way of showing what he would expect under such circumstances, he tells us, Nelson at the Nile went into battle with—what? One would suppose, of course, with a force in the proportion of six or seven to twenty-six. No; with twelve to thirteen, the only disparity being in weight of metal and number of men! That Nelson performed the most brilliant deeds recorded in Naval history every Englishman is proud to acknowledge; but if he ever went into battle against such a superiority of force as Tristram values at "nothing," I can only say, I never heard of it.

Sir John Barrow has marshalled a fine array of ships, which, though of the inferior class of seventy-fours, he says are in every respect fit to meet the Baltic Fleet, even though it should threaten our shores in June! They may be fit in every respect but one, which it would have been somewhat candid in Sir John to mention; namely, that they are not in commission; and that they could no more be fitted out and manned in six months (unless actual war broke out) than they could in six days! Does he mean to say that there are twenty line-of-battle ships, or ten, or even six, in such a state that they could put to sea in one week after the arrival of a Russian Fleet at the Nore, or in the Downs?

That the most active and successful exertions would then be made to equip an adequate force, and that in the end we should maintain our naval superiority I do not question; but what costly sacrifices, both in money and in character, should we make in the meantime!

Tristram, however, shows that he has in reality no such confidence as he professes; for he would commission ships by dozens! He would keep "in demonstration for the North Sea and Baltic service two dozen of the forty thieves (small seventy-fours), manned with 590 men each, one dozen razees of 50 guns, and half-a-dozen frigates of 36 guns!!" Thus placing himself most conspicuously on the horns of a dilemma; for he must either agree with the Flag Officer as to the danger of a visit from the Russian Fleet, or he would entail upon the country the expense of fitting out above 40 ships without any necessity!

But thus it is with all who have attempted to answer the Flag Officer. Every one of them admits the main and important fact that the naval force of England, in commission, is numerically inferior to that of a rival nation! They only maintain that the danger of the disparity is magnified; and yet they one and all suggest some remedy or other for the very evils which they affect to laugh at! Thus, Captain Berkeley wishes every ship were sent to sea in as perfect a state of equipment as a man-of-war can be, of course including a full complement of men, which it is well known not a single ship in commission now has! Tristram would commission 40 ships for the home station alone! Sir John Barrow urges the necessity of some improved system of manning, where he acknowledges "the shoe is likely to pinch;" and even the Government has been issuing handbills, and appointing receiving ships, with a view to raise men; besides, if report speak true, ordering some fortresses to be constructed. Now, what have the writers of these much-condemned pamphlets been contending for, but the necessity of measures of this sort? And yet they are taunted and abused, charged with impertinence, insubordination, and almost treason, because they have pointed out to the country the danger of being unprepared, when it had been repeatedly urged upon the Government without effect!

How does it happen that, with all the abuse and scurrility heaped upon the Flag Officer and Capt. Crawfurd, not a word is said about Capt. Napier, who has spoken his mind more freely as to the state of the Navy than either of them? Is it because Capt. Napier is on the spot, and "wears a sword," while the Flag Officer is anonymous, and Capt. Crawfurd far away? Or is it because Capt. Napier is a Whig, and stood a contest against the Tory candidate at Greenwich? The opponents of the pamphlets cannot of course be actuated by party feelings, as the writers of them are said to be; but it is curious that what is treason in one officer should be rewarded with an important command in another!

AVA PRIZE-MONEY.

SIR,—Your correspondent Bob Handy has hit the right nail on the head, when he attributes the unreasonable delay in the distribution of the Ava prize-money to the dilatory habits of Madras, the feeblest and least efficient of all the Indian Governments. It is curious to observe how this affects regiments employed on the same service. H.M.'s 13th Light Infantry and 38th regiments sailed together from Bengal for Rangoon, in the early part of 1824. The former corps received their prize-money in January 1837, whilst the latter, having quitted India in 1836, and being now stationed at Enniskillen, have not yet received theirs. In like manner H. M.'s 41st and 89th sailed about the same period from Madras, and were quickly followed by the second battalion Royal regiment. H. M.'s 41st regiment were paid the prize-money in August 1837, whilst the 89th, being now in the West Indies, and the Royals in North America, may, in all probability whistle for theirs for some time to come, unless steps are taken to awaken the Madras Government from its slumbers, and compel it to comply with the orders of the Government at home.

I have selected these as two of the most striking instances of the inconvenience caused by the waste of time in settling the accounts at Madras, but there are, I believe, several other regiments of H. M.'s Service, now situated in different parts of the globe, who were in the Burmese war, and whose claims cannot be adjusted till the Madras Government think fit to close the the accounts of that Presidency. No blame, however, appears to attach to the authorities in this country, as your friend Bob Handy supposes. On the contrary, it would seem that both from the India Board, and the India House, the orders to expedite the distribution of the prize-fund have been prompt and peremptory.—C. P.

POLICE, YEOMANRY, AND VOLUNTEERS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—To handle arms more familiar to my humble capacity, preparative to another Stadium campaign, I had ordered my pen to stand at ease; but Arthur's last letter has brought it again to attention; admiring his forcible reasoning, and respecting his great experience, my venturing to differ from him on some points is the more reluctantly declared. Can he have overlooked, that the best directions, and their most willing execution by a police force, in no other country are so cramped as in this, and that the latter's meritorious services are nevertheless very considerable? When Mr. Under Secretary Ryder's motion on the "Nightly Watch" was before a Parliamentary Committee (in 1811 or 12 I think), I flattered myself that the then large and numerous corps of volunteers would reconcile the introduction of a military police to English feelings; and accordingly, and quite disinterestedly, I showed how, by mounting constantly volunteer guards at as many points at least as now there are station-houses (and by other modes pointed out), the police duties could be performed by gradually amalgamating them with the acquirement of a knowledge of military service; and as both were to be performed by fellow citizens, and in the circle of their own neighbours and friends, I made sure of its proving less objectionable to the people than any other mode. A variety of hints and regulations were not only, but rather extensively, set forth; and some of the most important were the same as those now in actual operation with the present police force, as I can prove; for not only many of my friends in high life applauded my labours, but a certain Marquis, still living (then an Earl), offered to present my suggestions to the proper quarter. The rejecting of them was founded on John Bull's irritability under attempts at military control! Nevertheless, my own experience has proved to me, and to my superiors also, that much depends upon the manner of introducing any thing, even to ensure a good humoured reception of force employed against a mob greatly excited *. Arthur says, that "it is necessary to form volunteer corps," and that instead of bewildering nine-tenths with "attempts at evolutions," the inspiring them with "personal confidence in their own chivalry is preferable." I not only am convinced of the value of these observations, but, and rather proudly, perhaps too vainly, add, that I have anticipated them many years ago in my own practice; that is, as far as I dared to venture (as then Adjutant of a "crack," although volunteer, corps), without exposing myself to be cashiered for mutinying against Dundas's regulations, even to add plenty of hard fagging at all manner of feats of activity, at first somewhat sorely but good-humouredly endured, shortly after to become so habitual, and at every opportunity pursued voluntarily, that the men were remarked for extraordinary powers of endurance, cheerfulness, and skill; and that their discipline was not neglected is proved by their being the only volunteer regiment that ever had the honour of being brigaded in orders, and in continuance with the household troops, as expert and willing men that could be made useful anywhere, although they had been disciplined by an unpaid Adjutant. "Two deep formations" with volunteers, some few excepted, were general. Why? To please the eye with a long but weak line. Arthur's penetration will not be offended at my saying, "black braided uniforms" will never be clean, or too clean, because men, as skirmishers, &c., will not lay down in them. The tailor also is a good recruiting Serjeant, and so are the lasses; and many a lad that is caught by the smart coat, &c., becomes a good soldier when least expected from him. I should prefer neat and suitable clothing, cheap in price, devoid of tinsel, sound and well-made arms, plain in other respects. I should say, let all volunteers be green with different facings only, and as many of them as possible mounted and dismounted rifles. I hear your readers ask, is there not a saying about "there is nothing like leather?" I propose to have the pleasure of giving them, in a future letter, my reasons WHY a yeomanry armed with rifles would be the most valuable, and also the most trustworthy of all irregulars, to which a country like Great Britain might confide her defence (as a real Landwehr) against foes from without or within; a text I have preached for upwards of thirty-six years, even to recommend as a stimulating step the formation of a youthful legion of mounted and dismounted rifles, as a guard of honour for Her Majesty at the time when heir-apparent; to be recruited from the nobility and gentry of the realm, with Cadet companies to receive, as a nursery for the first, youths under sixteen years of age—an idea still worth adopting, on grounds of rivalry between utility and splendour.

* On duty with a detachment during some riots, I allowed the men to introduce their basket-sticks into the armoury; there, by practice during the nights, to amuse and improve themselves in sword use, according to the rules of our drill. On being called out, I privately told the Serjeant-Major that the men, not to lose their basket-sticks, might place them in their waist-belts. We took post at the end of a wide street, to close it against a mob that was exasperated at some pistol-shots which had killed and wounded some of their body. The pressure of a mob phalanx repeatedly forced us in a body to some distance; neither friendly nor stern remonstrance answered; they rather produced repetitions under the mask of fun. The men began to lose forbearance. I said loudly, "Then, let us have a share in the fun. Sling arms,—right about face—draw sticks—now fall away, lads!" Heads and shins rattled in chorus, all laughed but those hit. Peace and good-humour were restored, the mob cheered us everywhere as good fellows for not drawing swords, and we had our own way everywhere!

I have now to glance at the last letter from the Maitre d'Armes, who may rest assured that my speaking of his "keeping a good reserve," was perfectly free from sneer; he has confirmed that belief by keeping the butt heel and the "cock-nail" (pin, I suppose) now in reserve, and by admitting that his drill was not intended for Infantry against Infantry, and which I had alluded to as the reserve. I hold with him as to drawing the right foot back, conceiving it the most likely position to ensure firmness; but I am puzzled what he can mean by the "masculine faculties." I shall most readily show him my patent bayonet on his favouring me with a call; it differs little, if anything, in look from the common bayonet, but its hold on to the muzzle is so powerful that the contortions of a wounded horse, although the bayonet is wholly plunged into him, cannot force it off from the muzzle; not any force met with in combats can strain it off, unless by consent of the soldier possessed of the musket; nothing indeed short of breaking it; and all this is done by means as strong as simple, without any spring or click, yet to allow unfixing as quick, and more easy, than the present. Congratulating you on the interest your valuable labours have excited, I have the honour to remain, &c.,

DE BERENGER.

STEAM, OFFENSIVE AND DEFENSIVE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—The author of the letter to Lord Minto, signed One of the People, seems to have taken up some very fanciful notions relative to steam-power. If I understand him rightly, he intimates the substitution of steam-vessels for batteries, along our coast-harbours, as best calculated for attack or defence; and proposes the conversion of our small-class frigates into steamers for this purpose. He likewise has an idea, that in case of war, it is a question whether these vessels will not supersede ships of the line, &c. Now, Sir, in my mind there can arise no question of the kind. Ships of the line are as essential to the decision of all great political differences which are to be discussed on the ocean, as Artillery is to those of the field or cities. No great national question can be settled by skirmish, otherwise frigates would prove as effective as ships of the line; for I believe it will not be denied, that single actions have been more severely contested than those of fleets (at least if the sanguinary results be taken as the criterion), though the consequences have been widely different. No, Sir, steam-power will cause the introduction of a different system of tactics, and render the fleet more efficacious. By means of steam-vessels we shall be able more vigilantly to watch the squadrons of the enemy in their own ports, as well as track them in their windings, should they escape out; as a steamer may lay in the mouth of a harbour, in weather and under circumstances which would compel sailing vessels to quit the post, but which a steamer at anchor could maintain by the aid of steam. Harassing an enemy's coast with rapid demonstrations; intercepting convoys of coasters; towing heavy sailing ships into, and crippled ships out of action; sounding the channels of ports, and leading the fleet, when the passages are but indifferently known; with other such-like important evolutions, will constitute the grand feature of this new acquisition to Naval warfare. As for steamers being substituted for batteries, that is another fallacy; especially such as are proposed, "the metamorphoses" of sharp build, length of leg, and narrow beam—vessels totally incapable to work in shallow water, among shoals and breakers; where, though they may lie, they cannot turn at will. But suppose such a substitution, and an invasion intended; the leading steamers of the invaders will grapple with the substitutes, lay them alongside, and being full of troops, will board; and whilst so occupied, the main body of steam-transports running in will effect the landing of the assailants unopposed, unless by whatever musketeers may be on the beach; and those, exposed to the grape from the steam-transports, covering the landing. Whereas, no vessel can run alongside a battery, and obstruct opposition; a previous landing must be necessary, before its attention can be drawn off; and then a formal assault, attendant with all the delay of military science, must be made, and the battery carried, ere the invading troops can land. Thus, even though the battery be but indifferently constructed, time will be gained, and that time may suffice for bringing up reinforcements, which the rapidity of the steam-flotilla's arrival prevented the defenders from anticipating to be requisite, or even the place of action. But your own proposition, Mr. Editor, deserves the serious attention of the Admiralty; viz., that "the whole body of Marines be converted into Artillery men." This being so, let every steamer be armed with the new guns; let there be a complement of seamen adequate to working the vessel only, and Blue Marines to manage the Artillery, the small arms, and to board, if necessary; an adequate number of officers of course, to accompany them; and a Marine Officer's life will be vastly different to what it now is.

The times are portentous; and if to be adopted, preparations like the above should not be delayed. War is said to be an evil; perhaps it may be; but in the present state of feeling throughout the country, war may prove far otherwise, even though it has its attendant expenses; for if the nation is restless, and prone to fight, let them fight at a distance from their hitherto peaceful abodes, rather than witness any tumultuous commotion in the land of their birth. If Russia, or any other aggressor, feel disposed to try results with Great Britain, war will give excitement to the nation; and even the non-combatants will see an increased demand for their labour, coupled with remunerating prices; especially if, as in times past, England has a monopoly in the supply of distant markets with the produce of her factories. And superior as we are in steam transit, and the magnitude of our steam-vessels, this prospect of monopoly in the event of a war, may be fairly enough entertained. AN OLD SAILOR.

ENGINEERS, R.N.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—In answer to your opinion on the subject of Engineers, I beg to state, with all due respect to yourself, that in whatever indignant terms I may have expressed myself, relative to the unmerited disgrace thrown upon them, I see no reason why you should imagine that I form one of their number. I admit, that I spoke as I felt, and thought upon the subject because it was a point of national importance. In the first place, I cannot say that I take the same view of the affair as you; for I think it would be highly impolitic to allow an officer to have any control over the engine room at all—that is to say, as far as one being placed to superintend the department and establish discipline. If an Inspector is found necessary, why not have one whose profession it is, and not a Jack of all trades, and master of none, as I feel confident that the officers chosen for this service would be from among the most incompetent seamen; and in a case of this sort one would be certainly apt to think it strange, that a person lacking brains sufficient to become a sailor should be converted into an engineer. Calling the Portuguese affair again in question, I still persist in observing that is unjust and highly improper, in my opinion, to take that as a criterion; for reasons that I have before stated, however, as regards the situation and feelings of officers similarly placed, I perfectly agree with you, but I do not think it probable that the engineers of the Navy will ever be so far devoid of national feeling and duty to their superiors as to place them in so unenviable a position. Another thing that I have to remark is, that the engineers of the present date bear no more relation to those of eight or nine years ago than to those of the Portuguese squadron. Since that time the service has been daily getting better, through the exertions of the officers who have of late commanded steam vessels. They saw the necessity of a change, and they have effected one, much to the benefit of the service, generally speaking, and to those who are in it, by purging it of those who were a disgrace to it, and I think would be to any other employment. At the present moment, I believe, we have, with very few exceptions indeed, as well regulated men filling those situations as can be had. As to a lack of discipline in the engine room, you have been misinformed; for I can assure you, that the same discipline which reigns throughout the other parts of the vessel is in force in that department; consequently, a Mate is not required to establish it nor teach it to the engineers, they being already as conversant with the rules of the service as himself, and as willing to show proper respect to their superiors.

H.M. SERVICE IN INDIA.—(No. 13.)

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—I shall very shortly answer your correspondent, One of the H.E.I.C. Service, perhaps not much to his satisfaction. This gentleman commences his precious epistle, by stating that I have "fired off no less than nine letters against his service." Now, if he would only open his eyes, he could see that I have done no such thing, and that I have only (and truly, let me tell him) described "H.M. Service in India," as the heading of the letters tells him. Do the gallant officers, let me ask this second Solomon, who in their letters to you describe our noble Navy—particularly the splendid new ships—as undermanned and armed, and point to the American and French Navies as excelling us in these important points, write against those two Navies? This species of sophistry and clap-trap style is so like your old correspondent, D., that I suspect this erudite production comes from his hand.

Your correspondent further accuses me of publishing many "glaring mis-statements." My answer is, that his assertion is ——, and that I have not published one unfounded statement. The compendious system of argument—or more properly assertion, for argument there is none—seems to sink your correspondent's genius; but if he will condescend to particular points, I will pledge my utmost credit with the British Army and public, that I can refute by proofs all he brings forward against the statements made in these letters.

I now send you a list of four Majors who have each received 40,000 rupees (which I call 4,000*l.*) as a bonus, and their full-pay from the Honourable Company; of two Majors who have received 35,000 rupees bonus and their full-pay, to retire from the service; and also the names of three others who have refused 30,000 rupees as a bonus. These are amply sufficient to prove the correctness of my statements; in fact, as the gallant Historian of the Peninsular War observes of his petty detractors, this, and all your other Indian correspondents, "make their own ignorance the measure of my veracity," I should be glad to know, if all the Majors of H.M. service were offered full-pay and a bonus of 3,000*l.* to retire from the service, how many would refuse the offer? Why, I answer, without hesitation, not one! And I should be glad further to inquire, that if all Majors in the Honourable Company's Service had the liberal terms made to them the Majors in H.M. Service have—that is, half-pay, or selling out, we will say, at 4,000*l.*—how many of the Honourable Company's Majors would accept these terms? Why, I answer, unhesitatingly, not one solitary individual! This speaks more than volumes. Why, Sir, the Honourable Company's Captains receive constantly 20,000 rupees as a bonus, and one positively refused 50,000 rupees!

Your correspondent asserts, that I wish H.M. Officers to participate in the Pension Funds, Retiring Funds, Widows' Funds, and Off-reckonings of his service. My reply is, that no such idea ever entered the head of any one possessed of half an ounce of brains more than he enjoys; and that all we require is to participate, in a fair and just proportion, of the appointments in India during the time we must serve in that country; and more particularly as we cannot be employed elsewhere during the period our corps serve in India *."

I must again remind this correspondent, and some other worthies who contribute to your excellent Journal, that it was the Royal Army which gained the British possessions in India; and that in every war in which either the stability or the supremacy of the British power has been endangered, they alone secured the victory. Without them the British power would have been kicked out of India long ago. Labourdonnais and Lally would have soon settled that affair; and at more recent periods Hyder Ali, Tippoo, the Burmese, and perhaps Scindiah. As to the honours of the Bath, the late distribution proves the whole affair to be such a gross political job, that there is not a private soldier in the British Army who cannot perceive it; and I again repeat, that between five hundred and a thousand far more distinguished Officers of the Royal Army and Navy have been entirely passed over and neglected, in order to confer these honours on a set of men utterly unknown; in fact, the political subserviency of the Court of Directors is purchased at the expense of the noble defenders of their country!

ONE OF 1200 H.M. OFFICERS.

P.S.—In my letter No. 10, for Lieuts. of the Royal Artillery, Engineers, Marines, Line, &c., read Lieutenant-Colonels of the Royal Artillery, &c.

* The raising of a contingent for the Kings of Cabul and Oude, has added about 180 new situations, so that they must now amount to between 1,800 and 1,900 in the three Presidencies.

NATIONAL CORPS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Relying on your kind consideration, I again venture to resume that subject on which I feel most deeply, and on which I trust to render some service, by preventing, in future, "round men from being fixed in square holes." There is no man living who would not scoff at the idea of employing full-blood racers to draw the plough, or sending five hundred dray-horses to Newmarket, in hopes that chance might enable one amongst them to distance Flying Childers, or the far-famed Eclipse. No one, I should think, would select Marshal Suvaroff as an Officer of the Staff Corps, or as a Commander of Artillery, and I doubt whether the great Duke himself would be seen to advantage in comto the quotation from the late Admiral Stromberg's pamphlet, published by his executors in 1830, lamenting the incapacity of our Naval Administration.

The other pamphlet is apparently by the same hand; but the observations are addressed to the author of the "Letter to the Earl of Minto," and intended to show that our merchant steam-vessels are not available in war, because the scantling of the "Richmond vessels" is insufficient to support guns. We may dispose of this author's apprehensions by assuring him, that, independent of the Richmond and two or three hundred steam-vessels of larger size, we have full two hundred merchant steam-vessels quite capable of bearing two or more heavy guns, and they could be made available in a very short time.

The magazine article appears to have been done to order, but not done in time; to command any interest, it should have appeared last month, before the subject was exhausted. This is perhaps not so material; as it contains little or nothing original. The writer rings the changes upon the subjects which have been discussed for years past over and over again in our columns. Need we enumerate?—Constitution of the Board of Admiralty—Civilian First Lord—Parliamentary Apathy respecting Naval Affairs—Army Patronage not actuated by Political Feeling (think of that, Mr. Hume!)—Case of the Marines—Flag Promotions—Manning the Fleet—Registry Bill—Pensions whilst Serving—Reduction of Marine Artillery—Of School of Naval Architecture—Of Naval College—Reduced Crews—Impolicy of Transferring Coast Guard to the Treasury—and other matters. But all these things, are they not familiar to our readers' ears as "household words?" As not the slightest novelty is advanced in the discussion, we need allude to them no further.

The writer, in his exordium, takes occasion to censure the "Flag Officer" for "marring a laudable intention by the betrayal of party bias, and by a predisposition to depict, in the darkest colours, the condition of the country." This is pretty well from one who has, in the preceding paragraph, declared,—how truly let Sir John Barrow's able exposé certify,—"That as regards effectiveness, or numerical strength, our ships in commission are now inadequate to support, not merely a war, but those appearances that are essential to the preservation of peace."

To be sure this is mere assertion; there is nothing advanced to prove that our ships are inferior in size or armament, or in crews, to those maintained in former seasons of peace, or even those which fought at the Nile and Trafalgar; but having shaped for himself an "impartial course," and resolved to "explain dispassionately," it appears rather anomalous that he should yaw so soon and so woundily to starboard and to port, and display a more bitter and even personal feeling towards the present authorities, and those who preceded them, than even the "Flag-Officer" has done—enumerating every evil he can conjure up, and withholding all mention of improvement. Thus, when asserting that the seamen in our coasting trade have diminished, on account of the increase of steam-vessels—"an alarming truth (an error, we believe) which Ministers should have been the first to perceive, and, having perceived it, the first to remedy"—he withholds all mention of the measure they have adopted, not only to increase the number, but improve the quality of seamen, and that under its operation upwards of 20,000 apprentices have been brought into the Merchant Service within these four years—a number four times as great as all the seamen employed in the steam-vessels of the United Kingdom!

Let not the reader despair, however; the writer has, like other projectors, a remedy for all our evils: but it was necessary to show the desperate state of our condition, in order that the panacea might be better appreciated. Moreover, his project will not only benefit the Navy, but—what does the reader suppose?—why, "materially conduce to the better working of the present Poor Law Bill!" Now, this may be very agreeable information for the Poor Law Commissioners, but it requires some sagacity to discover how it is to resuscitate our Navy from the miserable condition into which he asserts it has fallen, or even what analogy exists between the two cases. The scheme is nothing more nor less than this—to convert yellow-hammers into water-wagtails. Those who have observed the processions of parish children on walking Thursdays, or looked with pity on their stinted frames and pale faces as they lifted up their feeble voices in the cathedral in praise of their Creator, can appreciate the source from which the writer proposes to draw the material for producing seamen who are hereafter to uphold the meteor flag of England in the "battle and the breeze." It is from this objectionable nursery of misbegotten urchins, conceived in crime, brought forth in misery, and reared, in want, under the tender mercies of the parish Bumbles, without a tie or an affection for kin or country, that the writer proposes to procure an additional number of boys for our ships of war, and to entail them upon the country by binding them for seven years to the Queen.

Such a project might very well suit the Emperor of Russia, or any other potentate who had no maritime resources but of his own creation; the adoption of it by us would be tantamount to the confession, that the elements of our Naval strength had departed, or become inadequate as heretofore to maintain a fleet; whereas the contrary is the case,—our ships, tonnage, and seamen being yearly on the increase,—and even without anything beyond the ordinary inducements, nearly two thousand men—not boys to become men some years hence, but men ripe, ready, and real—the greatest part of them good seamen—have entered the fleet within these two months.

We have repeatedly stated our objection to rearing boys in the Navy, because we conceive the real seaman should be competent to get his living independent of the Government, and this he cannot always do, unless he has served his time in the merchant's employ. Again; there is great expense in this forced rearing (Captain Lihou estimates it at 22*l.* per boy per annum), and for a great part of the time these boys will add little to the physical force of the crew. To some extent it may be profitable, and we think that extent has been attained, if not exceeded already, under the present regulations. It is unnecessary, however, to repeat our objections; but the proposal for selecting parish boys is preposterous. So great is the objection to them, that since the law, which permitted overseers to bind boys to the sea, nolens volens, has been repealed, not one in a hundred of sea apprentices are taken from the workhouse, but from healthy sources, as any one may at once ascertain by their appearance about the docks.

The only suggestion of any value that we have discovered in the article under review, is the proposal for giving newly entered seamen a working frock, and this boon might also be extended to the Marines when first embarked, for the greatest part of the dirty work falls on them.

But after all these discussions upon the state of the Navy, the question resolves itself into this,—Are we at peace or at war, or in expectation of war? Our position in these respects must be best known to the constituted authorities, who are responsible for their conduct; no doubt they will take care to shape their measures accordingly. If, as we believe, we are at peace, and under no greater approximation to war (unless it be declared by ourselves) than we were ten or a dozen years ago, then do we maintain that for a peace establishment our Naval force is more ample and effective than at any former period, and that we are prepared to double or treble it with promptitude if occasion demanded. Those who tender their gratuitous counsel to the authorities, as to the line of conduct they should adopt, appear to us in the light of Goldsmith's politician, who imagined "he could have directed some things better, and didn't think there had been a sufficient number of advisers; but that they should advise with every person willing to give their advice, and then things would be done in another-guess manner."

We append a letter from a very intelligent officer, which deserves attention:—

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Plymouth, January 30.

Sir,—Having dwelt for some years in the neighbourhood of one of our principal Arsenals, where many old experienced officers reside, we have been surprised to see the statements respecting the formidable appearance of the Russian fleet at Cronstadt, by which it is endeavoured to urge the Government to put us immediately on the defensive, and saddling the country with an increased expense. England, of all other countries, is the least required to keep up a war establishment, as no other power possesses the facility in every department for despatch in fitting out a fleet. Only refer back to the year 1793, and it may be seen in how short a period we had 54 sail of the line, and above 130 cruisers, either at sea or ready for sea. Never let it be forgot that in one year (1804) eighty-seven ships of war were launched and speedily equipped for sea. As to the Russians,—for those who do not possess other means of intelligence, let them inquire throughout the Baltic traders, and they will learn that this formidable Russian fleet has been preparing for battle since the year 1820; they will also hear that these ships have been seen both under weigh and in harbour; and by seamen, capable of judging as to the working and manning of them, that with few exceptions it was a lubberly exhibition: that their officers, as well as crews, appeared to be little better than landsmen, that the men spent half the year in barracks, and were paraded and disciplined more like a part of the army than sailors. In all these statements, respecting the present superiority of foreign fleets, too much stress has been laid as to the number and capabilities of their men-of-war, as if ships alone constituted the force of a maritime nation; no one, however, has had the hardihood to contend for the superiority of foreign seamen, either as to ability or numbers. Let any one inspect our ships, and state if this department of the Navy has been neglected, or if it has not been fostered with extraordinary care and attention. In this arm of our Navy is displayed our unrivalled strength. Of what avail was the Russian fleet during the late war, or those mountains of timber, the Montaigne, L'Orient, or Santissima Trinidad, when few individuals could be found better to man them than the sweepings of Brest, Toulon, or Cadiz, and sometimes on the very night before they got under weigh.

Another subject prevalent in the present day is an endeavour to wrest from the Admiralty the power of impressment without offering a substitute in any way available to meet all the difficulties that would attend it. This measure is by far of greater importance to the safety of the British empire, in cases of emergency, than the building of an extra number of large ships to rot in our harbours. Much ignorance prevails with landsmen respecting the manning a fleet, by supposing that a ship's company may be obtained with the same facility as the raising of a regiment, not reflecting that a youth brought up to other employments can never be made a seaman of, or not knowing that good seamen (in case of war) can get more profitable employment than entering on board a Queen's ship; neither have we the means of good seamen as soldiers are made in the army. Boys brought up in men-of-war are not our best sailors, neither do they succeed in large Indiamen. In great ships great strength is required in every operation, and it is to be regretted that the law, respecting apprentices, is so much evaded in large ships, stout landsmen being found cheaper than boys. It is to the general run of our trading ships that we are indebted for our prime seamen; where boys are regularly bound for seven years, and in colliers particularly, where they are to be seen, at ten years of age, keeping watch and watch with a preponderating share of all operations aloft, placed at the helm the first voyage, and roused out at all calls to relieve it for many long and weary spells, when stronger hands are wanted for heavier duty. The boys that survive this probation obtain a knowledge and dexterity, along with a dauntless hardihood, never to be acquired in any other school, and these are the plants from which have sprung the hearts of oak celebrated in the sea-fights of Old England, and these sterling qualities may be brought forward again to defend the country in periods of danger, if the discipline and direction of them be not taken out of the hands of experienced professional men by the canting experimentalists of the present day. The intrinsic value of this class of seamen can only be appreciated by those who navigate our ships, and the principal exertions of our officers when fitting out ships-of-war, is to procure them; but these are not the men that enter when war is declared,—then the demand is too great and the wages too tempting in the merchant's service. To make the difference of the land and sea service more generally understood, let us suppose that it was necessary for the army, in order to be ready for service, that one-third of each regiment should be composed of carpenters or shoemakers, or some branch requiring seven years' apprenticeship; would not this regulation, in case of war, create an immediate scarcity of hands in that particular class of mechanics, and would not the masters (as in our trading ships) try every expedient to thwart the Government by secreting their men, by false indentures, by wages exceeding the highest bounties, and every other mode of allurement in order to retain them; and how would it be possible for the Commander-in-Chief to complete the regiments without extraordinary powers from the constitution? Precisely in this state is the Admiralty on a declaration of war, with the additional difficulty, that the individuals wanted are spread over the face of the globe. With respect to registering, or following the mode adopted by other powers, they do not meet the difficulties foreseen at home. Impressment of seamen, however opposed to the liberty of the subject, has puzzled the best politicians for half a century, endeavouring to discover a safe remedy without success; the practice has been declared by our first law authorities to be coeval with the maritime power of England, and to have preceded the statute law.

If, Mr. Editor, in your wide research, an available substitute can be pointed out, you will be entitled to the gratitude of every Naval officer, on whom much of the odium has hitherto devolved, but let us not by any rash step risk the safety of our wooden walls, and with them the safety of the British Empire. I am, &c.

THOMAS CONSTET, a Retired Commander, R.N.

We have already adverted to the construction of six 32-pounders, from plans of Mr. Monk, of the Royal Proof Department, to obviate the necessity of boring up guns. These pieces of ordnance are daily expected at Woolwich from the foundries of Walker and Company. As soon as they are proved, one of each nature is to be sent to Portsmouth for experiment on board the Excellent. The guns are respectively nine feet long, and 50cwt., to be used with a charge of 8lbs. of powder; eight feet six inches, and 45cwt., with a charge of 7lbs.; and eight feet, 40cwt., with a charge of 6lbs.

It is currently reported that the Government have it in contemplation to make a Naval Station of Boullay Bay; on the North Coast of Jersey, by the erection of a breakwater, capable of giving shelter to a squadron afloat. Owing to the facility of procuring granite on the spot, this important object can be effected at a comparatively trifling cost, nothing but the labour of convicts in mining, &c. being required.

The proprietors of the ground having an interest in the prosperity of the Island, would of course cheerfully assign the space of land which produces the required material. The necessity for a Naval Station in this position has become imperative, since the French have created, at enormous cost, strong stations at Cherbourg, St. Malo, and Granville, capable of holding ships-of-war; and the possession of a harbour on the north side of the island, where vessels can lie afloat, will also greatly reduce the distance, and facilitate the passage of steam and other vessels to the neighbouring Islands of Guernsey, Sark, and also the Coast of England.

We perceive that Sir John Barrow, in his late work, alludes to the relief of these Islands by Lord Howe, and his capture of the Islets of Chausée, at which period we are informed that Boullay Bay afforded the only safe anchorage for twenty-nine men-of-war whilst on that expedition, and where Lord (then Captain) Howe found the only safe anchorage in that neighbourhood, on a bed of good holding clay.

The Court.

The Queen held a Court and Privy Council at two o'clock on Monday afternoon at the new palace, when Her Majesty's speech on opening the session of Parliament was arranged and agreed upon. Her Majesty pricked the list for the sheriffs for the present year. Sir James Rivett Carnac, Bart., Governor of Bombay, had his audience of leave on going to Bombay. In the evening the Queen honoured Drury-lane Theatre with her presence.

On Tuesday Her Majesty went in state to the House of Lords to open the session of Parliament with a speech from the throne. In the evening the Queen honoured Covent-garden Theatre with her presence.

The Queen held a Court on Thursday, for the reception of the Addresses from the Houses of Lords and Commons. The respective Addresses were read by the Lord Chancellor, and the Speaker, to which Her Majesty returned most gracious answers.

Her Majesty will hold levees at St. James's Palace on Wednesday, the 20th inst., and on Wednesday, the 6th March next, at two o'clock.

The Queen will give a grand dinner to a large party to-day. The Duke of Wellington will be present.

In the House of Lords, last night, Lord Glenelg announced that he had resigned his office, in consequence of his having been informed for the first time so late as last Tuesday morning that the Cabinet had unanimously determined on a new distribution of officers. Various reports are in circulation with regard to the changes to which this resignation will lead.

On Monday despatches from Sir J. Colborne, Governor of L. Canada, and from the Governor of Sierra Leone, were received at the Colonial-office. On Tuesday Mr. H. Rawsell arrived with despatches from Sir G. Arthur, Lieut.-Governor of U. Canada. Capt. B. Reynolds, C.B., of the Ganges, left the Admiralty on Tuesday, with despatches for R.-Adm. Sir J. Ommanney, the Commander-in-Chief in the Tagus, and Adm. Sir R. Stopford, at Malta, where the Ganges will touch on her voyage to the Mediterranean. On Wednesday despatches were received at the Colonial-office, from the Lieut.-Gov. of Gibraltar. On Thursday despatches, dated 20th Jan., were received from the Governors of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and from the Governor of Southern Australia. Yesterday despatches were received from Sir J. Franklin, Governor of Van Diemen's Land, and from Major-General Sir George Napier, Governor of the Cape of Good Hope.

Earl Grey on Tuesday last met with a serious accident, while reading in the drawing-room at Howick-hall, one of the large paintings having fallen on his Lordship's head. The blow almost proved fatal to the noble Earl, who is not yet out of danger.—Tyne Mercury.

A morning paper states that Sir James Carnac, the Governor of Bombay, was desirous of being made a privy councillor, but was obliged to be contented with kissing hands. The same authority states that the new Governor is in some apprehension of being Heytesbury-ed. We sincerely hope not.

The Cork Constitution announces the apprehension of the murderer of Lord Norbury, and states that he is a Tipperary labourer. So much for the "neatly finished boot gentleman!"

In our paper there appeared a paragraph, headed "Curious Case of Assault," abridged from the West of England Conservative. The complainant was a Mr. Mackenzie, an officer of the Indian army, who proved that he had been assaulted by Messrs. T. and J. Husband and Mr. J. Wyatt, in consequence of certain differences between him and these gentlemen. The defendants, in justification, went into a detail irrelevant to the point at issue, with the view of prejudicing the character of the complainant. We are requested to state that the Imputations against Mr. Mackenzie are unfounded, and that the report in the West of England Conservative was erroneous in many particulars. On re-perusing the report, we must confess that it does seem to us to bear internal evidence of being an ex parte, rather than an impartial statement.—Observer.

The Duel at Wimbledon.—On Thursday, at the Central Criminal Court, Edward Delves Broughton surrendered to an indictment charging him with aiding and abetting one Francis Lionel Eliot to kill and murder Charles Flower Mirtin. The prisoner pleaded guilty, and judgment of death was recorded against him; but the Judge gave him to understand that his punishment would be imprisonment.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

TUESDAY, Feb. 5.—The Queen opened Parliament in person. At ten minutes past two a discharge of cannon announced the arrival of Her Majesty, who, having passed through the lobbies and robed, entered the House, preceded by the heralds and great officers of State. As Her Majesty passed to the Throne, she bowed most graciously to the Peers and Peeresses. Her Majesty read in a clear and distinct manner the following speech, which was handed to her by the Lord Chancellor:—

My Lords and Gentlemen,—I rejoice to meet you again in Parliament. I am particularly desirous of recurring to your advice and assistance at a period when many matters of great importance demand your serious and deliberate attention. I continue to receive from foreign powers gratifying assurances of their desire to maintain with me the most friendly relations. I have concluded with the Emperor of Austria a treaty of commerce, which, I trust, will extend and improve the intercourse between my subjects and those of the Emperor. I have also concluded a treaty of the same kind with the Sultan, calculated to place the commercial relations between my dominions and the Turkish empire upon a better and more secure footing. I have directed copies of those treaties to be laid before you. I have been engaged, in concert with Austria, France, Prussia, and Russia, in negotiations with a view to a final settlement of the differences between Holland and Belgium. A definitive treaty of peace, founded upon anterior arrangements, which have been acceded to by both parties, has, in consequence, been proposed to the Dutch and Belgian Governments. I have the satisfaction to inform you that the Dutch Government has already signified to the Conference its acceptance of that treaty, and I trust that a similar announcement from the Belgian Government will put an end to that disquietude which the present unsettled state of these affairs has necessarily produced. The warranty of the five Allied Powers affords satisfactory security for the preservation of peace. I lament the continuance of the civil war in Spain, which engages my anxious and undiminished attention. Differences which have arisen have occasioned the retirement of my Minister from the Court of Teheran. I indulge, however, the hope of learning that a satisfactory adjustment of those differences will allow of the re-establishment of my relations with Persia upon their former footing of friendship. Events connected with the same differences have induced the Governor-General of India to take measures for protecting British interests in that quarter of the world, and to enter into engagements, the fulfilment of which may render Military operations necessary. For this purpose such preparations have been made as may be sufficient to resist aggression from any quarter, and to maintain the integrity of my eastern dominions. The Reform and Amendment of the Municipal Corporations of Ireland are essential to the interest of that part of my dominions. It is also urgent that you should apply yourselves to the prosecution and completion of those measures which have been recommended by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners of England, for the purpose of increasing the efficiency of the Established Church, and of confirming its hold upon the affection and respect of my people. The better enforcement of the law, and the more speedy administration of Justice, are of the first importance to the welfare of the community; and I feel assured that you will be anxious to devote yourselves to the examination of the measures which will be submitted to you for the purpose of attaining these beneficial results.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,—I have directed the Annual Estimates to be prepared and laid before you. Adhering to the principles of economy, which it is my desire to enforce in every department of the State, I feel it my duty to recommend that adequate provision be made for the exigencies of the public service. I fully rely on your loyalty and patriotism to maintain the efficiency of those establishments which are essential to the strength and security of the country.

My Lords and Gentlemen,—It is with great satisfaction that I am enabled to inform you, that throughout the whole of my West Indian possessions the period fixed by law for the final and complete Emancipation of the Negroes has been anticipated by Acts of the Colonial Legislature; and that the transition from the temporary system of Apprenticeship to entire freedom has taken place without any disturbance of public order and tranquillity. Any measures which may be necessary, in order to give full effect to this great and beneficial change, will, I have no doubt, receive your careful attention. I have to acquaint you, with deep concern, that the province of Lower Canada has again been disturbed by insurrection, and that hostile incursions have been made into Upper Canada by certain lawless inhabitants of the United States of North America. These violations of the public peace have been promptly suppressed by the valour of my forces and the loyalty of my Canadian subjects. The President of the United States has called upon the citizens of the Union to abstain from proceedings so incompatible with the friendly relations which exist between Great Britain and the United States. I have directed full information upon all these matters to be laid before you, and I recommended the present state of these provinces to your serious consideration. I rely upon you to support my firm determination to maintain the authority of my Crown; and I trust that your wisdom will adopt such measures as will secure to those parts of my empire the benefit of internal tranquillity and the full advantages of their own great natural resources. I have observed with pain the persevering efforts which have been made, in some parts of the country, to excite my subjects to disobedience and resistance to the law, and to recommend dangerous and illegal practices. For the counteraction of all such designs, I depend upon the efficacy of the law, which it will be my duty to enforce upon the good sense and right disposition of my people—upon their attachment to the principles of justice, and their abhorrence of violence and disorder. I confidently commit all these great interests to your wisdom, and I implore Almighty God to assist and prosper your counsels.

Her Majesty then left the House, and on her return, as on her progress, was loudly and enthusiastically cheered by the persons assembled along the line of procession. —Lord DURHAM expressed a wish that his report to Government, as Lord High Commissioner in Canada, should at once be laid on the table.—The Earl of LOVELACE moved, and Lord VERNON seconded, the Address, in reply to the Speech from the Throne.—A long discussion took place on the subject of the Corn Laws.—Lord MELBOURNE declared the question to be an "open" one to the members of his Cabinet. The Address was agreed to without a division.

The House resumed at five o'clock.

FRIDAY, Feb. 8.—The Lord Chancellor read the reply from Her Majesty to the Address:—"My Lords, I thank your Lordships for your loyal and dutiful Address. Relying entirely on your wisdom and patriotism, I can have no greater satisfaction than finding myself supported by your agreement and concurrence."—Lord GLENELG announced his resignation. His Lordship stated that a communication had been made to him on Tuesday, involving alterations in the arrangement of offices utterly unexpected on his Lordship's part, which, after mature consideration, he found impossible to accede to. His Lordship added, that upon any measures connected with colonial affairs coming under discussion, he should be in his place to give such explanations as might be required.—The Earl of DURHAM complained that a garbled portion of his report on the state of Canada had been published in a newspaper, and expressed a hope that no time would be lost in laying the whole report before the House and the country. Lord MELBOURNE announced that on Monday next he would lay the papers before the House.—The Marquess of LONDONDERRY gave notice of a motion for Thursday next, relative to the military festival given by the Guards on the occasion of Lord Durham's departure from Quebec, when Sir James Macdonnell presided, who was a member of the noble earl's council, and also a commander of the troops, and who, in that double capacity had made certain declarations, at which he (the Marquess of Londonderry) was much astonished. He did not believe that an officer in that double capacity would have expressed a public opinion and a declaration of principle, at a time when the noble earl was supposed to have been discountenanced by her Majesty's government.—Lord Colchester moved for certain papers connected with the state of the Navy.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, Feb. 5.—Mr. E. BULLER moved the Address.—Mr. G. W. WOOD seconded it.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE proposed, by way of amendment, a clause—"assuring her Majesty that the amendment of the representative system, enacted in 1832, had disappointed the expectations of the people, and that it is not, and cannot be a final measure, and that it is the duty of the House to take immediate steps to remedy it." The motion was seconded by Mr. H. G. WARD.—A long debate ensued, in the course of which the Corn Law question was discussed at some length. Eventually the House divided: for the Address, 426; for the Amendment, 86.

WEDNESDAY, Feb 6.—Several petitions were presented praying for the total repeal of the Corn Laws.—Mr. G. PALMER called the attention of the President of the Board of Trade to the manner in which timber-ships are overladen, to the great danger and even loss of life, and inquired if he would direct his attention to the subject. Mr. P. THOMSON said he would give his best consideration to any suggestions; but the subject was surrounded with difficulties.—Mr. HODGSON inquired if any measure were in preparation for the regulation of steam-vessels, with the view of preventing accidents. Mr. P. THOMSON said that two competent persons had been appointed to inquire into the nature and causes of the accidents that had of late occurred, with a view to laying before Parliament some measure on the subject.—Lord G. LENNOX said it would be recollected that a commission had been appointed last year to inquire into the state of promotion in the Army. That commission had now been appointed nearly a year, and the question he wished to ask the Secretary for the Home Department was, whether that commission would resume its labours, and when it was likely that they would report? Lord J. RUSSELL said that the commission had sat very frequently during the last year. It had not sat during the recess, but he believed that they were about to resume their labours. Respecting the time when they were likely to make their report he could give no opinion.—Mr. HUME begged to ask whether the noble Lord expected any result from the commission that had been appointed three years ago to consider how far the Ordnance and Army Departments could be amalgamated. Lord J. RUSSELL said that at present no measure was prepared on this subject.—Mr. E. Buller and Mr. Wood brought up the report on the Address, and a discussion ensued. The report was ultimately agreed to, and the Address ordered to be presented to Her Majesty by the whole House.

THURSDAY, Feb. 7.—The Speaker read the following answer from Her Majesty to the Address:—"I thank you for your loyal and dutiful address. I receive with satisfaction the assurances of your support in maintaining the authority of my Crown over my Canadian provinces. I rely with confidence on your zealous assistance in upholding the observance of the laws, and on your careful consideration of the weighty matters on which you are engaged."

Some petitions were presented against the existing Corn Laws, and a short discussion followed; after which Captain BOLDERO gave notice that, on the second reading of the Mutiny Bill, he should introduce a motion respecting corporal punishment and prison discipline in the army.

FRIDAY, Feb. 8.—Lord J. RUSSELL moved the resolution adopted by the House last Session, with respect to receiving petitions, should he adhered to. For the motion, 183; against it 43.—The House went into a Committee of Supply.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

BELGIUM. — The resignation of the Ministers of Finance and Justice has been accepted by the King. All the garrison of Brussels are under arms in their barracks, and Government is apprehensive of confiding the posts to the Civic Guard, which is as much opposed to the partition as the working classes.

HOLLAND.—The King has accepted of the definitive arrangements proposed by the Conference, for a final settlement between Holland and Belgium. The Netherlands Minister in London has been authorised to sign the proposed treaty.

RUSSIA.—In the beginning of Dec. several more officers of the army in the Caucasus received, some the order of St. Wladimir of the fourth class with the riband, some gold medals, as a reward for their bravery in recent actions with the mountaineers, and for the prudent manner in which the occupation of some Circassian villages was effected. By an Imperial ukase it is ordered that Captains of men-of-war shall receive double pay when their ships, after 10 years' service, require no repair, and treble pay if they require no repair after 15 years' service. In general, after 1st January this year, Generals and staff officers of the fleet are to receive higher pay. On 6th Dec., being St. George's day, Lieut.-Gen. Golowin, Governor of Georgia, Cancasia, and Transcaucasia, received all the knights of the order of St. George then at Tiflis. There were present 12 Generals, 21 Staff Officers, 16 superior Officers, 52 Subaltern Officers, and 112 privates.

JAMAICA.—Advices to 26th Dec., brought by H.M.'s packet Linnet, which left Hayti on 30th Dec., communicate the meeting of the new House of Assembly, the adherence of the members to the resolutions of the late house, and their consequent prorogation to 5th Feb. by the Governor Sir Lionel Smith. A discussion arose, regretting the tone of the Governor's speech, which was dwelt upon as likely to increase, rather than allay, the excitement which already existed on the questions at issue between the government and the House of Representatives. Quietness, however, continued to prevail in the island.

Theatres.

COVENT-GARDEN.—Mr. Pocock's new drama was produced last evening. It is called the King and the Duke; or, the Siege of Alençon. The plot is somewhat intricate, indeed too full of knots and involutions to be untied or unravelled without some difficulty; but the house, which was tolerably filled, expressed their approbation in the usual manner, and the piece was given out for repeated representation without any dissent on the part of the auditors.

ENGLISH OPERA HOUSE.—Musard's Promenade Concerts continue to be fashionably and numerously attended. The performance of Les Echos quadrilles increases in attraction.

ADELPHI.—A new drama of slender pretensions, entitled Jane Lomax, was produced on Monday evening. It contains some comic scenes, which kept the house in good humour, and it was given out for repetition with partial applause.

ST. JAMES'S.—Mr. Hooper, the new lessee, commenced his arduous undertaking on Monday night. The theatre was well attended, and the audience, as usual, on such occasions, generous and cheering. The performance commenced with the burletta of The Old Maid, and was followed by Love among the Roses and Simpson and Co., which brought out Dowton, Wrench, and Miss Turpin. Between the first and second pieces, the bestial company, consisting of the lion and his lieges of the forest, made its appearance.

Literary Notices.

The Romance of the Harem. By Miss Pardoe. H. Colburn.

THAT Miss Pardoe is singularly well qualified to illustrate "The Romance of the Harem," a species of romance which she alone has been enabled to describe, need scarcely be told to those who have read her brilliant and clever book, entitled "The City of the Sultan," a book which, howbeit bearing a somewhat romantic title, is neither more nor less than a vivid picturing forth of the simple truth. But Miss Pardoe is (luckily, we had almost said) not merely well qualified for the new office she has assumed—she is the only person who has any strong pretensions to fill it; for she alone has been admitted to the inspection of those actual scenes in which her ideal pictures have had their origin. The real "Romance of the Harem," as it exists in the great city of Harems in the present day, and as it has existed there for centuries, is as familiar to Miss Pardoe, as the "household things" of her own home; and in the absence of such knowledge, little could have been looked for of that real truth and vividness of painting which characterise these capital stories. They consist, Miss Pardoe assures us, of the real tales related by the professional story-tellers of the East. But we are tempted to doubt, whether she is not here adopting a privilege of her calling, in more than the fair and fitting sense of it; for we much doubt if any Mussuldjhe of the East ever owned such a brilliant budget as is opened to us in these volumes. Be this as it may, the book is first-rate of its class:—rich in that rarest of all the attributes of genius, invention; vivid in descriptive power; brilliant in colouring; true both to nature and to costume—the latter in a singular degree; and altogether one of the most attractive works of fiction that the season has produced and will produce.

It includes a large variety of tales—few, if any of them, inferior to even the best of that most popular and fascinating of all similar collections, the Arabian Nights; yet all of them, with one exception, constructed without the aid of that supernatural machinery which is the main feature of the collection just named; a quality which unquestionably adds greatly to the difficulty of the task.

Our limits forbid either detail or quotation; which on this occasion we regret the less, that the first would be unfair to the reader of the work, and the second wholly inadequate to convey an impression of that wholeness and consecutive interest, which are the chief merits of the work.

Hood's Comic Annual, 1839. A. H. Baily.

THOUGH last of the annuals in appearance, it will be heartily welcomed by all who have a relish for puns and quaintness. There is no flagging in fun and humour: indeed we think this volume richer in the ludicrous and ridiculous than many of its predecessors. Several of the illustrations are inimitable: we have "A Detachment of Infantry." A father pulling along a chaise from which the wheel has fallen off, and the children likewise.—"Plates done on Stone." A servant having let fall a basket of plates on the pavement.—"A part is greater than the Hole." A boy having got his head through a broken pane, is incompetent to do exactly the same thing with his legs.—"Double Entry." Housebreakers entering a house at opposite windows.—"Does your Mother know you're out?" A child falling out of window, and a boy making to her that polite inquiry.

Vaccination and Revaccination. John Churchill. This reprint of a very clever paper which appeared in the "British and Foreign Medical Review" is most opportune, as at this moment the small pox is very prevalent throughout the country. The data on the subject of vaccination afforded by this pamphlet, must recommend it to every medical man.

SERIAL PARTS.

Greece, Pictorial, Descriptive, and Historical. By Christopher Wordsworth, D.D. W. S. Orr and Co.—This is the first part of a most beautifully, in fact superbly, embellished work. It is hardly possible, from the first thirty-two pages, to give an opinion of the literary merits of any work, but we have no doubt that the learned Editor will render his undertaking highly creditable to English literature. We shall notice the publication as it advances.

Heads of the People, taken off—By Kenny Meadows (Quizfizz.) R. Tyas.—The sketches, both of pen and pencil, in this new periodical, are of first-rate character, and the publication is as cheap as it is clever. The 4th number contains the Monthly Nurse, admirably portrayed by Leigh Hunt; the Auctioneer; the Landlady; and the Parlour Orator. The merits, oddities, "sayings and doings," of each, are humorously and faithfully sketched.

The New Sporting Magazine. W. Spiers.—The February number has a clever article, "Turfiana," the renewal of a sketch begun and discontinued in January, 1834, in which the events of the turf, horses, men, and measures, are freely canvassed. It should be read by every sportsman. From a short paper on the late Captain Morris we take the following:—

"How quietly has the death of Capt. Morris been permitted to be passed over, by thousands, to whom his exquisite songs have contributed hours upon hours of harmony and joy! The sin of ingratitude lies at the door of all those who are bon-vivants in the highest and most refined sense,—who thirst after the prosperity of pure English lyric poetry,—and who feel an honouring respect for departed genius. Why sleeps the name and fame of this extraordinary man; connected as he was so long, from his vast, refined, and social powers, with royal and noble circles—relished as his charming songs are by the hearts of 'all circles!' How is it that 'silence wraps the suffering clay,' and that relatives are apathetic—publishers dull and quiescent—and the lovers of the claret-jug, the mahogany and the sweet verses 'married to immortal time,' silent and uncomplaining!—There is nothing so simple, yet so polished,—nothing so utterly melodious, yet so sweetly sensible, as Morris's verses, to be found in the whole range of English Song writing. * * In 'earlier days,' but not in 'calmer hours,' the Bard, as he has been wont to be called, produced some verses, which 'dying (it must be admitted) he would wish to blot,'—but as years brought the snow to the head, and cool judgment to the mind, his lyrics elevated all the social subjects upon which his feelings loved to dwell with a pathetic force and simplicity to the heights of poetry; and thus the English language would have seemed incapable to accomplish. English songs became at once, through him, purely Horatian. And the lyric Muse appeared to have found words, and the blending of words, dearest to her heart. Those who have heard—for haplessly the Bard, from an extreme timidity of publication, never permitted his verses to be read—such English melodies as 'Since three score and ten,'—'The glasses sparkle on the board,'—'It's a bit of a thing,' &c. &c.—will feel that Morris wrote from the heart to the heart, and trusted all to the conveyance of that sweetest of interpreters—Music!"

Nicholas Nickleby (No. 11.) Chapman and Hall.—The reputation of Boz increases with each successive publication, but we must defer a further notice of the tendency of his writings till the conclusion of this story. The present number removes Nicholas and his family from misery to comfort, through the benevolence of two rich merchants, whose characters are sketched in Dickens' best style.

H.B.—We have five new humorous caricatures from this inimitable sketcher: his humour is so exquisitely rich, that even the parties represented cannot fail to enjoy it. 1. "A Deserter;" Lord Durham in handcuffs, marched between the grenadiers Wellington and Melbourne, with Brougham as rear-guard. 2. "The Disowned;" John Bull, a beadle, bringing a child labelled "Letter to the Queen," to Lord Brougham's door, who protests it is none of his, but confesses to "misfortunes of the kind." The Queen and one of her court perceive a strong likeness, and exclaim, "Oh, the naughty man!" 3. "A Coachman wanted;" Brougham, Durham, Wellington, and Melbourne, the candidates. All admirable likenesses. 4. "The Dis-Organist;" Lord Durham at the organ, singing, "Fury! Rage! Despair!" Lord Melbourne, with the Queen on one side, shocked at the discord; Lord Brougham glorying in having put the player's "pipes out of tune for some time;" and Roebuck blowing the bellows. 5. "Comic Pantomime;" Windsor Castle, changing, under Harlequin's wand, into the Crown Tavern, and House of Call for Cabinet Makers, with Melbourne as Harlequin, J. Russell as Columbine, Palmerston as Pantaloon, and Morpeth as Clown.

Finden's Portraits of the Female Aristocracy.

THE fifth number of this beautiful work has just made its appearance, and though it does not raise the general character of the publication (which it could scarcely do it shows no tendency to a decline in that character. Th portraits are those of the youthful Duchess of Roxburgh, Lady Viscountess Canning, and the deceased Lady of the Home Secretary, Lord John Russell; this latter portrait having been taken for the present purpose just before the lamented death of that lady. The three portraits are about equal in artistical merit, and the memoirs, as usual, include all that is required in a work of this nature.

Extract of a letter relative to the port of Aden, and the detachment recently sent to occupy it on the part of the British Government:—

"The Coote anchored at Aden on the 24th October, when the Arabs professed to know nothing of any arrangements entered into with our Government; they expressed the most violent indignation, and vowed vengeance upon the party and its leader. The latter had quietly pitched their tents upon a small hill at a little distance from the town, and the Engineer Officer who accompanied them was busily engaged in erecting a parapet wall as some security against a sudden attack. The Arabs have not only refused supplies of water and provisions, but have issued formal orders to Captain Haines to decamp immediately from their territory, and to deliver to the Bombay Authority a reply by no means complimentary, and which, as it calls everything by its plain unvarnished name, must form a very unique specimen of diplomacy."

It is the intention of Government to despatch as soon as possible additional troops to Aden.—Bombay Times, Dec. 1.

We are happy to announce to our military readers the promotion of four Majors to the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, in room of those lately raised to the rank of Major-Generals. The officers promoted are, we believe, Majors Jervis (Engineers), H. D. Robertson, Moore, and Leighton. Capts. Waddington (Engineers). Farquharson, Worthy, and Waterfield, become Majors.—Bombay Times, Nov. 28.

Major Bond, of the Artillery, has sent in a memorial to the Court of Directors, stating his claims to the honours of the Bath; and we trust that the example of this meritorious officer will induce many others, both of the Queen's and Company's Service, who have been unjustly passed over on the late occasion, to press their claims to the distinction upon the notice of the Authorities.

A rumour was very prevalent at Bombay, on 5th Dec., that a declaration of war had been issued by the Supreme Government against Burmah. The Government are fitting up the Enterprise as a war-steamer, and about despatching her with troops, it is said, to Moulmein.—Bombay Times, Dec. 6.

The approaching contest in Ava has naturally excited some sensation among those who, either on the General or Medical Staff, in the last war, lost their health so completely as to make them dread a second exposure to the climate.—Bengal Hurkaru, Nov. 18.

Accounts from Goa mention that Major Antonio Mariano de Azevedo, the Secretary to the Goa Government, was shot dead on the spot, while standing at a window with the sister of the late Baron de Sabrazo, at the house of Lieut. Corte Real, of the Portuguese Navy, where he had been invited to a party. The shot was fired from outside the house, and the assassin has not been discovered. Senhor Duraens, a Judge of the Supreme Court, at Goa, has been obliged to decamp from that city. The Archbishop, who is the President of the Goa Government, it is feared, will be obliged to resign the Presidentship, as he cannot agree with the other members in the measures they are pursuing at Goa. The Ex-Prefect, Snr Bernardo Peres da Silva, is going to Lisbon in the steamer Berenice, to represent the inhabitants of Portuguese India in the Cortes at Portugal.—Bombay Times, Dec. 5.

Camp Kurnaul, Nov. 3*d*.—We hear that the 16th Lancers and the 2d L.C. have failed to procure forage on the route indicated for the left column, and are consequently deviating from the line laid down for them, and are coming to Kurnaul to join the right column proceeding on the 7th, via Loodianah.

The greatest difficulty is and has been experienced by the whole Army in getting carriage for their baggage, provisions, and camp-equipage. The consequence is that every officer has pinched himself, more or less, and abandoned many little comforts that would have been desirable. In no instance is a double-poled tent to be seen, excepting for mess purposes; and in eight cases out of ten two officers occupy a single-poled tent. The best feeling and the greatest cheerfulness continue to prevail, and although the heat is unusually great, there is scarcely any sickness in camp.—Englishman, Nov. 15*th*.

Colonel Arnold is stated to be dangerously ill at Meerut, having broken a blood vessel in the lungs. Copious bleeding had been resorted to, but by the last accounts he was in a very precarious state.—Agra Ukhbar, Oct. 25.

There exists, we regret to say, considerable discontent and turbulence in the district around Sawuntwaree, and which upon a recent occasion became so daring as to demand the interposition of the Military power. On the morning of the 5th inst., Capt. Duff, 16th N.I., with Lt. Munro and Ens. Gibbard, marched from Vingorla with a detachment of that corps, for the purpose of assisting the civil authorities at Sawuntwaree. On the 6th Capt. Duff succeeded in capturing the fort, and releasing the Rajah, his son, and the Prime Minister. About ninety of the armed insurgents were made prisoners, and handed over to Mr. Spooner, the Political Agent. On the 8th the detachment returned to Vingorla, and tranquillity appeared perfectly restored.—Bombay Times, Dec. 5.

The force ordered to proceed against Jhansee is to consist of three regiments of Infantry, the 3d N.I., from Saugor, and two regiments from Mhow; one of Cavalry, the 7th L.C., from Cawnpoor, and a battering train from Saugor. This serious preparation will however, in all probability, intimidate the recusant party in Jhansee into full submission, and unconditional acceptance of whatever terms the Agent, Mr. J. Frazer, may offer; so that the affair will terminate in a mere demonstration.—Agra Ukhbar, Nov. 22.

Two Grand Crosses, seven K. C. B.'s, forty-one C.B.'s, these are the honours which have been lately conferred on the Indian Army. These marks of distinction will doubtless prove grateful to the Army, as the conferring of them serves to show that, though distant, they are not forgotten by their Sovereign or her advisers.—Calcutta Courier.

Among the recent Orders of Government for the guidance of the army of the Indus, is one which may be noticed a little prominently. By it the army is restricted from killing bullocks while in the Sikh territories! We thought the day had gone by, when foolish prejudices should be regarded, at least by men with arms in their hands, but here we see a British host is to reverence them. We might quote something here about summer clouds and special wonder, but the foolery of the order is too disgusting for a serious, and too sad for a light, mood—we must wait the action of opinion to wear away such absurdity.—Ibid.

If any bear resemblance to such, they have invariably arisen from extreme obstinacy and insubordination, and which have ever been industriously magnified to answer the dishonest ends of slander: and, when we trace the course of calumny, we find that the object is usually a British Officer, as famed for gallantry as remarkable for talents and achievements, and discover the invariably marked humanity of his conduct, although perhaps prominent as a rigid disciplinarian. Much could be brought forward to establish the eminent character of the higher ranks in our Navy, and undeniable proof adduced, yet some more conspicuous for their virtues readily occur, and give pleasure in refuting calumny, by enumerating them as living testimonies, to substantiate truth, integrity and renown; in undeceiving ignorance respecting these bright professional ornaments, enhancing the lustre of our country, by whose death, if the nation has suffered, we can with pride refer to their deeds as written upon the "briny deep," who have spent their energies, not in the tented field, but on the often blood-stained ocean, for the cause of glory.

Can anything more forcibly impress the mind with estimation for the British Officer than the example of the late Admiral the Honourable Sir Henry Blackwood, who, if he knew an officer to lay even a finger upon a boy in a summary and undue way, so that a blow could be construed or conceived, such officer would be instantly dismissed the fleet under his command. Nor was he less strict and impartial in other matters. An officer in the performance of that nature of duty, which precluded the seaman from wearing an outside jacket, could not avail himself of any privilege which the men could not enjoy, not even in the case of his own son, the present gallant Captain F. Blackwood (who is an honourable impression of his lamented father), with whom he was most tenacious for that discipline which has reared an intelligent and indefatigable officer for the country, as fully proved by his late service in India, for which he has received his post rank. Thus, as in many other instances of noble conduct, did this gallant and celebrated officer emulate one of his renowned predecessors, Lord Collingwood, by insisting on the orders of the youngest Midshipman in the fleet being as diligently obeyed as those even given by himself; but, at the same time, so averse was this estimable officer to any species of harshness, that he has been known most severely to rebuke any officer who would even speak unkindly to any seaman—and, although being a most just disciplinarian, yet he would frequently request the Flag Captain * to induce the officer, who might have made a report calculated to bring a mariner under the infliction of punishment, to intercede in the prisoner's behalf when brought up for chastisement. This ingenuity of mercy, on the part of Admiral Blackwood, although a rigid officer, was often productive of, and invariably succeeded in, gaining good will and promoting order. Many other instances of similar humanity might be recited of officers commanding in the Royal Navy, but digression must, as much as is consistent with the nature of this paper, be avoided. Among other examples of peculiar attention to the sailor, we may adduce the instance of the late Honourable Sir Robert Spencer, who, upon occasion of an officer taking a refractory man slightly by the ear, in order to reprove him, declared that he would not allow a blow to be even implied by any officer to a man who sailed under him. That officer, who was remarkable for rigid discipline and energy, and for whom Sir R. S. had applied for by name, was requested upon that account to quit the ship; although from the testimonials given in his favour, another vessel was procured for him, and subsequently promotion. The instances of the predominance of this feeling are as numerous as opposite sentiments in the trading marine. Indeed, scarcely a record to the contrary can be produced. Attempts have been made by exaggeration and falsehood to reflect disgrace upon the conduct and character of several distinguished officers; amongst others, Lord W. Paget, from an incident which took place some years ago, has been traduced, the manly defence of whom not only proved his pure innocence of any acts of severity, but also gave England a palpable instance of the scrutinizing accuracy with which anything in the shape of punishment is examined by the Lords of the Admiralty; and how impossible it would be to infringe their restrictions; it also showed, without ostentation, or a parade of humanity, how false were the accusations against the Navy and its laws! proving that even a nobleman of one of the most ancient and distinguished families of Great Britain would not be permitted to transgress. For far different traits is his Lordship known; and the accident of the youth's death resulted no more from the punishment pay as it now is—and that Officers, as well as the men, should be rationed on board, making from the Officers' pay, as from the soldier's (while afloat), a fixed and equitable deduction. We cannot conceive any difficulty to exist in this measure; the owners of a transport, or whoever supplies the men now, should, in the tender for them, also tender for the accommodation and rationing of the Officers and their families on proper terms. We would respectfully call the attention of the authorities to this point.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—As you have been the means of correcting many abuses, I am anxious to bring under your observation the hardships an officer suffers in being compelled to find himself on board transports; for instance, the 9th Regiment, who went to Ceylon last year, each officer had to pay, I have every reason to believe, nearly 50*l.* for provisions. I ask you now, Sir, can an Ensign, who has hardly 4*s.* 6*d.* a-day (after paying band, mess, and subscriptions) meet this? The things he would have to provide, at a low calculation, on being ordered to such a station, independent of the former sum, would at least amount to 40*l.*, to say nothing of the various debts he would have to pay previous to embarkation. Would it not be an act of justice for Government to pay his expenses while on board ship, deducting a certain proportion of his pay—say one-third? At present he is driven into debt, if depending on his pay, with hardly a chance of ever getting out of it, except by selling out, and leaving himself and family destitute, after wrecking his constitution in the service of his country.

Take the case of an officer, promoted from the ranks (a thing of weekly occurrence now), suppose to a corps in India,—how is he to get his outfit and join his corps within two months after appointment? You are aware that the fees on commission, band, and mess subscriptions, swallow up his first three months' pay. Can he possibly, without friends, join his regiment under the present system, without being very much involved? and what he can do if a married man with a family, I cannot fancy; but feel quite sure that, after the gloss of the thing has worn off, he will curse his stars for having been so fortunate as to get promoted at all. A married Subaltern from half-pay, without money, is quite as badly off, if not worse. Why are not the fees on commissions done away with? the Royal Navy pay none; let this be done, and a scale, similar to the one fixed in freight ships, be brought into play—with this difference, that it should apply to the officer's wife and family as well as himself. At present, if an officer is ordered a passage for himself and family in a freight ship, he pays 9*l.* or 10*l.* as it may be, but must give whatever is demanded by the owners for his wife and children; it would be better for Government to make a heavy charge themselves than subject officers to the impositions of merchant Captains.

As I have already suffered, and shall soon do so again, under the present system, I hope you will excuse me for taking up so much of your time, and trust that you will use your already successful pen in wiping away some of these abuses.

29th January. A MARRIED SUB.

PRIVATE letters from Bombay all agree in stating, that the embarkation of the troops for the North West Frontier, via the Indus, was a scene of unusual confusion, and reflected no credit on the Commander or his subordinates. One troop of Horse Artillery was embarked without its horses, and one transport was putting to sea without water! Things used to be better ordered in the olden days; but a long peace has put the Military machine out of working order. It is to be hoped the derangement may be but temporary, and that the force in the field may be better managed than it seems to have been at starting.—Bombay was in December last destitute of troops, and two companies of the 6th regiment, from Poona, had been ordered to Bombay, to furnish the requisite Guards.

WE most heartily congratulate the Officers of the Army upon the incalculable advantages which they must derive from such an able exposition of their services, and paramount claims upon the nation's gratitude, as set forth in that valuable and most interesting publication, the "NEW ARMY LIST." We have perused and re-perused this most admirable work with indescribable feelings of delight; and, in truth, we have no hesitation in saying, that a more correct and perfect work never issued from the press. The notes are unexceptionable; those pertaining to the Royal Engineers and the Royal Marines, for which we have devoted considerable space, are particularly interesting, which, together with the others throughout the work, tell a tale of long and gallant services altogether unrequited.

The New Army List will undoubtedly do more towards bringing about an improvement in the promotion and pay of the serving Officers, and an adequate retirement for the worn-out veterans, than their best friends, both in and out of Parliament, could have accomplished in half a century.

The Officers of the Army, Ordnance, and Royal Marines, may feel assured of our making ample use of the New Army List, with the view of showing up their great and undoubted—but hitherto neglected—claims for public consideration.

In conclusion, we most strongly recommend the New Army List to all who feel interested in the Service, and we sincerely hope that the author will receive that reward which his labours to benefit the service to which he belongs so justly entitle him.

Notes to the Royal Engineers.

Sir A. De Butts at the sieges of Toulon, Bastia, and Calvi, and favourably mentioned by Lord Hood in his despatches on the surrender of Bastia.

An article on Courts-Martial in the East India Company's Army, which has appeared in Parbury's "Oriental Herald," has been made by a contemporary a peg on which to hang some crude notions, which, we learn from letters addressed to us, and requiring that we should animadvert on the matter, have given much offence to Officers of the Army. We have not patience to go through, seriatim, the extraordinary and utterly unmilitary objections urged against Courts-Martial,—we can only say that they are futile. Soldiers and sailors will scarcely be convinced that trial by their peers "is conducted with too little regard to those constitutional principles which should actuate a Court of Honour no less than one of Law." But let us hear the conclusion of the whole affair :—

"Away, then, with the cant which would pretend that Courts of Honour, released from the restrictions which help to make other men honest, are a whit more just in their decisions than Courts of Law. In the one case we have a just and beneficent judge, with no professional prejudices to mislead him, whose duty and desire it is to unravel the case from the technicalities and delusion by which it has been surrounded by the respective advocates; expounding the principles of law and justice to the jury who are to try it; leaving ordinarily nothing to their jurisdiction but the value of the respective testimony adduced on either side. On the other, we have too often a well-meaning, but not headed disciplinarian, furious whenever the honour of his profession would seem to have been impeached; unacquainted with the means of evolving the truth from a mass of conflicting testimony, and often participating in the prejudices of the prosecutor, for want of those analytical powers of mind which enable a puisne judge to decide in a moment between truth and falsehood. Until Courts of Honour, therefore, are differently constituted, it cannot be difficult to ascertain in which justice, in the best and truest acceptation of the term, is most likely to be administered."

Really this is too much for our risible powers. Does the writer wish that Courts-Martial should not try Officers? We much fear that, with the abolition of the present Courts of Honour, the chivalrous character of the Officer would dwindle into that of a special-pleading knave, or a soldier depending on the quirks of civil law for acquittal or conviction.

NOTWITHSTANDING the ample discussion which the "state of the Navy" has lately undergone, the present week has produced two more pamphlets upon the subject,—an elaborate article in the Monthly Chronicle for February, occupying no less space than fifteen closely-printed pages, entitled "Grievances of the Navy;" besides a notice in Parliament for a motion on the subject. One of the pamphlets contains a reclamation by the "Flag Officer," or his Philo, who seems indignant that Sir John Barrow has not included Captain Napier in his censure. There is nothing else remarkable, except that the Rear-Admiral's character appears to have been quite mistaken by those who attributed his alarms to fear; for, we are informed, that he is not only a respectable officer and a worthy religious man, but a terrible fire-eater; indeed he volunteers "to lose his life to defeat his enemy, and he looks upon our present Admiralty as such." So we would have their Lordships beware. He gives us one piece of information, the advantage of which to his argument —or his party—we cannot perceive;—we allude than if it had been inflicted a twelvemonth before the chastisement was merited, and was no more than what a father would have awarded to his son.

Were we to examine the public characters of the distinguished officers, who have formed, and now constitute the Lords of the Admiralty, we should find them on less prominent for their humanity during their active and arduous service, than they are now jealously attentive to restrict punishment; invariably encouraging those officers who seldom resort to any degree of it, and rebuking those who have an occasion to put it in practice. In tracing those of them who have recently held command, we find them ever guided by entire consideration and forbearance. The liberty of referring to names has been assumed with the view of bringing forward undeniable facts to attest truth. It is lamentable that the Navy should require to speak against calumny. It is the fashion, in accordance with the spirit of the day, which slanders whatever is faultless and perfect, of designing people, whose ignorance is but equalled by their spleen, to assert the common commission of cruel acts in the Navy, which would disgrace the annals of slavery: secured by their obscurity, and supported by exciting the curiosity of the uninformed, they diffuse those falsehoods which honour, dignity, and humanity, cannot but contemn. It may, perhaps, be supposed that they are too despicable to be noticed; but, fraught as they are with the adder's venum they merit the adder's fate, and should be crushed and destroyed, on account of the active nature and virulence of the poison they diffuse. The slander of maligners should be refuted, falsity met by truth, and misrepresentation and doubt removed by testimony. Were this made a principal care, the present false system would, almost without an effort on the part of the Government, be gradually changed; and it would be almost as difficult to prevail on the mariner to join the trading marine from the Navy, as it now is to induce him to join the latter from the former service; whilst the measures which we purpose to propound would also keep the trading marine supplied. But whilst the present misrepresentation is tolerated, the evil will continue, and all attempts to counteract it will be useless. Too long have the seamen of the trading marine been victims to these machinations; they have now to hear them contradicted. Observe the enviable situation of the Navy seamen, secure from ill-treatment, oppression and neglect, with the certainty of reward and future provision—and the insecurity of the trading mariner: recount his grievances, oppression, neglect, and future prospects. Many seamen of the Navy certainly leave it for the merchant service, under a false impression, or a love of novelty; seeing the apparent unrestraint, and the seeming laxity of discipline, they try it, but soon, from experience, become undeceived as to the true nature of the service; they persevere in their course, not liking to retract, for nature ever assumes the credit of infallibility, and we disdain to acknowledge ourselves wrong; the seaman dislikes to retrace his steps; and, swayed by the influence and example of others, continues in a service he disapproves; or, still led by novelty, he is drawn into a foreign one where he remains. Thus does every species of evil and bad results to our Navy arise from the mal-organization of, and ill-treatment in the trading marine. So are disaffection, restlessness, and distrust, inspired, destroying and alienating the resources of our National Navy. That a system which may be so easily re-modelled, so readily altered, should be still permitted to continue, is strange and unwise.

We have, in their relations, examined the Royal Navy and its seamen, the Merchant Service and its seamen, in their nature, calling, and treatment; we have seen that they, although distinctly employed, ought to be one, but are ever kept remote and estranged from each other; and that, to blend them, the trading mariners must be encouraged, and a similarity of rewards, comforts, and future provision must be proffered to them, and be taken more entirely under the protection of the Government. This would cause an identification of interests, and the trading mariner would consider himself actually lent to the merchant service, and consider the Navy of his country as the legitimate scene of his endeavours; by this means, the slanderous reports of artifice and malevolence would fail of effecting their object of misleading, being at once refuted and frustrated.

SHEFFIELD PLATED DISH COVERS.

—Entire SETS of DISH COVERS, plain and shaped, with rich silver mountings, handles, and shields, finished within the last month, are now submitted to inspection at JOHN COWIE'S SHOW ROOM, 11, Holles-street, Cavendish-square, warranted of Sheffield Manufacture, as J. C. can certify from his experience of twenty-four years in the trade, that no plated articles can be relied on but those manufactured at Sheffield. Sheffield has for centuries been celebrated for the manufacture of Plated Goods and Cutlery. Soup and Sauce Tureens, and every other requisite to complete the table service.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:—

"Sheffield, Oct. 11th, 1827.

"DEAR SIR,—Will you send me twelve dozes of Solvent; I find my sale rapidly increasing. The superiority of the Rotterdam Solvent over all other preparations for the entire removal of Corns and Bunions, is becoming generally known and appreciated. Sir, since I last wrote to you, I have heard of several remarkable instances of its efficacy. One I may give you, as I have the permission so to do. Mr. Whitham, a respectable manufacturer, residing in Bridge-street, Sheffield, has been a great sufferer from Corns for the last fifty years; hearing of the Rotterdam Solvent, he was induced to try it, and from the great benefit and relief experienced from its first application, he resolved to persevere in its use, and, in a comparatively short time, was completely cured, and continues so to this day. This gentleman will be happy to give any information to those who may personally apply. I am, dear Sir, yours truly, T. LOFTHOUSE."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous; it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Prepared and sold by J. A. Sharwood, 85, Bishopsgate Without, London, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each; and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; and by most Medicine Vendors.—Any Vendor not having it will procure it on its being ordered.

FAMILIES, TRAVELLERS, MASTERS OF SHIPS, AND SPORTSMEN, Should never be Without
MOXON'S

EFFERVESCENT MAGNESIAN APERIENT,

decidedly the most generally useful Medicine ever offered to the public.

The unrivalled efficacy of the Magnesian in all Disorders of the Stomach and Bowels has obtained for it the uniform recommendation and approval of the Faculty.

This unique preparation unites all the active powers of the most approved saline purgatives with the palateable qualities of a glass of soda water. In torpid state of the liver and bowels, bilious affections, cholera morbus, pains in the head, or disordered state of the stomach, nausea, and violent sickness, it will be found a safe, speedy, and effectual remedy. It gives instantaneous relief in the heartburn, is of great service in preventing piles, fistula, and gout, and in alleviating the febrile symptoms attendant on the latter affection. Derangement of the stomach and head, &c., arising from too free indulgence in the gratifications of the table, is speedily removed by a tea-spoonful taken early in the morning.

Prepared only by BENJAMIN MOXON, Chymist, Hull.

Wholesale Agents—Barclay and Sons, London; J. and R. Raimes, Edinburgh and Dublin. Sold wholesale at all the Medicine Warehouses in London, and retail by all Venders of Medicines throughout the kingdom, in bottles at 2s. 9d.; 4s. 6d.; and in family bottles at 11s., containing the quantity of five of the 2s. 9d. size, a saving of 20 per cent. to the purchaser.

N.B.—Be careful to observe that "Moxon and Smith, Chymists, Hull," is engraved on the stamp, without which it cannot be genuine.

May be had as above, that very popular and much-esteemed preparation of Sarsaparilla, the

CONCENTRATED COMPOUND DECOCTION,
Prepared by B. Moxon, Chymist, Hull.

"One table-spoonful added to a pint of pure water readily forms a pint of the Compound Decoction; and, in justice to the preparer, we must say, appears to be more impregnated with the virtues of the ingredients than the decoction made in the usual way."—See Gazette of Health and Practical Medicine for January, 1829.

In bottles at 4s. 6d., 12s., and 22s., the latter equivalent to 32 pints of the Compound Decoction of the London Pharmacopœia.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA,

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF,

originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfumer superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would indicate a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 2s. 6d., 7s., and 14s. each.

SARSAPARILLA.

FRANKS'S SARSINE PASTE, or ALKALINE COMPOUND OF SARSAPARILLA.

—This Compound contains the active principle of Sarsaparilla, in combination with other Vegetable alteratives and tonics in the most pure and concentrated form. It will keep in all climates, and not deteriorate by age.

In Rheumatic Gout, and all Neuralgic Affections—in Dyspepsia, Eruptions of the Skin, Scrofulous Affections, enlarged Glands, Morbid Secretions, &c.—in General Debility, and where the constitution has been impaired by the continued use or abuse of Mercury—and, in fine, wherever it is desirable to administer the full benefit of Sarsaparilla, this form of that valuable Vegetable will be found of the greatest service.

Prepared only by GEORGE FRANKS, Surgeon, 99, Blackfriars Road, London; and may be had of all Wholesale and Retail Patent Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom, in Bottles at 4s. 6d., and 11s. each.

MR. FRANKS may be consulted daily until Two o'clock.

CAUTION.—The Public are protected against Counterfeits by the name "George Franks, Blackfriars Road," being engraved on the Government Stamp attached to each Package.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, OR PEARL DENTIFRICE.

A VEGETABLE WHITE POWDER, prepared from Oriental Herbs of the most Delicious Odour and Sweetness, and free from any mineral or pernicious ingredient; it eradicates the Tartar from the Teeth, removes decayed Spots, preserves the Enamel, and fixes the Teeth firmly in their sockets, rendering them BEAUTIFULLY WHITE. Being an anti-Scorbutic, it eradicates the Scurvy from the Gums, strengthens, braces, and renders them of a healthy red; it removes unpleasant tastes from the Mouth, which often remain after fevers, taking medicine, &c.; and imparts a delightful fragrance to the breath.

Price 2s. 9d. per box, duty included.

ROWLAND'S ALSANA EXTRACT

immediately relieves the most violent Toothache, Gum Boils, Swelled Face, &c.; it is also an excellent Stomachic, in cases of Flatulency, Spasmodic Affections, &c., and gives instantaneous relief. Price 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 10s. 6d. per bottle.

 Notice.—The Name and Address of the Proprietors, A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, Hatton Garden, London, is engraved on the Government Stamp, which is pasted on each; also printed in RED on the Wrapper in which the article is enclosed.

†‡† Be sure to ask for "ROWLAND'S."

Sold by them, and by respectable Perfumers and Medicine Venders.

THE NEW WATERPROOF CLOTHING

—W. BERDOE, Tailor, 62, Cornhill, was the first who publicly introduced an invaluable discovery for rendering WATERPROOF every description of WOOLLEN CLOTH, &c., WITHOUT IMPEDING THE FREE ESCAPE OF PERSPIRATION, an objection so justly urged against the unsightly and unhealthy Mackintosh. W. B., after a long and extensively practical experience in connexion with the subject, and having fully ascertained the relative merits of the various systems now before the public, can confidently vouch for the superiority of the British Waterproofing Company's process (432, West Strand).

Waterproof Great and Frock Coats, Pilot Coats, Cloaks, Capes, Trousers, &c., made of every description of material; also the much approved CORRINGTON FROCKS, a new waterproof garment, particularly gentlemanly in appearance, light, and convenient. A variety kept as specimens, at 69, CORNHILL.

THE MODEL OF THE BATTLE OF WATERLOO,

Is now EXHIBITED at the EGYPTIAN HALL, PICCADILLY, by brilliant artificial light, constantly illuminated from Two o'clock in the afternoon, and throughout the day in dark or unfavourable weather.

Open from Ten in the Morning until Nine in the Evening, without intermission. Admission, One Shilling.

AT a GENERAL MEETING of the Subscribers to a Testimonial to be presented to Admiral Sir EDWARD CODRINGTON, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., &c., &c., &c., in grateful recollection of his constant, able, and unwearied exertions in the Common House of Parliament, to obtain for every rank in the Navy a just remuneration for their services, in common with the other servants of the Crown, was held at the Royal Naval Annuitant Society's Offices, at Devonport, on the 26th of January, 1839.

Rear-Admiral R. THOMAS, R.N., in the Chair.

The following Resolutions were proposed and carried unanimously:—

That the Testimonial to be presented to Admiral Sir Edward Codrington be a Plateau and Epergne, with a suitable Inscription.

That the following Gentlemen, being members of the Committee, and, in London, they be requested to purchase the before-mentioned Plate, viz.:—Lieutenants G. F. Somerville, J. S. Lean, C. Thurtell, and Mr. Thos. Willey.

That the Chairman of the Committee, Rear-Admiral Thomas, be requested to address a letter on behalf of the Subscribers, to accompany the presentation of the Plate.

That a sufficient number of the Lists of the Subscribers, with the Address of Admiral Thomas, and the reply of Sir Edward Codrington, be printed and circulated.

R. THOMAS, Chairman.

That the warmest thanks of this meeting are eminently due to Rear-Admiral Thomas, the Chairman, for his services in the Chair, upon the present as well as all other occasions.

G. F. SOMERVILLE, Secretary.

BY ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

THE NEW PATENT METALLIC FOLDING-HINGED BEDSTEADS, COUCHES, COTS, &c.

To Officers of the Army and Navy and of the Hon E I C Service, Writers, Cadets, Surgeons, Passengers proceeding to the East or West Indies, these Bedsteads are particularly suited, as, in addition to their other advantages, for warm climates, they possess the inestimable quality of requiring neither Mattress nor Bolster, and can be used during the voyage as Swinging Cots or Ships' Sofas For the barrack room they will be found superior to all other inventions of the kind

To Emigrants to the Canadas, Van Diemen's Land, Sydney, and South Australia, they are invaluable.

They are strongly recommended to all who may have occasion for a number of Beds on a sudden emergency; as, from their folding perfectly flat, they can be put aside when out of use in less than one-twentieth part of the room occupied by the common French Bedsteads.

Prices —£3. 3s. £4. 10s. £5. 5s £6. 16s. 6d and upwards.

An inspection of the above, at the Patentees', is with confidence solicited, where alone they may be had, together with every article of Camp or Cabin Furniture.

Passages engaged, Baggage shipped, and Cabins fitted up by experienced workmen. Drawings, with Estimates, forwarded into the country by the post, by addressing, post paid, to E. JOHNSON, 145, Leadenhall-street, near the East India House

PORTSMOUTH, Feb. 15th.—(From our own Correspondent).—There has not been a single arrival during the week, except the Gladiator, New York packet, and she was four days behind her time. The signal-men and the officers of the Customs are on the look-out for Barham, Victor, Pelican, Pylades, and Wolf. Some of them will proceed to the eastward to be paid off, when Vernon and Winchester will be ordered for commission. Clio and Childers have been taken in dock to be repaired. Pantaloon has been in to have her copper cleaned, and make good a slight defect. Salamander's defects were completed on Monday, and she went to the North Coast of Spain on Tuesday. Ætna, Seaflower, and Cracker are the only vessels fitting in the port. A very fine cutter, the Snipe, will be out of the hands of the dock-yard people by the end of the month, and probably commissioned on 1st March. Volunteers still continue to join Britannia and Victory. Owing to large drafts of Supernumeraries having been sent out in the Ganges, Electra, and Daphne, the party on board the flag-ship are reduced to about 400; possibly the half of them will be put into the Revenge directly she is commissioned. No day is yet fixed for the launching of the Indus: she is painted and quite ready; the first spring-tides in March will no doubt be the time. The Cassion has been taken in dock this day. The Waterwitch is to be moved out about the 28th inst. Ships in Port—Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Pantaloon, Seaflower, Ætna, Cracker, Emerald, Messenger, in Harbour.

PLYMOUTH, Feb. 15th.—(From our own Correspondent).—10th.—Sailed Hercules, 74, Captain E. Barnard, for the West Indies; she is to take on board a regiment either at Barbadoes or Jamaica, and convey them to Halifax. Also sailed Spitfire st.-v., Lieut.-Com. Shambler, for W. Indies, to relieve the Flamer st.-v., Lieut.-Com. J. M. Potbury, ordered home. Meteor st.-v., Lieut.-Com. R. D. Pritchard, sailed for Liverpool, with stores for the packets on that station, and will return to this port with newly-raised men for the Navy. Arrived the Tagus peninsular steamer, from Falmouth; she completed her coals, and returned to that port the same evening. Swale, tender to the Astræa, arrived from Falmouth with unserviceable stores. 11th—Arrived Lapwing packet, 6, Lieut.-Com. Francis R. Coghlan, from Falmouth. 12th—Arrived Kite st.-v., Lieut.-Com. Hosenson, from Sheerness, with the Hecla st.-v., on their way to Glasgow, where Hecla will have her boilers, &c., filled. Kite proceeds from thence to Holyhead to relieve the Gleaner packet, in want of repair. The Hannaxe tender arrived from Holyhead and Pembroke, with stores. 13th—Arrived the Salamander st.-v., from Portsmouth, in charge of Mr. Bellamy, and part of the crew of the Athol, on her way to the coast of Spain; on their arrival there the crew of the Gorgon steam-vessel will be transferred to the Salamander, and the Gorgon will return to this port, where she will remain till the Windsor Castle, 74, is ready, which ship she will accompany to Pembroke, to be taken to pieces. 14th—Sailed Rochester and Lively, tenders; the former for Sheerness, and the other for Portsmouth, with stores for the Dock-yards. Implacable, 74, Capt. E. Harvey, was hauled into dock to have her bottom scrubbed. 16th—A Court Martial is to assemble this day on board the Royal Adelaide to try the Master of the Lapwing; it is said on the charge of quitting that vessel while at single anchor, without leave. Stirling Castle, 74, is to be fitted for a convict ship, instead of Spartiate. Bellona, 74, has been brought down the harbour to supply the place of the Windsor Castle, ordinary depot. In Harbour—Royal Adelaide, San Josef, Implacable, Acorn, Salamander st.-v., Alonzo transport. In the Sound—Lapwing and Hecate, and Kite steam-vessels.

The following circular has been sent to the officers of the Rl. Marines, requiring them to state their period of service, and the length of time they may have been on half-pay. This is reported to be at the instance of the Naval and Military Commission, for their guidance in their forthcoming recommendation to Her Majesty, through the House of Commons, for awarding rank, &c., to those old servants who have borne their fair share of duty, both abroad and at home, and whose ubiquitous and varied life has fully entitled them to their distinctive badge (the Globe), and verified to its extent their truly appropriate motto, "Per mare, per terram."

Royal Marine Office, 25th Jan. 1839.

SIR,—I am directed by the Deputy Adjutant-General to request you will call upon the Officers of each rank at the division under your command, and also upon the Officers embarked in such ships as may happen now to be at your port, as well as those on command in England and recruiting, to state whether they have, at any period, been on half-pay, and how long, and that you will be pleased to make such report as early as possible.

I have, &c. J. WILSON, A. A. Gen.

To the Colonel Commandant.

Com. Denham, on surveying service, Liverpool, has resigned, as the Dock Committee there declined giving him the means of saving lives and property during the awful gales on that coast.

The Warrior, 74, receiving-hulk at Woolwich, is to be fitted for a convict ship, also the Hebe, 42, in her room.

Lieut. J. M. Mottley, First of the Dee, has been tried by Court-Martial at Jamaica, on charges preferred by Com. Sherer of that vessel, and after two day's sitting, was acquitted. Mr. Pinhorn, Purser of the Modeste, assisted the Lieutenant in his defence. Lieut. Mottley has since joined the Serpent.

Serjt. Comton, and privates Godby and Flemming, Rl. Marines, were unfortunately drowned on Tuesday, by the accidental upsetting of a boat, in which they were returning from Sheerness to Chatham. The First and Second Mates of the Badger, revenue cutter, and three of her crew, narrowly escaped the same fate recently at North Yarmouth, by a sea filling the boat.

The Buffalo at Chatham, is ordered to be again brought forward, to bring spars from New Zealand.

Mr. Banes, foreman of shipwrights, Chatham, has been superannuated on 135*l.* per annum.

Sailed the Amity for Bermuda and Bahamas.

Arrived to fit for convicts, Marquis of Hastings and Joseph Fenton, for Malta and the Ionian Islands, and Royal Sovereign for St. Helena and Cape.

The Carron steamer is docked and repairing at Deptford.

Mr. D. McDowall Gordon, Midshipman, has passed his examination in seamanship, on board the Victory.

Color-Serjeant Charles Gillatt, Rl. Marines, has been awarded the medal, and gratuity of 15*l.*, for long and meritorious good conduct in the service. He is at present in Spain.

H.M. BRIG WANDERER.—From the Bahama Observer, of 8th Dec.—"On 28th Nov., at eight A.M., while the Wanderer was cruising off the Isle of Pines, under close-reefed top-sails, on the larboard tack, wind blowing very fresh from the northward, a brig was seen to windward under the same sail, and from her appearance was taken for either a French or Spanish man-of-war. Nine, wind blowing more moderate, made more sail and gained gradually on the brig—a heavy head-sea running at the time. From this time until noon, as the breeze moderated, the pressure of canvass was increased; a barque was reported to the southward; the Wanderer showed her colours—the barque answered by showing English, and the brig, which was at this time full four miles dead to windward, hoisted American colours, and then began to make sail. The Wanderer closing upon her, she tacked, evidently desirous of not being overtaken. These manœuvres gave rise to strong suspicions that she was a slaver; and at 40 minutes after 12 the Wanderer tacked in chase. At 50 minutes after three, finding the slaver gaining upon her, and observing that she had cut away her stern boat, and hauled down the American colours, the hammocks were piped down, and all sail set that could be upon a wind. The chase continued until half-past five the next morning, when, after an effective shot, the brig was captured. During the night the chase frequently altered her course (always when a gun was fired). After midnight, the moon going down, it was difficult to keep her in sight, and had it not been for a very excellent night telescope she must have escaped. The Wanderer, while in chase, split her flying jib and lost it. The latter was taken in and another was set in the short time of nine minutes; an evidence of the alertness of our sea men when in active service. The prize is a fine brig of 276 tons, and having on board 214 slaves when captured, but we are informed upwards of 500 when she left the coast. She sails uncommonly fast, and reports having escaped, on the coast, from Her Majesty's vessels, the Pylades, Curlew, and Fair Rosamond. The Wanderer was in chase upwards of 19 hours, having run upwards of 160 miles before capturing her. After her capture, in bringing her to this port, the brig had frequently to shorten sail to enable the Wanderer to keep her company."

Lieut. Stone, R.N., son of the Master Shipwright, Chatham dock-yard, has been appointed Harbour-Master, Port of London, vice Lieut. Mayott, R.N., deceased.

On 2d inst. the Galatea, a large Portuguese store-ship, other [illegible] was lying off the dock-yard at Lisbon, was discovered to be on fire. Boats from H.M.S. Donegal and Scylla, and from the French ships-of-war in the Tagus, immediately put off to their assistance. The French, in their eagerness to outdo the English, jumped upon the hot decks and began to climb up the shrouds, for the purpose of cutting away the yards and rigging, a feat in which, of course, John Bull would not be left behind: before many minutes, however, the columns of flame, which began to shoot upwards through the hatchways, gave them a warning to quit their lofty tenement, of which it is lucky they availed themselves in time, for they had scarcely got down into their boats again when the decks gave way with a tremendous crash, and the whole of the masts and rigging took fire. In the mean time the Artillery, which had been brought from the French and English ships, kept firing into the hull below water-mark, and at last, just as the whole had become one vivid flame, the masts fell over, the burning mass suddenly sank, and in one moment the lurid glare of the conflagration was extinguished, and the pale light of the moon alone illuminated the scene. Amongst the officers present were Capt. Drake, of the Donegal, the Hon. Capt. Denman, of the Scylla, and Lt. Langtry. The prevalent belief is that, as the vessel was about to be fitted out to take convicts to the penal settlements on the coast of Africa, their friends set her on fire with the view of delaying their departure.

Since the order to increase the crews of the ships in ordinary, 150 seamen (not 30 only, as stated by a contemporary) have been received on board the San Josef at Plymouth—upwards of 100 of them are able seamen.

In our last, a paragraph incorrectly stated that a basin was begun in Devonport dock-yard, which is untrue; a plan has been laid before the Admiralty for the construction of one, and no doubt it will be brought before Parliament this session, and if a sum is granted for that purpose, the plan will be carried into effect; but even then it will be some time before it is commenced, as the Stirling Castle, the ship ordered to be fitted for the use of the convicts who are to be employed on that work, will not be ready to receive them for two or three months.

The following Midshipmen passed for Lieutenants at the Naval College on Tuesday:—Messrs. T. B. Girdlestone, Fred. W. Horton, Geo. S. Berens, C. H. Baskerville, David McD. Gordon, Foster Brooke, F. E. Forbes, Lumley W. Peyton, P. McK. Godfrey, John Wilson, Geo. Newcomben, T. E. Symonds, C. C. Grey, W. F. W. Parkinson.

Lt. Parks, R.N., who was suspended for firing into Mr. Barlow Moore's yacht on the Thames, has been reinstated.

COAST GUARD.—On the morning of the 10th inst. the Harpy rev.-c. chased and forced the Arethusa of Cawsand, a smuggling boat, to throw her cargo of contraband goods overboard—159 tubs of spirits were secured and lodged in the Custom-house at Plymouth.—On the morning of the 10th inst. the Royal George rev.-c. chased the Phabe, French smuggling vessel, and forced her to destroy her cargo—a few tubs have been picked up along shore. The Phebe has been brought into Weymouth, with her crew, consisting of one Englishman (Harry Hansford) and six Frenchmen.—A boat, with 70 tubs of spirits, was seized by the Coast Guard officers at Hove near Brighton, late in the evening of the 7th inst. She had been towed across by a vessel, and then cut adrift without any men in her.—The Guard boat of the Cameleon rev.-c. fell in with, and chased a boat off the old Castle on the Weymouth station, on the night of the 12th inst., which was towing a raft of tubs. The boat and six men were secured, and the raft of 176 tubs picked up on the spot.—The boats of the Eagle and Cameleon rev.-cutters picked up, on the 6th inst., 126 tubs about four miles to the eastward of Portland. The boat which was to have brought them ashore was found bottom up, and the goods floating round her; and the crew are supposed to have been drowned. Fifty-four other tubs have been picked up subsequently along the Weymouth district, being a part of the same cargo.—A seizure of 68 tubs was made on the night of the 8th inst., by the Coast Guard at Gerrap's Bay, in the Falmouth district, which the smugglers had assembled in a large body to endeavour to land.—The Adelaide rev.-c., on the Hastings station, whilst cruising off Dungeness, chased and captured the John of Rye smuggling vessel on the 8th inst. Her cargo was destroyed [illegible] chase, and having had sinkers made fast to every [illegible] Esq., Hon. [illegible] W. Young, Mr. T. Heale, Com. Rowband, Rob. INFANTRY.

Coldstream Guards, 2d Batt.—Capt. Halkett is appointed Military Secretary at Toronto.

On the 10th Jan. Col. Shawe and the officers of the Coldstream Guards, anxious to set an example and promote that gaiety for which Quebec has hitherto been celebrated, entertained a large party of the ladies and gentlemen of this city at a ball and supper. The difficulty of access to Cape Diamond, and the want of any apartment in the officers' barrack in the citadel sufficiently large to accommodate so numerous an assembly as was invited, determined the gallant corps to engage the ball-room and apartments at the Albion for the occasion. The rooms were brilliantly lighted, and had a gay and cheerful appearance. Shortly after nine the company began to arrive, and at ten dancing commenced to the excellent quadrille band formed from that of the Volunteer Artillery, and was kept up with great spirit in alternate quadrilles and waltzes till twelve o'clock. The supper-room was then thrown open, and the company on entering it found tables covered with every seasonable delicacy and wines of the first quality. Dancing was resumed after supper, and at two o'clock, and later, many a gay couple were yet to be found tripping as lightly as if the dance had but just begun. The party was numerous, and all seemed highly pleased with the entertainment; indeed, it could not be otherwise, for the attention of the Military hosts to the amusement and comfort of their guests was unremitting, and the elegant hospitality of the Coldstream Guards was displayed in a manner that will long be remembered by those who partook of the festivities of the evening.—Quebec Mercury.

1st Foot, 2d Batt.—Lt. Lysons has succeeded Capt. Halkett as Assist. Quarter-Master-Gen. in U. Canada.

2d Depot—Ens. Stevenson has joined, to proceed with the drafts on the 7th proximo.

9th—Surgeon Sievwright embarks in the Camden for Calcutta. This officer has served in the West Indies, and nearly twenty years in India, having accompanied the 45th Regt. in 1819, and returned to England last spring, with the skeleton of that distinguished corps.

11th—The first division 11th regt. is just arrived from New Brunswick. It consists of about 150 men, commanded by Brevet-Major Bloomfield. The head-quarters division, commanded by Col. Goldie, is expected to-morrow.—Quebec Gazette, Jan. 9.

11th Depot—Capt. Stewart has leave to 10th March; Lieut. Kennedy, Assist.-Paym., to 27th inst. Lieut. Moore vacates the Adjutancy on succeeding to a company.

20th Depot—Ens. Phibbs has joined, and will embark for Bengal next month.

27th Depot—The detachment, 115 r. and f. under Capt. Byrne, have moved to Chatham, preparatory to embarking for the Cape.

28th—Lieut. Andrews has leave to 30th March.

32d—Lieut. Griffin is appointed additional Assist. Adjt.-Gen. at Quebec. Major Reid has been succeeded in the command at Sandwich, by Major Deedes, 34th. Capt. Markham has succeeded Capt. Hale, 52d, as Assist. Quarter-Master-Gen. at Toronto.

41st—This regt. was in orders for the Persian Gulf when the last mail left Bombay.

43d Depot—The officers of this and 27th Depot, quartered in Dover Castle, gave a ball and supper to the gentry and visitants of the town and neighbourhood on Valentine's day.

44th—Surgeon Harcourt, and Assist.-Surgeon Meriat, embark for Bengal in the ship Marquis of Camden. The former officer served in the Peninsula, and embarked with the 11th Light Dragoons for India in 1819, where he has since served until within the last few months.

51st—Ens. Scots has leave to 28th inst.

52d—Capt. Hale is appointed Military Secretary at Quebec.

57th—This regt. was held in readiness for field-service at the departure of the December mail from India.

62d—The comp. vacant by the death of Capt. Ellis, provides for the last of the old Subalterns in the regt., as Lieut. Rawstorne (1814) obtains the promotion. Five companies have gone in the 62d within a year.

63d—Quarter-Master Carr has arrived at Newcastle, from India, on leave of absence.

64th—The reg. was inspected by Lieut.-Gen. Sir Lionel Smith, at Up-Park Camp, on 5th Dec., and his Excellency was highly gratified with the state of the corps.—Sir Lionel was afterwards entertained by the officers at their mess-room.

73d—Col. Love, K.H., commands the Hamilton district, and is stationed at Brantford with this reg., and being the senior officer, has the general command of the London, Gore, and Talbot districts.

80th Depot—Lieut. Fraser and Ens. Hollinsworth are the officers selected for the next Convict Guard. The former has a wife and ten children to accompany him.

85th Depot—On 9th inst., a soldier who had deserted from the 15th Hussars, and enlisted in this depot, was arrested as a deserter. On examining his kit, papers were found implicating him and some others as being concerned in in a murder committed in Ireland a few years since; a strict investigation has taken place, and it is said he will turn Queen's evidence, when some disclosures of a very important nature are expected. The man is in close confinement in the gaol of Plymouth.

94th Depot—is now commanded by Br.-Maj. Lindsay. Maj. Gascoyne is on leave.

95th—H.M.S. Jupiter, having on board this reg., bound for Ceylon, arrived at Rio de Janeiro on 27th Nov., and sailed for the Cape on 1st Dec. By a letter received from an officer on board, we learn that the voyage had hitherto been a most delightful one. No deaths or casualties of any kind had occurred. They expected to eat their Christmas dinner at the Cape.

Rifle Brigade, 1st batt.—Lt. T. W. Smith, Rifle Brigade, has succeeded Lieut. M'Intyre, 86th, as Recruiting Officer at Leeds, the latter being transferred to Reading, vice Lieut. Andrews, 28th.

2d W. India Reg.—Lieut. Sayers and four r. and f., with 2 Serjs., and 15 r. and f. of the 1st W. I. reg., embarked from Sierra Leone on 6th Nov., in the Isabella Anna freight-ship. The latter were landed at St. Lucia, and the former at Barbadoes. Lieut. Sayers returned home in the Isabella Anna from St. Lucia, which place she left on 23d Dec.

Rl. Artillery.—Maj. Lock's comp., 3d batt., will embark at Cork in about a month or six weeks for Halifax. Capt. Freer's comp., 6th batt., will proceed to Dublin, via railway, in about a fortnight, to replace Major Lock's comp. at that command.—It is reported that Major Hanwell's comp. at Plymouth will be shortly relieved by Maj. Willis's comp., 5th batt.

CIRCULAR. War Office, 28th Dec. 1838.

Sir,—I have the honour to acquaint you that an order has been issued by the Board of Excise, dated 21st ultimo, directing that when the effects of officers and soldiers dying in Her Majesty's service, are sold by auction by a non-commissioned officer or soldier, no objection be made thereto on the part of that Board, and that such sales be exempt from the duty and regulation of auction laws, provided a certificate, signed by the commanding officer of the regiment, stating that the sale was by his authority, and that the whole of the effects sold belonged to the deceased officer or soldier, be forwarded to the Excise Officer residing nearest to the place of sale.

'I am accordingly to request that whenever, in the regiment under your command, effects are sold by auction, in conformity with the article 207 of the explanatory directions, you will take care that the conditions, presented by the Board of Excise, as being necessary to exempt the sale from the operation of the auction laws, be strictly fulfilled, and that your certificate of the facts required be duly forwarded to the nearest Excise Office as soon as the sale is ended. I have, &c. HOWICK.

Officer Commanding — Regiment of ———.

CIRCULAR. Horse Guards, Dec. 10, 1838.

Sir,—It has been represented to the General Commanding-in-Chief, by the Master-General and Board of Ordnance, that, notwithstanding the clear and positive injunctions contained in pages 264 and 265 of the General Regulations and Order of the Army, the payment of the amount of assessment of barrack damages charged against the troops in changing quarters is in many cases refused upon untenable grounds, and that in some cases individuals have refused to pay the expenses consequent upon such alterations as they have taken upon themselves to make in their barrack-rooms, in direct violation of the provisions of the warrant for the regulations of barracks, which alterations it became necessary for the barrack department to remove, in order to restore the rooms to their former state.

Lord Hill commands me to direct your special attention to this important subject, and to say, that henceforth His Lordship will hold the Commanding Officer of every regiment, or depot, or detachment, strictly responsible for the prompt payment of all barrack damages upon the requisition of the Barrackmaster of the station, at which the assessment shall have been made; His Lordship will not sustain this or that objection upon the part of subordinate individuals.

The Queen's commands relative to this head of service are so distinctly specified both in the Warrant and in the General Regulations above referred to, and the principles upon which the assessment of damages is made on these occasions being perfectly just towards the public and towards the troops, Lord Hill will not suffer payment either to be evaded or postponed. His Lordship accordingly desires that payment be made upon the Barrackmaster's demand.

Having thus conformed to Her Majesty's Regulations, Commanding Officers may avail themselves, if they see reasonable grounds for doing so, of the power of appeal, with which they are invested by these regulations in the promulgations, viz., the Commanding Officer being at liberty to appeal to the Master-General and Board of Ordnance, through the General Commanding-in-Chief, should he consider himself or the troops aggrieved.

Lord Hill takes the present occasion to remind the officers of the Army, that if they alter the colour of the walls of their barrack-rooms, or make any other alterations therein, they are as much bound by the Regulations to pay the expense of restoring their rooms to their former state, as they are to pay for the repairing or replacing (as may be) any article of barrack furniture that may have been damaged or destroyed, either through wantonness or negligence.

The foregoing observations, of course, are equally applicable to any unauthorised alterations made in the barrack-rooms of the soldiery.

The respective General Officers in command of the troops will also be held responsible for the due enforcement of the regulation which provides for the payment of barrack damages whenever Barrackmasters apply to them for support, either personally or in writing.

Lastly, the General Com.-in-Chief expects that the General Officers and other Officers in command will not lend their support to any proposed appeal against the assessment, unless upon due examination of it they shall be fully satisfied that it has been made upon principles not recognised by the existing Regulations.

I have, &c., JOHN MACDONALD,
Officer Commanding Adjutant-General.

BARRACKS.—The Board of Ordnance have directed that the house at the Artillery Barracks, Limerick, occupied by the late acting Storekeeper, Mr. Lloyd, shall be appropriated in future as the residence of the Barrackmaster.—The Hon. John Sinclair is appointed Barrackmaster at Hamilton; W. H. Gray, Esq., at Montreal; Major Elliot at Grenada; and Capt. Newhouse (late of 82d) at Trinidad.

WELLINGTON MEMORIAL.—The Earl of Clare has, within these few days, paid in to Messrs. Drummond the sum of 600*l.*, remitted to him on account of a very considerable sum which has been subscribed by the officers of the Bombay Army towards carrying this great national object into effect.

The Lieutenant-General Commanding in Ireland has granted the Deputy Judge-Advocate-General a fortnight's leave of absence from the 11th inst., to enable him to proceed to England for the benefit of his health.

Major Forster, K.H., has resumed his duties as Assist.-Adjutant-General of the eastern district, Ireland.

The retirement of the Commander-in-Chief in India, General Sir Henry Fane, has appeared in Government Orders. See our East India Intelligence.

His Excellency, Sir George Arthur, and two Aides-de-Camp, arrived at Hamilton on 5th January, and shortly after departed for Amhersburgh, on an inspection tour to the western frontier, and to guard against the inroads of the brigands in that direction.

The barracks at Island Bridge, Dublin, are to be given up as an Artillery station, and the detachments removed to Porto Bello barracks, at which place considerable improvements and additions are making.

East India Intelligence.

Extract of a letter, dated Nov. 7, from an officer of the Bengal Establishment, who is well acquainted with India:—

"The Army of Candahar, as it is called, consisting of about 15,000 men, has assembled at Kurnaul, and will march about the 1st proximo to Ferozepore, on the banks of the Sutlej, where Lord Auckland will have an interview with Runjeet Singh, and, it is said, endeavour to persuade him to allow our forces to pass through his dominions. Should he refuse, they will descend to Shikarpoor, on the Indus, thence to Candahar, where the first opposition will be met with, and finally to Cabul or Herat, as circumstances may require. It is, however, the opinion of many that there will be little blood shed unless the Russians really give their assistance to our enemies. Nevertheless, I believe, since India came under our dominion, she has never been so threatened and in such a dangerous position as at present. All the independent native powers by whom we are surrounded are collecting their forces and strengthening their positions, and there is no doubt that the slightest reverse to our arms in the north would bring them upon us. The penny-wise and pound-foolish system of Lord W. Bentinck is now fully and perfectly exposed. The reduction he caused in the Army left it scarcely capable of performing its duties as a police, and there is now great difficulty in increasing it. The natives show no alacrity or even inclination to join it; so many, after having been unfitted by a Military life for other pursuits, were sent to the right-about by his Lordship, that they expect the same will happen again. Besides, raw recruits are of little avail at a moment when we are threatened on all sides; however, whether we come into actual contest with our enemies or not, the Army must reap some benefit from the state of affairs, and promotion be increased."

We were much surprised on Wednesday last by the arrival of the Overland Mail from India, via Marseilles. This mail has reached in the extraordinary short space of 42 days from Bombay. The dates brought are from Bengal, Dec. 24; Madras, Dec. 25; and Bombay, Jan. 5. The most important features of intelligence are the resignation of Sir Henry Fane and the interview of Lord Auckland with Runjeet Singh. Part of the troops, forming the Army of Indus, had already commenced their march on their return to the Presidency. Four thousand additional troops had been ordered from Bombay to join the Scinde Army, it being the expressed opinion of Colonel Wade that three stations in the Scinde territory would be absolutely necessary. The Bishop of Madras had reached that Presidency and been installed. Sir Henry Seton, the new Judge, had also arrived at Bengal. The Agrd Ukhbar speaks of a rumour that Dost Mahomed and his brothers felt inclined to second the views of the British Government to replace Shah Soojah on the throne of Cabul, in consideration of receiving jaghires and pensions equivalent.

We regret to announce the death of Colonel Worsley, 28th Bengal N.I., which took place on 2d Dec. He was about to be brought to a Court of Inquiry about the mutiny in that reg. This officer has successively commanded the 45th, 42d, 53d, 63d, and 28th regs.—Agra Ukhbar.

The remainder of the Bombay European Reg., the 24th N.I., 30 men of the European Artillery, and a troop of Golundauze, under the command of Major Bayley, 24th N.I. (Col. Bagnold having declined), have been despatched from Bombay to take possession of Aden. The first detachment having been found insufficient, some skirmishing had taken place with the natives, and the Sepoys had captured two country vessels, which they were fitting out to cruise off the port.

Delhi, Dec. 4.—Sir Henry Fane, accompanied by an Aide-de-Camp, Captain Hay, and Dr. Wood, were expected to go on board their boats at Ferozepore on 15th, in progress to Bukeer, and proceed, via Bombay, to England. The head-quarters and staff would commence their march from Ferozepore under the senior officer. Gen. Torrens, for Meerut, on 16th, via Kurnaul, which place they will reach on Jan. 2d, and Meerut on 9th. Gen. the Hon. John Ramsay will act as Commander-in-Chief till the arrival in India of the officer appointed from home to succeed Sir H. Fane.

It is currently reported that there will be an increase to the Bengal Army of one regiment of Cavalry, and four of Infantry.

Jhansi.—The troops despatched upon Jhansi have not succeeding in obtaining possession of the fort, nor expected to succeed without further aid. The Agent for the Governor-General for a reinforcement of 2,000 men and a battering train. Maj.-Gen. Sir T. Anbury, K.C.B., proposes to command this force in person, and as he is well acquainted with the nature of Indian forts, from Seringapatam to Bhurtpore, we may soon expect to hear of the fall of Jhansi. The following are the particulars of the outbreak at Jhansi, given in a letter dated 13th Nov.:—Mahratta principality of Jhansi is at open war with our authorities. Mr. Fraser, the Agent for Bundelcund, on approaching the town, was fired at, and the general opinion at Gwulior is, that the British will take the place. Col. Hewit, with the 25th N.I., is in attendance on Mr. Fraser, and it is believed that Sindia's contingent has received orders to be in readiness. The cause of the disturbance at Jhansi, and of the unsettled state of that principality, is a family quarrel.

The whole of the Scinde force arrived at its destination, and disembarked without the slightest difficulty, on the 23d, 27th, and 30th of Nov., and 1st Dec. The camp is formed five miles below Vikkur.

The Beloochees and Scindians are collecting in large numbers to oppose our march, although there is as yet no manifestation of an open opposition. The Ameers are also fortifying Hydrabad.

The following are the orders which Sir Henry Fane has issued to the Army of India on his taking his leave of them:—

Head-quarters Camp, Ferozepore, 14th Dec., 1838.—The Head-quarter Camp will be struck on the morning of the 16th inst., and the Head quarter Staff will march, according to a route to be prepared by the Quartermaster General of the Army, to Meerut. 2d—The Commander-in-Chief intends to proceed on the same morning, by boat, down the Sutlej and Gharra to the Indus, and so on to Bombay. 3d—The time has, therefore, arrived when his connection with the Bengal Army must cease, but he cannot allow it to be severed without first bidding the Army farewell, and offering his best wishes for their prosperity and happiness. 4th—The support which he has received from the General Officers holding commands, and the generally excellent conduct of all ranks in the Army, European and Native, have, for some time past, rendered his command a task of great ease, and he offers his best acknowledgments and thanks to all for this gratifying result. 5th—He feels that he cannot adequately thank the General Staff of the Head-quarters of the Army, for the able and friendly assistance which they have rendered to him on all occasions; and he now takes leave of them with regret, and with feelings of cordial esteem and regard.—By order of his Excel. the Com.-in-Chief,

J. P. LUMLEY, Maj.-Gen., Adjt.-Gen. of the Army.

The long-expected interview between Lord Auckland and Runjeet Singh has at length taken place. Lord Auckland arrived at Ferozepore on the 27th Nov., on which day Runjeet Singh also made his appearance, and joined his troops encamped on the opposite bank of the river. On the 29th the first interview between Lord Auckland and Runjeet Singh took place. Sir Willoughby Cotton, Mr. Torrens, Mr. Colvin, and Mr. Wade, and a few officers, formed a deputation to escort His Highness. The troops forming part of the ceremony consisted of H.M.'s 16th Lancers, the 4th L.C., the Camel Artillery, a troop of Horse Artillery, the Governor-General's body-guard, the 3d Buffs, and the 2d, 31st, 42d, and 43d N.I. Major Wade acted as interpreter on the occasion. Our space will not admit of the lengthy details which occupy some of the Papers, but the following is a sketch of the conversation between his Lordship and the Maharajah:—

Lord Auckland—All the letters I receive from the English Government make anxious inquiries after your health and prosperity. Runjeet Singh—I am a friend to the English, and indeed esteem all their distinguished officers around me as friends. Lord Auckland—Sir Henry Fane expresses his pleasure at meeting you. Runjeet Singh—I am glad to see the Commander-in-Chief, who is not only a warm friend but a gallant soldier. Sir Henry Fane—I am grateful for the compliment. Lord Auckland—I am now about to present you with a picture of our young and beautiful Queen, who is as famed for her virtue as her greatness. On this Major-General Cotton advanced with the picture (which was beautifully framed in solid gold), and presented it to Runjeet Singh, when a royal salute was fired; the Maharajah bowed to the picture, and put it to his forehead several times. He then minutely examined it for some minutes, and said—"I consider this the greatest gift I could receive, and a proof the friendship existing between the two governments; and when I return I will fire a salute of 101 guns to celebrate the happy event." Runjeet Singh—Do the English still occupy the tapoo (island) near Pervin (meaning Karrak), and with what force? Lord Auckland—Yes, with one European regiment, but there are tow others to embark for it. Sir H. Fane—The island is very strong, and, Maharajah (with a smile), the whole army of Persia could not take it. Lord Auckland—I regret much, Maharajah, that I cannot do myself the pleasure of showing you a steam-vessel on the Sutlej at present, but I hope, ere many months are past, to gratify you with the sight of several on the Indus. Runjeet Singh—Have you heard of Gen. Ventura lately? Lord Auckland—Yes, he was in England by the last accounts, and will be out, I think, immediately, when he hears you require his services. Runjeet Singh—How was he received in London? Lord Auckland—I gave him letters to the different Ministers; he was received kindly by them, and they all speak in high terms of him. They have offered him every assistance in purchasing the newest arms, &c., for you. Runjeet Singh—Whether do you consider Ventura or Allard the best General? Lord Auckland—I am no judge; they are both brave and good Generals. They were brought up in the school of Napoleon, one of the greatest heroes and bravest men who ever lived; second to none, except it be Wellington, to whom our country owes much of its glory. Runjeet Singh—I am fond of music; is that the same band I heard at Umritsur? Lord Auckland Yes, the same; but we have such a band to each regiment. Runjeet Singh—I like music; it pleases the soul, and inspires the soldier in the hour of battle. I have gone to much expense and trouble to create bands in my army. After this a conversation took place about the guns to be presented and the camel battery, &c., and the band was introduced and played so loud that it was scarcely possible to hear what was said. His highness was now led forth to view the other presents intended for his gracious acceptance. On approaching the howitzers, however, an accident happened which the propounders of omens affected to interpret as unfavourable. A number of spherical cases had been piled in front of the howitzers, but were not seen as the party approached, owing to the darkness, the confusion, and the crowd. Over these the Maharajah stumbled and fell, and at the same time Sir Henry Fane measured his length across the heap, as if to keep his highness in countenance. The Commander-in-Chief, however, soon recovered his footing, and then raised the Maharajah, who took the matter very coldly, considering his bodily infirmities and the nature of the omen. He probably felt satisfied that if the tumble prognosticated his fall, the British army would fall with him. After inspecting the howitzers, the caparisoned elephant and a number of magnificent horses were presented him, with most of which the royal visitor declared himself well pleased. The ceremonies being now at an end, he took his departure in the same form, and received the same honours as on his coming to the camp.

On the following day Lord Auckland returned the visit, on which occasion the scene displayed was of very great magnificence. A grand review of the whole force took place on the 3d Dec.

THE LATE ADMIRAL FRANK SOTHERON.

THIS officer, whose demise on the 7th February appears in our obituary of this week, was the third and youngest son of the late W. Sotheron, Esq., of Darrington, near Pontefract. He was born in 1765, and entered the Naval Service in 1776, as a Midshipman on board the Bienfaisant, 64, commanded by the late Adm M'Bride, under the auspices of which gallant officer he completed the first six years of active duty. Being lent for awhile to the Arethusa frigate, he bore a part in the well fought battle between that ship and la Belle Poule, June 17th, 1778, and on his return to the Bienfaisant, was in the action between Keppel and d'Orvilliers, off Ushant. He was also present at the capture of the Caracca convoy, the defeat of Don Juan de Langara, and the relief of Gibraltar by the fleet under Sir G. B. Rodney.

In the ensuing summer we find the Bienfaisant cruising after a large private ship of war, which was known to have sailed from Brest, and proceeded to St. George's Channel. Captain M'Bride's look out was ineffectual, until Aug. 13th, when being off Kinsale, early in the morning, he perceived a strange vessel in chase of some merchantmen that had sailed from Cork on the preceding day, under his protection. He immediately made sail; and at 7 A.M. got within pistol-shot of the stranger, then under English colors. On being hailed by the Bienfaisant, she hauled them down, and hoisted French. A smart action, commenced on both sides with musketry, now took place; and, at the expiration of an hour and ten minutes, the enemy struck, having had 21 men killed and 35 wounded, with her rigging and sails cut to pieces. The Bienfaisant had 3 killed and 20 wounded; and the Charon, a 44-gun ship, which came up at the close of the engagement, had one man wounded. The prize proved to be le Comte d'Artois, of 64 guns and 644 men, commanded by the Chevalier Clonard, who was slightly wounded. Le Comte d'Artois was not destined to be a solitary captive; for, in the course of the following month, the Bienfaisant also captured la Comtesse d'Artois, another French privateer.

At the close of 1780 Mr. Sotheron removed with his gallant commander into the Artois frigate, which had been taken from the French a few months before, and was considered to be the finest vessel of her class in the world. This ship formed part of the force employed to watch the motions of the Dutch squadron, which was then ready for sea in the Texel; and our young officer was consequently present, in Aug. 1781, at the engagement off the Dogger Bank, between Sir Hyde Parker and Admiral Zoutmann. On 3d Dec., in the same year, the Artois captured the Hercules and Mars, Dutch privateers, mounting 24 nine-pounders and 10 cohorns each, the crews of which amounted to 310 men, 22 of whom were slain and 35 wounded. The Artois had only one killed and six wounded. She is also represented as having formed part of the fleet under Adm. Barrington, when that officer intercepted a French convoy bound to the East Indies, on which occasion the Pégase, 74, l'Actionnaire, a two-decker, armed en flute, and ten sail of transports, fell into the hands of the British.

During the remainder of the war Mr. Sotheron served in the Artois, off the Irish coast. He afterwards proceeded to Newfoundland, where he was promoted to the rank of Lieutenant by Adm. Campbell, in 1783, and served in that capacity on board the Danae and Rodus frigates, during the ensuing three years. We subsequently find him in the Kingfisher sloop, from which vessel he removed into the Trusty, 50, bearing the broad pendant of Commodore Cosby, on the Mediterranean station.

Mr. Sotheron's next appointment was about 1792, to be First Lieutenant of the Romney, 50, carrying the flag of Rear-Admiral Goodall, in the Mediterranean; and in the course of the same year, he obtained the command of the Fury, 14, employed in affording protection to the trade between England and Portugal. He subsequently accompanied the expedition under his old patron R.-Adm. M'Bride and the Earl of Moira, sent to assist the French royalists in Normandy and Brittany, but which returned to port in consequence of no favourable opportunity presenting itself for commencing operations with any prospect of success. The Fury was afterwards attached to Commodore Sir J. B. Warren's squadron, stationed off the French coast, and assisted at the capture of la Vipere, 18, a national corvette.

Capt. Sotheron was made post Dec. 11th, 1793; and in the following year commanded the Monarch, 74, bearing the broad pendant of Sir J. Wallace, with whom he removed into his old ship the Romney, on that officer being appointed Commander-in-Chief at Newfoundland.

Towards the latter end of 1796, a French squadron, under the orders of M. de Richery, invested that settlement, and destroyed property to a considerable amount. The enemy's armament consisted of seven sail of the line and three frigates, on board of which were embarked 2,000 troops. The ships under Sir James Wallace were at this period detached on various services; neither would they, if collected, have been of sufficient force to prevent the depredations committed by the invaders. Sir James, however, resolved upon making a vigorous defence, and by his judicious arrangments, aided by the bravery and vigilance of Capt. Sotheron and the other officers of his small squadron, consisting of the Romney, two frigates, and two sloops, completely baffled the designs of the enemy, who, after a fruitless attempt to obtain possession of the colony, returned to Europe.

Capt. Sotheron's next appointment was to the Latona frigate, on the Newfoundland station, where he continued during the two following years. Subsequent to his return to England, he was actively employed in the North Sea, and occasionally commanded a light squadron off the coast of Holland.

In the autumn of 1799, the Latona formed part of the expedition against the Helder; and, after the surrender of that fortress, went with V.-Adm. Mitchell to attack the Batavian ships of war lying at anchor in the Vlieter Channel, but which surrendered without making any resistance, in consequence of the spirit of disaffection manifested by their crews. For his services on this occasion, Capt. Sotheron, in common with the other officers of the fleet, received the thanks of both Houses of Parliament.

Our officer continued in the North Sea during the remainder of the war, and was fortunate enough to capture several of the enemy's armed vessels. In the spring of 1802, he was sent abroad with despatches; and some time after the renewal of hostilities, obtained the command of the Excellent, 74, attached to the Mediterranean fleet, under the orders of Lord Nelson, by whom he was entrusted with the defence of the Bay of Naples; on which service we find him at the time when the ancient Neapolitan government was displaced by the French army, and the throne of that kingdom usurped by Joseph Bonaparte. In this state of affairs, the very prudent arrangements made by Captain Sotheron, prevented the mischief that would otherwise have ensued. He returned home with the Excellent in 1806, when that ship was paid off at Chatham, and since that time he was unemployed. The 1st Aug. 1811, he was promoted to the rank of Rear-Admiral.

On the vacancy occasioned in the representation for Nottinghamshire, by the resignation of Lord William Bentinck, in 1814, Rear-Admiral Sotheron was unanimously elected M. P. for that county, in conjunction with Capt. Lord Newark. In 1816, on the demise of his eldest brother, Col. Sotheron, who served for Pontefract in several Parliaments, Rear-Adm. Sotheron, as heir-at-law, succeeded to the family estates in the counties of York and Nottingham. He was advanced to the rank of Vice Admiral Aug. 12th, 1819, and to Admiral 22d July, 1830. Adm. Sotheron appears to have had a pension of 300*l.* per annum granted him for a wound so far back as Feb. 8th, 1796. He was twice married. His first wife died 29th May, 1812. His second lady, to whom he was united Nov. 13th, 1813, was the eldest daughter of Wilson Braddyll, Esq., of Conishead Priory, Lancashire. The Admiral was an excellent officer and seaman; his kindness to all was proverbial, from the First Lieutenant to the meanest boy under his command.

MILFORD HAVEN.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Knowing I should have to visit this place, en route to London, I purposely deferred noticing the remarks of an Observer, on my letter respecting the crippled state of the packet station here, until I should have an opportunity of personally inquiring into the facts on which he comments. This I have now had the means of doing, having crossed from Waterford to day, and I find that my assertion was substantially correct, respecting the Rochester lighter being sent with the mail, in consequence of the non-arrival of the Monkey. It arose as follows:—The Pigmy was obliged to take the Monkey's turn, and the Rochester the Pigmy's on the following day. Now, had the Monkey arrived in due course, the Pigmy would not have had to go out of her turn, and then there would have been no necessity for the Rochester's being sent at all—so that the non-arrival of the Monkey was the ostensible cause of the Rochester's being sent with the mail.

This point settled, I turned my attention to the unprotected state of the depot, as I may be called upon to speak on the subject before long. Oh! I found it lamentably inefficient; a small party of mariners and a still smaller one of the Artillery looking after—I will not say guarding—the extensive establishment, with all its ships on the stocks, stores, packets, &c. &c. &c.!!! Without exception this is one of the finest Naval Arsenals I have ever seen—not excepting Plymouth or Portsmouth—and certainly the least attended to. Nature seems to have dealt out her favours with a lavish hand, and done wonders for this place, of which little or no advantage has been taken. For the foreign packet station too, it is decidedly the most eligible situation. I lately visited Falmouth, and really I think the inner harbour fills more rapidly than it used to do. Here scope is allowed for the whole of the British Navy to ride in safety—there, those splendid new packets of our talented Sailor-Surveyor's construction (and after seeing those, and the magnificent vessels now on the stocks here, of his models, who can doubt the improvement his talents have made in our wooden walls?) can scarcely find anchorage. Why, then, is the station kept there at such great disadvantages? Why? And "Echo" reverberates along the creeks and roadsteads of this unrivalled harbour, and answers, "Why!" But, Sir, to the protection of this Arsenal I was directing your attention. There is a temporary barracks fitted up here, to accommodate from 250 to 300 Marines—about 70 occupy it. There is a large guard house within the fort, lately constructed to the westward boundary of the Dock-yard, consisting of four good-sized rooms, and another house adjacent, both together capable of containing a number of men. I know very well it has been represented to the authorities that the former is wanted to keep the stores of the fort; but then it must be recollected this is done by an interested party. Let any officer of the Army be sent to visit it, and see if my assertions are not correct. The accommodation for troops being thus proved to a demonstration, without the necessity of an expenditure of money to do so, I ask why is this alone, of all the Naval Arsenals, left unprotected; and here again "Echo answers, Why!"

I did mean to yield my just meed of praise to the Cyclops steamer, Superb, 80, and other ships of our Sailor-Surveyor's mould building here, but I find my letter is running to an unwarrantable length. However, what I have thus far written I know, in justice to one of your oldest correspondents, you will do me the favour to insert in your valuable Gazette. PHILOTHEORUS.

Hobb's Point, January 1839.

RECRUITING.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—The most trying difficulty a recruit encounters on joining his regiment, is the total inefficiency of his final part* of bounty to provide him with the required kit. The impression on every man when enlisting, is that he will receive a suit of clothing, and that the bounty, with a few deductions, will be his own. It is needless to enlarge on the utter disappointment he experiences, when instead of having twenty shillings at his disposal, he is that sum in debt to his Captain: and when it is borne in mind that his rations, washing, mending, and barrack-damages, amount upon an average to tenpence per diem, some idea may be formed of the time an Infantry soldier must be kept under stoppages. But it ends not here. At the expiration of four or five months, the period generally required for the extinction of his debt, the recruit finds that some portion of his kit requires renewing, and thus another period of (generally) two months is to be added to the first, ere he can receive the full amount of his balance. This is the case with the steadiest and best-disposed man; but what is the state of the raw, inexperienced lad, during these six months of probation? I feel justified in asserting that, excepting the mischief arising from want of amusement during his leisure hours, every evil in existence among soldiers may be traced to this period for its foundation. The majority of regiments provide only a breakfast and dinner; and what can a man command who receives only a penny (and in some cases only half a penny) per diem to provide himself with pipe-clay, blacking, brass-ball, and a trifling refreshment between the dinner-time of one day and the breakfast of the next? Reading is out of the question, as he cannot afford to go to a library—supper he cannot command—an hour's chat in the canteen with his comrade is beyond his reach, as "he has not the price of a pint." He may walk in the fields if it is fine weather, or smoke a dry pipe in his barrack-room, and go to bed—this is the only resource for the strictly moral and experienced man. But the majority of recruits take a walk in the town; and they cannot move a hundred yards from the barrack-gate, nor twenty paces in the streets, before they are assailed by temptations of every kind, especially if after dusk, for then he will scarcely cross the barrier until he is asked if he has a pair of boots, or a shirt, for sale. Now comes the rub! He has been disappointed on joining in debt instead of credit, and suddenly deprived of many little comforts, which, though not necessary to his health, he should only be weaned from by degrees. And here in the outset or height of his trouble comes the temptation, and the result in nine cases out of ten is, that he returns to his barracks, smuggles out some article of his kit, disposes of it for one-third or one-fourth of its value, and before tattoo squanders the proceeds in the ale-house or cook-shop. He is fortunate, indeed, if, escaping detection, he by some plausible tale prevails on his Serjeant to replace the article sold, thus adding to the period of his deprivation. But this proves such an easy mode of raising the wind that he attempts a second or third time, is found drunk at roll-call, sent to the guard-room a prisoner; the next day his kit is inspected, found deficient, ordered to be supplied again, and sent to extra drill, or the black-hole for forty-eight hours, only to be released to play the same game again, perhaps, and ultimately suffer by a Court-Martial.

Here is a list of crimes, either completed or in embryo, enough to make any one shudder: he commits a serious crime by "selling or making away with his regimental necessaries;" he escapes in the first instance by a falsehood, but to the second he adds (for the first time perhaps in his life) drunkenness; and ere he is three months a soldier has suffered confinement in the guard-room and black hole, enrolled his name in the defaulters' book, and become in prospect a bad character. And all these he might have been spared at a cost to Government of sixteen or eighteen shillings. It matters little to the recruit by what means he is spared these trials and risk of disgracing himself and the Service; whether by an increase of bounty, supplying him with a complete suit, or requiring him only to purchase a service-kit—in using this latter term I mean those articles only which are essential to cleanliness—and he would not then, as he is now when in "heavy marching order," be loaded like a pack-horse.

First then, as to increase of bounty it might certainly induce a few more men to enlist; but very few, if we may judge from the rapid enlistment of men at the present sum. But this is not the point; the thing to be desired is to attach the men firmly to the Service, by rendering their difficulties in first entering few, and easy to be surmounted, removing temptation from them, and finding them ample and pleasing employment. Two of the remedies glanced at in the preceding paragraph, although entailing additional expense on the country, would be of incalculable benefit to the Service, removing cause for dissatisfaction in the recruit, temptation to crime, probable drunkenness, and not unfrequently desertion. But should it be necessary, I am prepared to show, that by a diminution in the kit the desired object may be attained, the country saved the expense, and the soldier's back as well as his heart lightened.

DESIRABLE CHACO, SASH, AND WAIST-BELT.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Invited thereto by your gallant and valuable correspondent Arthur, I venture to obtrude some observations upon the sufferings caused by the present chaco! If a martinet-like partiality for smart equipments at all can be excused, it can only be so long as the parties remain ignorant of the severe hardship they entail on the soldiers, and of the consequent impediments to their willing efforts to maintain the glory of their country's arms. Should I be able to show, that the present chaco does both, will it be necessary to add that it and the stiff stocks remaining in use thereupon will not be free from the charge of indifference to the dictates of humanity and patriotism? The authorities regulating these matters are too just, and too liberal also, to censure boldness based on such motives; wherefore, and with great deference, I offer to them, respectfully, the best of apologies in the following few words,—"Hear me, for my cause!" The leading, indeed only, considerations how to provide a soldier with a hat, cap, helmet, or chaco, must proper for his particular branch of service, are, to contrive the readiest protection against weapons and weather, be rendered equal or even superior to another, but merely that an Army, composed of such discordant elements, would be less to be depended upon. We hope none of our readers will take his humorous observations upon the "old vagabonds" of former times too seriously. Wallace, in particular, we—though not Scotchmen—must ever consider a hero, and we think that his history is sufficiently authentic to prove this, although he was doubtless a very different sort of hero from that which our amiable friend Miss Porter has represented in story.

There is a romantic interest about the proposition of Arthur, which, if it fails to convince our judgment, in opposition to the arguments of Sir Charles Napier, captivates our imagination, and [illegible] or fatiguing exertion. Permit me just to glance at what formerly was worn. Passing over ancient helmets and morions, I will begin with the laced cocked-hat: its iron cross upon the crown, its upright flaps of felt bound with lace, resisted cuts; the flaps, when let down, protecting against sun or rain, &c. The Austrians adopted a casque, partly of leather, for the Infantry and Cavalry; the English copied it, but, adding a high crest or comb of stuffed bear-skin, they increased, but without material improvement of protection, alike its weight and nuisance, especially in wet weather. The bear-skin Grenadier caps, and the fur Hussar caps, cause the same annoyance, and on a larger scale: the first owe their formidable exterior to a fragile skeleton of humble wicker-work, whilst the latter more frequently prove convenient depots on foraging visits to henroosts than bulwarks to the head. Conical Hussar caps of felt, the wound and laced one! especially, serve well in some things; but, above all, they are eminently useful in keeping the body cool, by conducting the rain and sleet, &c. to the shirt and skin; and so did a former Austrian Infantry cap, ugly enough, but having a front with a metal plate, much higher than its low crown, it afforded good protection against sabre cuts, without being weighty. Passing with contempt due to their unmilitary look, the round hats of the brave Tyroleans, and of some former English volunteers, and admiring the classic, although unserviceable elegance of the steel helmets of our Cuirassiers, and also of the brass helmets of the Heavy Dragoons, I lament to glance at their being troublesome to keep clean, and both admirably calculated to help the men to a coup de soleil; not to forget that the brass ones (in despite of their Birmingham origin) are particularly complaisant; for one, rather than spoil the edge of my Damascus sabre, politely allowed it to pass through, in support of my opinion, asked by a great personage. Returning to the chaco, I must confess my ignorance whether my country (Prussia) or France has to answer for the sin of its birth; more certain am I that England has to plead guilty to the murder of the best of all head defences, the Lancers', or rather Uhlans' chaco, of Polish origin. Cheap, because of cloth, its sides, by being quilted vertically, and each quilt filled with stout hempen threads twisted together, not only prevented side-cuts from penetrating readily, but were of sufficient stiffness to uphold a top (mostly square), containing under the cloth a stout piece of leather, which resisted cut seven, even when severe, not by its toughness, but by tilting so much over as to make the cut glide off to one or other side, the top recovering its original attitude, owing to the elasticity of the quilts so fitted. For this neat, light, and pleasant, because porous and flexible cap, a certainly smart Birmingham-like contrivance has been adopted, but punishing the wearer sorely, for its resistance is aimed at by making it of great weight, and air-tight stiffness, in direct opposition to the clever mechanical parry, and which, to me, even more than its economy, seems preferable; nay, on every other ground also. The "Bayna" of the Basques I know too little of to offer any but a premature opinion on Arthur's recommendation of it "with a cork top;" but as the present chaco's form is so highly in favour, and as caoutchouc is now used as extensively as ingeniously, I will venture to submit the following to the consideration of the proper authorities. Let the top of the chaco be formed of a light metallic hoop, covered with webbing of hemp, the latter alone resisting as much as the gold or silver lace encircling the tops of chacos for such ends more than ornament; let this hoop be upheld by four, or better six, flat but stout pieces of caoutchouc, in width one inch or more; cover the top with some light yet perfectly waterproof stuff or cloth, the sides being of porous, yet waterproof cloth; or the whole could be of the first, provided ventilating holes (concealed or not) are introduced. To a shade in front, a small flexible rim round the bottom edge of the cap, might be added for obvious reasons. Few cuts could penetrate such a chaco.

Having had proofs, in my own stables, of the value (on account of support, coupled with elasticity) of surcingles, &c., into which caoutchouc had been introduced, I can safely recommend the same texture as particularly desirable for Dragoons' sashes, on grounds of greatly sustaining the men during the severest duty or weather, yet without cramping their exertions; and equally so, although reduced in width, for waist-belts for Infantry brigades. I am not only assured that they can be made so as to receive pipe-clay to resemble buff belts; but also, that one troop of the 14th Light Dragoons now has coloured sashes of the very article I recommend for such use. BRITTON ON MANNING THE NAVY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Having directed attention to a plan submitted by a Captain of the Navy, in your Journal of the 5th of April, 1834, I again submit an important system, which will not only give us merchant seamen, but 150,000 practical seamen-gunners, without any additional expense to the nation, and by which means we shall always be prepared to bid defiance (as we have before) to the Navies of the whole world.

The panic has in some measure subsided, notwithstanding the political statements, "that the British Navy is about to forget her former greatness, and succumb to the fleets of France and Russia." This manœuvre is now well understood and duly appreciated. The country is now made perfectly aware of the practicability of invasion unless Britain's best bulwarks are efficient, and her armament, in metal and men, equal to foreign ships. This will prevent the recurrence of that lamented oversight in sending out our ships, in the American war, badly manned, and great disparity of force, sacrificing British seamen in unequal contests. Every practical War-Officer is fully aware that no ship can go into action with confidence unless his crew are well trained to gunnery. When the Macedonian appeared off Ushant, and it was known that she was ordered to the track of the American frigates, all exclaimed, "for the honour of our flag it is to be hoped she will not fall in with an enemy's frigate!" Shortly after Captain Carden was taken on board the United States, he ceased to wonder at the result of the battle, for his opponent was built with the scantling of a 74, mounting thirty long 24-pounders, and twenty-two 42-pounder carronades, two long 24-pounders on her quarter-deck and forecastle, and three howitzer guns in her tops, a travelling carronade on her upper deck, with a complement of 509 picked men, including boys; guns 57, and weight of metal 846 pounds. The Macedonian's complement in men and boys 297, weight of metal 528 pounds, guns twenty-eight 18-pounders, sixteen 32-pounder carronades, two long 12-pounders, and two 8-pounders—total guns, 48. It is to be hoped the British Navy will never fall into these heart-breaking disasters again; the present active Board of Admiralty are guarding against it, and are determined to give the Blues fair play by equal weight of metal. In future, the prostituted word retrenchment will cause a shudder in the House when applied to the reduction of the British Navy, to bring it below the standard of foreign nations.

Having, in my letter of the 22d ult., advocated the necessity of allowing the merchant seaman a portion of his time he has devoted to obtain a knowledge of a seaman's duties, when entering the Navy, towards completing his service for a pension, and which judicious measure would ensure his continuance in the Navy fifteen years at least; he is inseparably connected with all the characteristics of a British tar, and in the hour of danger possesses the same prompt decision and unflinching courage. Why not, then, establish an uniform system of registration for life, and organisation on the principle I have frequently suggested? When we reflect that the great majority of our seamen are employed in the merchant shipping, amounting to about 200,000, and that, in the event of a sudden demonstration of invasion, we must principally depend on those men to man our wooden walls, is it not surprising this plan has not been acted upon, when the salvation of the country, in a sudden war, hinges on this defence? It is admitted by every practical Naval Officer that it is only a secondary consideration to equip a ship for sea: this might be done in a fortnight; but it would be perfectly useless if the men were not trained to gunnery, as our ships could have no chance with foreign seamen-gunners. I would, therefore, propose a plan to lull the fears of the "Flag-Officer," and render our best bulwarks invincible: at the word of command, 100,000 British seamen-gunners would rally round our standard, trained without any expense to the Government; and it is to be hoped this suggestion will fall under the eye of the Board of Admiralty. All merchant vessels should be compelled to carry out one iron gun, or at least a quaker, during peace, for the use of the seamen in obtaining a knowledge of Naval gunnery; for which purpose every ship, on clearing out at the Customs, should be furnished with a card of the General Naval Exercise, and it should be understood, that all seamen obtaining a certificate from the Master of a vessel, setting forth his being a good man and perfect in his exercise, should be allowed, after passing an examination, a certain portion of time on entering the Navy, with gunners' bounty. By this simple plan Britain could never be taken by surprise, for you would only have to fit out your ships and man your guns with 200,000 good seamen-gunners to select from, ready to brave the battle and the breeze in defence of their native land.

Independent of this important and necessary defence, which would secure Great Britain from invasion, so that the "Flag-Admiral" and "Gentlemen of England may live at home at ease," all merchant-vessels should have a gun on board to make signals of distress, and to throw a rope on shore, agreeably to the invention of a Captain of the Navy, the projector of the plan for concentrating the fire of a broadside, which was subsequently tried at Portsmouth by the carpenter of the Hussar (Mr. Kennish) as emanating from the Admiralty (although forwarded to the Board long before), and a sum of money actually paid to this person for trying this Officer's invention. To communicate with the shore in case of wreck, a chain, long enough to load the gun, connected with a line, is made fast to a shot, so contrived, that when fired at an angle of thirty degrees, it falls as a grapnel, and enables a man to reach the shore and haul a rope from the ship. It very seldom happens that the shell-mortar is at the place where wanted, particularly in the night. By this plan you ensure the safety of the crew when within range of the shore; it may also be used to communicate with a vessel when no boat can venture to a wreck at sea, &c. &c. Let there be a candid inquiry into the condition of our merchant seamen bearing on their past and present degraded state: this would bring about a progressive moral improvement, and be the means of keeping our best seamen at home.

The principal cause of the continual conspicuous complaints of the seamen to the Lord Mayor on their return from a sea voyage, proceeds in a great measure from the apathy of the merchants themselves, who have not, during peace, devoted time to the active employment of any measures calculated to better the condition of the mercantile seamen, and prevent abuses; but let the Government support this measure, and, if necessary, pass a bill for the more effectual and perfect security of our mercantile trade in case of a sudden war, the merchants would readily enforce it for the safety of their vessels and in defence of their native land; the facility of invasion by steamers renders it no longer a bug-bear.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1839.

We anticipated this week laying before our readers a complete refutation of the calumnies that have been circulated throughout the recess, respecting the State of the Navy, resulting from the discussions which the Earl of Hardwicke's motion for Tuesday would have produced.

Lord Hardwicke, however, along with the name, appears to have inherited some of the acumen of his learned ancestor, and like a skilful advocate, threw up his brief, when he found his case untenable, rather than provoke official explanation, which he foresaw would redound to anything but the credit of those who have been so unceasingly labouring to mislead the public upon the subject of Naval affairs.

On the noble Captain's giving notice to withdraw his motion, and declining to pledge himself to renew it during the Session, the Earl of Minto expressed his earnest desire that the matter should be fully discussed, not in abstract portions, but in substantive detail; and declared his anxiety to meet the question in the fullest manner, and to defend the system of the Admiralty, whenever any noble Lord afforded him the opportunity.

We recollect that, half a dozen years ago, Lord Hardwicke, then a Member of the House of Commons (his Lordship is the son of the late Admiral Sir Joseph Yorke, and a Captain in the Navy), made a charge against the Admiralty somewhat similar to what we anticipated his intention to be on this present occasion, having heard that his Lordship has lately made a visit of inspection to the Ports. His Lordship then asserted that Portsmouth Dock-yard was denuded of stores, and not equal to equipping a single ship of the line. Whereupon Sir James Graham (then First Lord of the Admiralty) produced a list (as long as the main-top bow-line), in which was set forth an official return of the articles in store at that time, contrasted with former periods; and obliged the gallant Captain to admit that he was altogether in error, there being a considerable excess, and sufficient for any purpose required.

Captain Yorke, we recollect, excused himself on the plea that the stores were out of sight; and, indeed, it appears to us impossible that any one, let his vision be ever so acute, can, by a casual inspection of store-houses (unless furnished with abstracts of the Storekeeper's books), make any sort of approximation to the quantity in hand.

Be this as it may, sufficient reasons appear to have influenced the gallant Earl to avoid a similar mortification on the present occasion; but, in relinquishing his motion as to the state of the Navy, he expressed his intention of asking for some information upon the subject of Naval Education.

Accordingly, on Tuesday the noble Lord entered into a long statement, lamenting the abolition of the Naval College and Naval School of Architecture, and requiring to know what substitute was intended for those Academies, with the facilities afforded to the student!

It has been observed, that, with very few exceptions, the only admirers of these defunct institutions are the gentlemen who have been educated therein; and it is certainly no less unfortunate than remarkable, that neither the one nor the other of these schools have produced a single member who has made a figure in his profession. Mediocrity appears to have been the maximum attained, which may be accounted for, as regards the Naval College particularly, by the pupils, generally the children of those who had interest to push them forward, wasting two years of precious time in acquiring that which they altogether lost before their term of service was expired.

We say wasted two years, because although the forms of a Cadet's education were gone through, the various lessons were instilled at too early a period to make the desired impression. We have witnessed the process of "teaching the young idea how to shoot," for instance, and the farce of exercising children of thirteen years of age at a couple of pop-guns, under the tuition of an old Serjeant, the target enjoying for many years a sinecure free from danger of shot or shell,—but we never heard that a Collegian displayed greater talent in gunnery, than others on board a ship of war. The process of measuring the distance between a chimney-pot and a fixed star might be considered the proper one for instruction in the use of the sextant, but we do not recollect that, even in taking observations at sea, any of the young gentlemen, so tutored, displayed a superiority over their more vulgar compeers of less pretensions. In fact, we believe it can be proved, that more mishaps have occurred to ships, commanded by Collegians, to say nothing about total losses, than to those brought up in the usual manner, notwithstanding that the proportion of the latter officers is so much greater.

The truth is, the facility for superior attainments was given at the wrong end, as Lord Minto emphatically observed; and every impartial person must admit the great superiority of the system his Lordship has introduced, over the College preparatory course, and the old schoolmaster; for the time bestowed on both these will now be employed under able instructors. We think, however, that Lord Hardwicke displayed bad taste in taunting the First Lord of the Admiralty, because he had not yet succeeded in procuring a qualified person for every ship (sixteen being the number of instructors at present), seeing the difficulty of effecting it, owing to the small salary, that the system has scarcely been in existence twelve months, and also the preliminary instructions as regards gunnery, &c., which the master must himself undergo.

The system, however, has the undivided approbation of the best officers in the service, and when carried out, it will tend materially to perfect the education of Naval officers, and give the whole (not a select few) the opportunity of acquiring those higher attainments so desirable to possess since the extension of steam navigation.

As regards the soi-disant School of Naval Architecture, it is most unfortunate for the gentlemen educated therein, that well-meaning, though injudicious, friends will persevere in bringing their case continually before the public, for no other purpose, apparently, than to draw forth in each discussion some fact which must add to their mortification. We now learn, that of those who claimed permission to retire from the service, not one has thought proper to follow out his profession as a ship-builder! We were glad to find Lord Minto do full justice to the late Admiral Hayes and Captain Symonds; these Naval officers, his Lordship declared, having produced ships universally admitted, by officers of all Navies, to be unrivalled in the world, whilst those built by the School were failures.

provide only a breakfast and dinner; and what can a man command who receives only a penny (and in some cases only half a penny) per diem to provide himself with pipe-clay, blacking, brass-ball, and a trifling refreshment between the dinner-time of one day and the breakfast of the next? Reading is out of the question, as he cannot afford to go to a library—supper he cannot command—an hour's chat in the canteen with his comrade is beyond his reach, as "he has not the price of a pint." He may walk in the fields if it is fine weather, or smoke a dry pipe in his barrack-room, and go to bed—this is the only resource for the strictly moral and experienced man. But the majority of recruits take a walk in the town; and they cannot move a hundred yards from the barrack-gate, nor twenty paces in the streets, before they are assailed by temptations of every kind, especially if after dusk, for then he will scarcely cross the barrier until he is asked if he has a pair of boots, or a shirt, for sale. Now comes the rub! He has been disappointed on joining in debt instead of credit, and suddenly deprived of many little comforts, which, though not necessary to his health, he should only be weaned from by degrees. And [illegible] as we can learn, the greatest want of troops is felt at Bombay. In Madras, however, there are several regiments still available for service, and in Bengal the European troops are sufficient, unless a war in Burmah takes place, when the troops of Her Majesty could not furnish an adequate force, and yet leave in the Presidencies a number equal to the duties, and calculated to keep down the tendency to insurrection which, we fear, has been very widely spread among the native states, by the insidious agency of Persia and Russia. We, however, well remember when all the drafts for India embarked between the 1st of January and beginning of April in each year; and it is only of very late years that the time has been changed, and that in consequence of the East India Company having ceased to possess ships of their own, which left England in the three first months of each year.

The arguments of Sir Charles Napier, whose letter we annex, against national (or rather, provincial) regiments, are so cogent, that they shake, if they do not positively overthrow, the opinion which we lately expressed in favour of the plans so ably advocated by our correspondent Arthur. The absolute perfection of individual regiments is of less importance than the union of the whole Army. We were not, indeed, aware that provincial animosities and prejudices had ever exhibited themselves in our service, so strongly as we learn from Sir Charles Napier they did during the late war. These feelings at present have probably lost somewhat of their former vehemence; but as, if this be so, the emulation and peculiar distinguishing characteristics on which Arthur lays so much stress would probably be weakened in the same proportion, the change would scarcely decide the question in his favour. His distinguished opponent considers District regiments have never been superior to mixed ones. Arthur is of a contrary opinion; but we certainly think he should name those which he says "ran away" at Waterloo—a circumstance of which we never yet heard. He asks—"Were not our best skirmishers almost invariably Celts?" We have generally understood that our Army possessed none better than the Peninsular Light Division, composed of mixed regiments, in some of which, at least, genuine Englishmen, we believe, predominated. We presume he speaks only of the continent when he designates the Austrian Army as "confessedly the first in Europe;" and even as to this there is much difference of opinion between officers of experience—some preferring the Russian Army, others the Prussian, and many the French.

Sir Charles Napier, however, has not demonstrated that a provincial regiment may not in itself be rendered equal or even superior to another, but merely that an Army, composed of such discordant elements, would be less to be depended upon. We hope none of our readers will take his humorous observations upon the "old vagabonds" of former times too seriously. Wallace, in particular, we—though not Scotchmen—must ever consider a hero, and we think that his history is sufficiently authentic to prove this, although he was doubtless a very different sort of hero from that which our amiable friend Miss Porter has represented in story.

There is a romantic interest about the proposition of Arthur, which, if it fails to convince our judgment, in opposition to the arguments of Sir Charles Napier, captivates our imagination, and makes us wish that we could unhesitatingly agree with him. The difference of the political opinions of these two able writers may, in some measure, influence their views, even on the subject to which we allude, since Arthur avows that his schemes would tend to strengthen the cause of Conservatism in Wales—an effect which his gallant adversary would probably think less desirable.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir—In your paper of the 12th inst. I observe the following reference to my opinion on the subject of National Regiments:—"Yet as (rather singularly) Sir Charles Napier gives no reason for this opinion, so widely different from that of Arthur, we incline at present to side with the last."

It is right to repair this omission in my "Remarks on Military Law" (an unhappy title, Mr Editor, which appears to have scared military readers of sprightly imaginations, who fancy it to be something like "Burn's Justice" dressed in a red coat! But allow me to assure them that on the contrary it is "pleasant light summer reading"); it is right, I say, to give my reasons for being adverse to the division of the British Army into national regiments, and, perhaps, I may be so fortunate as to enlist you on the side which I take.

I account myself an impartial judge, for I belong to the four countries. My father was a Highlander; my mother an Englishwoman; I was brought up in Ireland from my earliest infancy; my brothers are Irishmen; my wife is a Welchwoman. I am, therefore, unprejudiced in favour of any one of the four countries. Put me in any national regiment and I should have a fair chance of finding relations therein, as I possess an overpopulation of cousins—we are not Malthusians!

Having thus produced my credentials, I think you will admit my claim to be an impartial judge; although I must own that I feel a bias in favour of Irish soldiers; and, therefore, if I were to ask for the command of a national regiment, it would be for an Irish one in preference to any other. Now, Sir, for my reasons.

In the first place, we serve one Sovereign, and, therefore, all distinctions among her subjects are objectionable; as any honour bestowed upon a particular regiment would, if we were divided into national regiments, be attributed to a partiality towards the country to which that regiment belonged, rather than to its own merits. Then, in the choice of quarters, and various other ways in which favouritism can knock off the rough points of service to regiments, I should be glad to know what chance three countries would have if the Prime Minister, the Commander-in-Chief, and the Secretary-at-War, happened to belong to the fourth? It is said, that under Lord Bute's administration, His Majesty George III., wishing to reward an English gentleman, asked him how he could best serve him? "Sire," replied the gentleman, "I do not think that your Majesty can do anything for me unless you can make me a Scotchman." Such stories show that national partiality is strongly felt by men in power, and, whether justly or unjustly, all their actions are attributed to that feeling: and after all it is a very natural one. The possession of great power cannot divest us of our feelings as men, though it may render the indulgence of them unjust, however amiable those feelings may be in themselves. Thus, if the Army were divided into national regiments, three-fourths of the military would be discontented, and would imagine that the remaining fourth received undue favour. Then would dangerous discordance surely arise.

In the second place, national regiments foster national feeling, even more strongly than individuals; for in societies men stimulate each other to greater enthusiasm than they feel under other circumstances. But the feelings we want are those of union, not of disunion: our object is to have one army, not four armies. However natural, and however romantic in story, such national feelings may be, they do, nevertheless, create bad feelings and disunion among the soldiers of different corps when quartered together; they do so sometimes even in the hearts of men serving in the same regiment; for example, I know a distinguished national corps that obliged an accomplished and excellent officer to quit it, because he was born in a different country! The other regiments in the brigade took offence, and much bad feeling arose. I asked the Lieutenant-Colonel of the regiment if the circumstance was true; for, being then young, I could not believe the fact to be as I had heard it stated: he avowed to me that it was even so. "It was wrong," he said, "but to oppose it would lead to unpleasant feelings in the regiment, and produce duels." Both the Lieutenant-Colonel, and the officer who was obliged to exchange out of this national regiment, soon afterwards fell in battle—the one in Egypt, the other at Buenos Ayres. I believe that the circumstance I have stated was by no means a singular one in the early part of the last war—hard service brought us more together in the Peninsula.

Put four national regiments in one brigade (English, Scotch, Irish, Welch,), and if each does not assume a superiority over the other three, I know nothing of soldiers. Four mixed regiments would do the same; but there would be this marked difference—that in the last case national pride would not enter into the feeling; which would be merely the commendable one of an esprit de corps: but in the first case national pride would be added to that of esprit de corps: national taunts would take place, and all know that when our country is taunted our anger becomes implacable; all that a man loves in this life is insulted if his country be insulted by men of another nation; and among national regiments their country is always brought into the quarrel when anger or jealousy is aroused. There are a number of vulgar-minded men in all societies who take care to taunt their adversaries with their country, and with those failings which are popularly laid to the charge of its inhabitants; as if men were to be judged by the country in which they were born, and not by their own individual character and conduct. A deadly feud would arise between these four regiments. If the four mixed regiments be separated, the slight jealousy which existed, and which was purely regimental, not national, and scarcely surpassing a joke, would give place to a feeling of friendship between those very regiments—a feeling of "auld lang syne."

Not so with the four national regiments, whose heart-burnings would continue, not only against each other, but be extended to all the regiments of their respective nations—aye, and to those nations themselves! I do not give this as a light opinion, but one formed upon the violent nationality that I have at times witnessed among British officers and private soldiers.

I believe that at present there is not one purely national regiment; all are mixed, and only national in name; therefore this jealous feeling can scarcely be said to exist; yet, if the whole Army were to be divided into regiments purely English, Irish, Welch, and Scotch, it would break into parties, and be filled with bitter hostile feelings, producing among them that state which is most injurious to its strength; that is to say, it would be composed of the troops of four nations divided by petty jealousies; it would not be a united force of national troops. The most formidable armies are those not composed of four, but of one nation. "Oh! but there will be emulation among the four, and this will render them invincible," exclaim those that favour the formation of national regiments. Yes, I admit that emulation is a good thing; but tell me, good Sirs, have not mixed regiments a feeling of emulation? Is an Englishman, an Irishman, a Scotchman, or a Welchman, insensible to the love of his Queen, his country, his regiment, his honour? Is he such a base craven, that these feelings cannot be roused, except in company with his provincial neighbours? Has he no courage as a man, to stand by those engaged in the same combat, and who are gloriously falling around him, unless they wear kilts instead of breeches? Is the part of his person which the kilt or breeches covers, that in which the advocates of national regiments would concentrate the ardour of British courage? The Army I think will be in favour of mixed regiments. National corps themselves will not arrogate any superiority of courage on that score. I will ask the brave 42d if, when pouring their fire upon an enemy, they thought they were better for being all Scotch? No! I will take their own Burns for my authority in ejaculating this monosyllable:—

"But bring a Scotchman frae his hill,
Clap in his cheek a Highland gill,
Say such is royal George's will,
And there's the foe;
He has no thought but how to kill
Twa at a blow."

And that is the case: Scotch, Irish, Welch, and English soldiers, when in battle, see the enemy in front, and red coats around them—all are British soldiers together; the royal colours of England float above their heads; their blood is up; their hearts resolved to win; their eyes are bent upon the enemy; their ears await the command of their leader, and on his word to charge, a line of British bayonets rushes forward—a coming death! No man then thinks what province gave his comrades birth, or what may be the best weapon of war: he thinks only of how to keep his ranks, and use the instrument in his hand: he feels that his power is in his discipline, in his compact order, in his simultaneous charge; in the serried red coats around him, and in Wellington! These are his thoughts: these are his deeds, and it is hard to make him flinch. He hears the terrible British shout, mixing with the roll of musketry, reverberate far and wide on either flank: he thinks not whether it be sent forth by men of Scotland, men of England, men of Ireland, or men of Wales—all are his countrymen; the red coat is on their back: he is confident in their courage: "no weak faint-hearted doubtings tease him," and the thrust of his weapon is mortal. Oh, yes! We have emulation in abundance: a young and beautiful Queen: honour: the native valour of our islanders: standards accustomed to victory, and which must not be lost—pride of regiments, pride of brigades, pride of divisions, and pride in the "veritable rouge;" all give us emulation.

Why then should we break up this power of union to make national regiments? For what, I ask? What has any national regiment ever done, either in combat or out of it, that a mixed regiment has not done? Will the 29th, the 43d, the 48th, the 50th, the 52d, the Rifle Brigade, and plenty of others, admit that they are inferior, as mixed regiments, to any of the national regiments? Assuredly not. The deeds done in battle reflect honour upon regiments, but not the mummery of any peculiar dress which may distinguish them from others, and create, among fools, an impertinent assumption of an imaginary superiority over their countrymen. "Oh, but Wallace!" cries the Scotchman. "Oh, but Llewellyn!" cries the Welchman. "Oh, but Brian Borhá!" says the Irishman. "Oh, but Prince Arthur!" says the Englishman. Well! and what are all these old vagabonds to us? The first was, and all the rest probably deserved to be, hanged, if just laws had due execution in those days, which, luckily for these ancient heroes, was not the case, except in the instance of Wallace; and though he might, and I dare say did, deserve the gallows, he did not deserve it half as much as the man who ordered him to be hanged! What concerns us in these days is, not to boast of those who led us in battle against each other; but to imitate him who united us in battle, and who is greater than them all in war: even Wellington! I must be pardoned if I speak slightingly of these antique gentlemen, of whom we know so little; for though it seems pretty certain that "Wully Wallace" was hanged, yet hanging must be admitted to be a very doubtful recommendation to any man! Prince Arthur was celebrated for his "round-table," and for the beauty of Queen Guenever and her galeties; so that, between them, the knights of the round-table were found in bed and board. Llewellyn passed his time in calling for ghosts, which (provoking devils!) would not come. And as to Brian Borhû, an Irishman once told me—"Troth, faith, there is nothin' sartin about him, except that he owned the ould sworrd hangin' up in Kilmainham Hospital, and no one bleives that THAT iver was his." Away, then, with these idle dreams of bygone men, whose reputed actions form the record of our broils, and exposed us to be ravaged by every shipful of cut-throats that landed on our shores! Let us not revive our ancient dissensions by forming the Army into national regiments. The feeling of animosity is almost gone. In God's name let it perish! The other day I saw the brave 42d marched past at a review. The sight of their ragged colours, those remnants of so many glorious days, warmed the heart; not because the men who marched beneath them wore the most beautiful of martial costumes, nor because they spoke Erse, but because the 42d regiment had seen great days, and those days came back upon the mind with all their memories painted fresh upon them! The tattered standards seemed like the skeletons of those departed: beneath them fell the great and noble Moore: on them many a brave comrade's eye was bent, as it grew glassy with approaching death—as he exulted with a faint expiring cry, not for Scotland, but for victory! The 7th too, preceded, the 79th followed. The silks of Albuera, and of Fuentes D'Onore, were gone; but the old spears which once bore them were there, bedecked with new drapery, and the manes of slain men seemed hovering around them! Yet was it a national composition which had rendered these valiant regiments so conspicuous in the last war? By no means. 'Tis true that one has a national name, but they were mixed regiments, and many a hardy Irishman drew the trigger in their ranks! No regiment in the Peninsula was purely national, unless (and I am not sure of this) the 87th and 88th regiments, and much as I respect those brave battalions, I have yet to learn that they were more worthy than mixed regiments. Yet I am inclined to speak partially of both these corps, for my father was in the 87th, and the 88th was for some time under my command. I have also seen it in battle, where every man was as good as Brien Borhù himself in his best day, with his Kilmainham sword and all. Glorious Ireland! six ages of ill treatment have been unable to debase your nobleness! your sons are still brave, generous, and hospitable!

The claim of any regiment to superiority on the ground of being national, would be an idle one; and no military man of common sense would set it up, unless so blinded by national feelings as to draw upon himself the ridicule of the whole army. Then what object, I again ask, is to be gained by forming national regiments? What good is there to compensate for the evils; for the jealousies, the animosities that would arise in the army, were such a step to be taken? None! Behold the effect of a mere opinion—a mere proposition that it would be good to form national regiments! Already an Arthur has produced an English Officer, and each will have his partizans!

But one of your correspondents would not only divide the army into national regiments, but he would also give to the men of each nation its particular colony to guard—a division of labour very pleasant for the nation to which might be exclusively assigned the genial climate of the West Indies! If our various races require such different treatment, assuredly we must also have four codes of military law. I cannot help thinking that these ideas will find but few advocates in the army—indeed, there would be no end to such distinctions. Let us, therefore, serve the Queen and the country, united in feelings, in dress, in language.

The foregoing is my reply to your just observation, that I had not given any reason for holding the opinion on the formation of national regiments expressed in my "Remarks on Military Law." But I will not defend my opinions against anonymous writers; it is mere opinion after all, and far from assuming the claim of being an authority upon this subject, I am ready to admit that such writers may be better judges than myself. I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant, CHARLES JAMES NAPIER, Major-General.

The Portsmouth, Portsea, and Gosport Free Press treated its readers to divers lucubrations on the Navy last week, and could not resist a sneer at the Army, en passant. After a very bathetic laudation of the Navy, just suited to the region of this publication and the tastes of its readers, the Free Press informs us, certainly for the first time, that "She (England) in Military prowess has many equals, many superiors; on this ground she must not expect—she need not wish to shine—in the field she has been sometimes successful," &c.—Well, we scarcely expected to have read this, even in the Free Press. We had thought that such hallucinations had been limited to the ignorant and prejudiced, and that no one of ordinary information or judgment could have made such an assertion. The world at large admits, that in Military prowess, in fair fight, by land or sea, Britain has scarcely her equal, certainly not her superior. Is her Military equal or superior to be found in France, whose Armies have fled before us from the days of Agincourt to Waterloo? Are they to be found in other nations which have been thrashed like wheat by our gallant foes, the French? After all, it must be admitted we are sometimes successful. We, for our parts, are satisfied that the true cause of our greater sea fame is simply this,—that for once we have met our enemies by land, we have met them twenty times by sea. Our victories are in the direct ratio of our land and sea fights. Britons are Britons, whether soldiers or sailors, and the elements of victory are in the man, and the element on which he fights has little to do with it. The Free Press may have no such intention, but the article we allude to may do more towards keeping up the old and almost exploded ill-feeling between the two services than the writer may be aware of. We would deprecate, therefore, all such remarks, even if true; but these are not borne out by the history of the past, or the recollections of the present, generations of England and the continent of Europe. Union is strength. Why cast the apple of discord among the members of the United Service?

WE have been informed by a friend to ourselves and to the services, whose interests we fearlessly advocate, that some remarks in our last number, on what we styled the "Silent System," gave offence where we least intended it. We did not wish to make any animadversion on particular individuals, but on the needless and injurious mystery in which matters, the most trivial as affects the public, but of the greatest importance to individuals involved in them, are kept at most of the subordinate offices, as compared with the open and obliging communications to all officers applying at the Horse Guards on subjects in which they are personally concerned. We must, however, repeat that the loudest complaints have reached us, both from officers and men at Chatham and Maidstone, on the uncertainty in which they have been kept respecting their embarkation. We have, however, since learned, that on Saturday last no decisive order had been received, and that we were erroneously informed of its having been sent to Maidstone and Chatham last week. The truth is, that the original arrangements were cancelled, which led to delay, and this delay was attributed to another cause—staff-mystery. We consider this explanation due for having assigned to the grievance complained of, a wrong cause: for our remarks on the "silent system" throughout the subordinate Staff of the United Kingdom we have no apology to make—nor could it be required; for we believe that, in attributing strict secrecy to office-men, we only attribute to them that very quality on which they most pride and pique themselves, as the test of their efficiency and capacity.

WE much regret to observe in the Sydney Herald, of August last, that a trial of four soldiers of the 80th Regiment has proved too convincingly that Military discipline is not long retained in the penal settlements. We believe that few regiments enjoyed a higher reputation for discipline than the 80th Regiment before its embarkation for New South Wales; but the perusal of this trial discloses such a degree of laxity as we can scarcely credit. It is astounding to us to find it most clearly proved in evidence, that British soldiers, over an ironed gang of convicts, conspired with their prisoners to unlock the prison, knock off their irons, and conjointly commit robberies with the fire-arms of Her Majesty entrusted to them. The evidence of the Corporal of the 80th shows, that so lax was the discipline, that the sentries relieved themselves without him, and one of the privates admitted that the whole detachment, except the very guard that committed the robbery, was drunk; and all this with three Officers within three miles of the party! How baneful must the contamination of convicts be to our soldiery, when we read of this taking place in one of the best-conducted corps in the service. But this is no solitary case; we scarcely ever look into a newspaper from Australasia without noticing the conviction of a soldier for felony. Indeed demoralisation has utterly corrupted society in the penal settlements, and we shudder to think of the crimes and enormities committed by our countrymen there. We must ask—Can no plan be devised for dispensing with the services of our soldiers over road-gangs, and in other duties which bring them into close intercourse with the convicts? At present the British soldier performs in these colonies the duties of a policeman or turnkey. We trust the evil is not without a remedy.

In reference to this subject we annex a letter from a correspondent:—

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Chatham, 12th February, 1839.

SIR, I last week sent you Sydney papers, containing the trial of four soldiers of the 80th regt. as well to call your attention to the subject of my former correspondence, as regards the bad effects produced by the present system of detaching the troops of the line in New South Wales, as to convince you that the remedy I purposed was such as would prevent a deal of crime among the troops in that colony, and materially benefit the service and the country, by forming a strong veteran company of well-conducted and experienced soldiers, to do that duty for a certain number of years, at the expiration of which they shall be discharged, and have an allotment of land and a small pension as a reward for their services, would be a measure calculated to prevent the recurrence of those disgraceful crimes, of which the soldiers employed on the stockade have too often been guilty, to the great injury of the settlers. When the regiments, intended for service in New South Wales, are brought to Chatham, the old soldiers are discharged, and the commanding officers are under the necessity of completing their regiments in a short time, so that the most of the men are very young soldiers, and on the arrival of the corps they are sent out on detachment without a proper knowledge of their duty: some of the men are men of bad character, and you are aware that one scabby sheep will spoil a whole flock, especially when not kept under proper discipline, and it is quite out of the power of non-commissioned officers to keep the men in order without the assistance of commissioned officers, especially when they are men of bad or indifferent character. I, therefore, hope that when you publish the trial or any part of it, of those four men, who have been tried for a crime before unknown in the British army, you will make such remarks as will show the necessity of selecting men for that duty: were veterans, looking forward to a comfortable settlement in the country, employed, there would be little fear of their committing crimes that would bring inevitable ruin on their families and themselves. Were such a thing to happen, they might be clothed with a dress suitable to the country, and answer both the purpose of soldiers and police. As I before stated, the men from cavalry regiments could do the mounted duty. It would give a few officers employment, and be an excellent corps for men raised from the ranks, or poor officers who have large families. I am, Sir, with great respect, AN OLD SOLDIER.

The Weekly Dispatch, we understand, employs a literary, or rather an illiterate butcher, judging from his style, to cut and hack Her Majesty's English into a disjointed article on "Horrid Torture," suited to the tastes of his cognate readers. We observe, that instead of giving the Smithfield men some useful information about themselves and their beasts, he considers them to be not mere butchers and drovers, and he accordingly gives them a fancy article, full of the poetry of the shambles, and drawn all bloody from his raw imagination, indulging itself in some ideal scene, conjured up on hearing some such simple fact as that at Woolwich, or elsewhere, some scoundrel, after wearing out the patience of his brother soldiers with repeated rascality, had been tried for his offences—found guilty, and sentenced to a flogging. The butcher's tender feelings break out in an article, and those sympathies which are unexcited by the cry of a lamb beneath his knife, are awakened by the voice of a nightingale *.

* A Nightingale is the soldier's name for a fellow who sings out when flogged. Thieves are generally singing birds.—Ed.

THE reports of the 7th Fusiliers being destined for India have dwindled away, as we believed they would. Nothing but their actual embarkation could convince us that this regiment will proceed to India. In this opinion we are not singular; it is that generally held among the officers of the Army; and as an opportunity can readily be found of sending the Fusiliers to Canada, we feel confident the result will prove the correctness of our information. Is not the 72d at the Cape, and to be relieved? Is the 7th or the 42d to be the relieving regiment? Or are both these long-favoured regiments to embark for Canada? We venture to promise both corps good stations; this we know, they have not served in bad climates during the last thirty years. One good turn deserves another—therefore, one good tour deserves another. Such would seem to have been the principles acted on; and, as the former is admitted to be a sound precept in morals, the latter must be considered a sound Military maxim.

As the Naval and Military Commission are about continuing their labours, it is to be hoped that the late ukase of the Emperor of Russia will be brought under their notice, in which it is decreed, that officers of every rank in the Navy shall at once have an increase of pay; thus showing His Imperial Majesty's earnest desire to give encouragement to this branch of his service, and which, we are assured, will be gladly imitated by our own Naval Administration, whenever the power to do so is placed at their disposal, as we sanguinely trust it will be during the present Session.

In another ukase, the Emperor has ordered that the pay of those Commanders shall be doubled whose ships, through their diligence and attention, do not require any extensive repairs after ten years; and if not for fifteen years, their pay shall be tripled. This is certainly holding out a high reward to officers to be careful and attentive in the execution of their duties, and, above all, to watch narrowly that their ships do not get on shore, which would, in most cases, effectually put an end to their prospects of obtaining this large boon. How far it might be wise for us to follow this example closely, we are not prepared to say, though we think, that were some reward always given to those officers who had, at the end of one, two, or three years, proved that in the execution of a series of active and responsible duties their ship had not incurred the same expenses as other ships employed on the same or less exposed services, it would be attended with great public advantage, as tending to excite a spirit of zeal and diligent watchfulness on the part of those in whose hands rest the safety of the public property and the lives of those entrusted to their charge; for we all know that "'Tis the hope of reward that sweetens labour," and gives energy to all our acts and deeds.

IN commenting on the conversation which took place on the subject of Naval Education in the House of Lords on Tuesday, the Times has totally misunderstood and misapplied an expression used by the Earl of Minto. We allude to his Lordship's declaration of his opinion, that the young officer's education began at the wrong end, in the late Naval College, which the Times has applied to the shipwright's education in the School of Naval Architecture, quite a different matter.

Our contemporary is also in error in assigning to the Earl of Minto the merit of abolishing the latter institution, which was, in fact, effected by the late King when Lord High Admiral, in 1827, or by Lord Melville in the following year.

We are glad to have at length our powerful contemporary's admission, that the School of Naval Architecture, or any national institution on that plan, is useless in a country where everything relating to the science of ship-building can be easily acquired by the ordinary means; but the art cannot be acquired by any sort of labour, and will only be found in the possession of those who have an inherent genius for the work, for no mathematical skill can advance the science beyond a certain point.

It is evident that the Times has derived its information, relative to Sir William Symonds, from an impure or a prejudiced source, because, on the very points upon which it asserts him to have failed, he has been invariably more correct than builders who have preceded him—we mean as to calculated displacement, &c. If Captains persisted in trimming their ships, notwithstanding his repeated remonstrances, entirely contrary to his designs, surely it is not fair to put the blame on the Surveyor when mishaps and failures, which he had predicted from such conduct, occur! We hear nothing now of misfortunes to the Pique; on the contrary, every succeeding report is more and more in favour of that ship, for she invariably beats everything she encounters at sea, and proves an admirable sea-boat. As for the Vanguard and Gorgon, we defy the whole world to produce vessels equal to either in their respective classes. Because some individual addresses an anonymous statement, full of errors, to the journals, our contemporary should not come to the conclusions he has done; the merits and performances of ships can only be fairly ascertained from the official reports of the officers, and these, we are glad to learn, are most favourable. As for improvements on successive productions, there can be no harm in these, unless it is admitted that the utmost perfection has been already attained.

THE Captain Frederick Berkeley, R.N., has addressed a letter to Sir John Barrow, "On the System of War and Peace Complements in Her Majesty's Navy," in which the gallant officer adduces good reasons why the crews should be increased, and proposes a mode of accomplishing it at a trifling expense.

As we have been for years labouring at this point, we are gratified to find our opinions backed by such high authority as Captain Berkeley, who is an officer of superior intelligence, and having been lately in command of a ship, competent to speak from practical experience.

The gallant officer attributes the difficulty of manning ships to the decrease of seamen, caused by the extension of steam navigation. On this point we apprehend he is mistaken. The official returns show that (disregarding steam-vessels altogether) the registered and licensed sailing vessels of the United Kingdom are on the increase, consequently greater numbers of seamen are required to navigate them, and our merchants frequently experience a difficulty in this respect.

The fact is, our seamen are increasing not decreasing in numbers; but they cannot be created in a day, or a year, or so quickly as ships are built—and the demand at the present moment is very great, owing to the prosperous state of the shipping interests.

As regards the "along-shore men," we admit that in some localities they have nearly disappeared; but this is not the case in the Thames, the men belonging to the Waterman's Company are employed not only in wherries, but in barges—in fact, in all river craft, and we apprehend their numbers are as great now as ever, for these craft have multiplied exceedingly. Seamen are also employed to a certain extent in steam-vessels; and the Masters of these always select the best men, who are continually changing about in coasters, sometimes in steam, sometimes in sailing vessels.

But any decrease of "along-shore men" that may appear in certain situations, is amply compensated by the vast increase of men of the same or better quality employed in the Scotch and Irish fisheries, and therefore no apprehension need be entertained on this score. By granting the pension whilst serving in peace as well as war, and other inducements, it will be found that we shall procure better men—and it is much to be wished that some plan may be devised to induce our merchant seamen of the North to give the Navy a trial.

THE question is not unfrequently asked, "Of what utility is it that Naval Officers should learn the mechanism and management of the steam engine, since there are persons appointed for its especial superintendence?" To which we shall endeavour, as concisely as we can, to respond; but beg previously to remark that this question invariably comes from Engineers themselves: whence we may infer that there is still lurking a portion of the old leaven of jealous mistrust, lest they fall under the inspection of Supervisors, which was so conspicuous among the civil Engineers in the employ of Government when steam-vessels were first added to the Royal Navy. The same interrogatory would be just as pertinent, were the Masters and Boatswains to ask why the Captain of a frigate, &c., need be conversant with navigation, seamanship, or the art of rigging, seeing the said Captain may or may not exercise his talents and skill in these matters, as he feels disposed, there being a Master on board to see to the ship's reckoning, and the First Lieutenant usually working the vessel, as well as regulating her internal economy, &c. Yet now that a new and most important power has been engrafted into the service, we find Philo-Mechanicus startled at the bare thought of a Midshipman in the engine-room, whilst the suggestion of placing a Lieutenant there, sets C. H. R. in an actual uproar, under an impression (but from whence he draws his inference we know not) that the said Lieutenant and Mates are to usurp the place of the Engineer. But let us to our point, viz., "the necessity for officers being conversant with steam machinery, &c." C. H. R., who is indignant at having the "Engineers of the British Navy classed with those of the civil service," or, as he expresses it, "with the band of desperadoes (those employed in the steamers) in the expedition to Portugal;" and who asks in no very courteous manner "on what plea" they are so classed, furnishes a most ample response in the very motive which excites his indignation, namely, "that they declined their aid in the hour of need." Now, without questioning the feeling or inclination of the individuals who commanded those steam-vessels, it is very clear, had each been an embryo Nelson, the opportunity for display of valour would have presented itself in vain; not one could have helped himself: for, though skilled in seamanship, and commander of his own vessel, yet was he subordinate to his very engineer, from sheer ignorance on a most essential point. But suppose each had been efficient in the management of the engines, the said dissenting Engineers would not have been consulted a second time, though the option of superintending their own engines would, doubtless, be allowed to them, if they expressed a wish to efface the disgrace they would thus have incurred; but careless, however, whether they solicited the charge or not. And may not a similar incident, by possibility, befall our own Navy on the Canada Lakes, where both steamers and Engineers are pertaining to merchants, and the British pennant only a temporary ornament at the mast-heads of hired vessels? We have no Engineers "of the British Navy," as contradistinguished by C.H.R., from those of the civil service, in Canada; and must do as we did before training men for ourselves, viz., procure them from the civil service, on which we were long dependent in the Royal Navy; and when we know this fact, the indignation excited by the classification, and for which the "plea" is somewhat unceremoniously demanded, strongly reminds us of the story of the kettle and his brother pot; for it is on this "plea," that the classification does hold good between the now military, and the then mixed military-civil service, which was an incongruous anomaly, devoid of that necessary discipline and subservience so essential to the well being of the Navy*; and to correct which was the inducement for training young boys for the service, and habituating them to the customary restraints of a man-of-war. Would it not be equally incongruous that the same officers, under whose eye these lads are trained from the pupilage of youth, should subsequently become dependent on them, when Engineers, through ignorance of the steam engine; and that too because the Royal Corps of Naval Engineers set their face against the admission of Lieutenants and Mates into the engine-room for instruction? It is true that there are steamers commanded by men totally ignorant of both seamanship and navigation, as well as of the steam engine; but will Philo-Mechanicus or C. H. R. say that such should be? If so, we have only to extend the principle to the sailing vessel, and, provided the First Lieutenant and Master are efficient, the drudgery of probation may be dispensed with, in behalf of our young aristocratic aspirants, and a short cut to promotion and honours established, whereby they may step from the cradle of the nursery into the cabin of a man-of-war, without subjecting their patience, as at present, to the test of some eight or nine years, ere they attain the top of their profession. No, every officer should be acquainted with the minutiæ of his profession; and, at the risk of incurring the sneers of the whole corps of Royal and Civil Engineers, we will contend that every officer who aspires to the command of that class of vessel, destined henceforth to form the post of honour, should render himself conversant with the power by which its magical movements are regulated, and not rest his credit and future fame solely on the chance state of nervous tension or debility of those under his command. Besides, Engineers themselves will entertain a higher respect for that commander who is at home with them in their own science, and, consequently, who can duly appreciate their individual exertions, than for another who is ignorantly blind to their merits. We trust the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty will adopt the valuable suggestion of the gallant Napier, and require officers of steam vessels to inform themselves on this point. The subject is of too much importance to be thus briefly noticed, and we shall, therefore, resume it in our next.

* Many of them have since returned to the civil service.

Considering that the exposure of books of a bad tendency, however obscure, may be sometimes desirable, we have been looking over the later numbers of Alexander Somerville's History of the British Legion. It is rather strange that none of the charges he roundly promulgates against so many officers by name, should ever have been called in question. If neglected in real or affected contempt, we think the parties are in error, for the anecdotes in this work have an air of truth, and the rest of it, from its very worthlessness and unpatriotic tone, is, we are sorry to say, likely to be peculiarly acceptable to a vast number of the present generation. If any one doubts this, let him occasionally glance at such newspapers as the "Weekly Dispatch," or many other periodicals of the same degraded tone, which have, nevertheless, an extensive circulation. We confess this production alone would sicken us with the promoters of the "march of intellect" amongst the lower orders. The author's style is not bad, considering his circumstances, and he has considerable talents for description, but when (as he constantly does) he proceeds to dogmatise and affect the philosopher, he irresistibly reminds one of a learned pig. His conceit is unbounded. Witness his trash about phrenology; his attempt to resolve all courage into madness; his pronouncing a book, called "Vicissitudes of a Scottish Soldier," "one of the best written works on the Peninsular War," (though it is obviously a made-up affair, and the soldier—if he had really existed—must have been a very bad one); his dubbing Scott's "Don Roderick" (though he professes to admire the author's genius) "a poem very frothy, yet dull and exceedingly stupid;" and yet this is not the worst. He labours to cure Englishmen of their nationality, which certainly does not seem to abound too much amongst us as it is. He sneers at Colonel Napier, because he has not represented us as defeated in Spain. He slanders Sir John Moore, and extols the French soldiers above our own! He predicts that Soult will be considered superior to Wellington, and that our troops will be defeated in Canada! A bad cavalier he was known to be; he has pretty clearly shown himself a bad soldier. Of the heroic temperament he has obviously little. According to the modern system of book-making, very long extracts, from printed works, are continually given, and of the philosophical disquisitions we suspect that much has been hinted by others, though appearing, from the style, to be expressed in his own words. The contradictory nature of some of the sentiments makes this probable. For instance, though in many passages exhibiting himself as one of the most cold-blooded of cosmopolites: in one he represents himself as a lover of his country "with great national pride," &c.; and, with respect to the Legion, his own regiment in particular, he throughout exhibits much (often too much) esprit de corps. Strangest of all, though he has been repeatedly accused (we doubt not with reason) of ingratitude to his friends, he professes himself free from animosity towards the officers of the Greys, his former regiment, and gives its then commander a high character for humanity and kindness, though he makes light of his professional talents.

A second edition of "A Letter to the Earl of Minto, by One of the People," has appeared, in which the author, availing himself of several pages of introduction and postscript, enters more fully into the necessity for cultivating our "steam" resources, and particularly advocates the plan which report states to be in contemplation—of converting a few of the frigates of the Hebe class, of which we possess nearly fifty, into powerful steam ships of war.

The Court.

The Queen gave audience on Saturday to Count Mandelsloh, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary from the King of Wirtemburg, to deliver a letter from his Sovereign.—Viscount Melbourne and Lord John Russell had audiences of her Majesty. In the evening her Majesty entertained at dinner the Duchess of Kent, the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, the Duke of Wellington, and a large party.—Her Majesty and her august mother attended Divine Service on Sunday morning in the Chapel Royal.—On Monday the Queen visited the Princess Sophia at Kensington. The Earl of Albemarle and Viscount Melbourne had audiences of the Queen.—On Tuesday Viscount Melbourne had an audience. In the evening her Majesty honoured Drury Lane Theatre with her presence, to witness the performance of Farinelli.—Her Majesty held a Privy Council on Wednesday.—Lord Dundas was sworn in Lord Lieutenant of the North Riding of York. A new seal for one of the Colonies was approved of. Her Majesty gave audience to the Marquess of Lansdowne, Viscount Melbourne, and Lord Hill. The Queen rode out on horseback in the afternoon.—On Thursday Viscount Melbourne had an audience of the Queen. Her Majesty rode out on horseback in the afternoon. The Queen, accompanied by the Duchess of Kent, honoured Covent Garden Theatre with her presence in the evening.—Her Majesty had a dinner party last evening.

Despatches from the Governors of the Cape of Good Hope and the Bahamas were received on Saturday at the Colonial Office. Major Denny, 71st regt., arrived in town on Saturday evening, from Canada, with despatches for the Secretary of State for the Colonies. Despatches from Sir E. C. Desbrowe, Minister Plenipotentiary at the Hague, were received at the Foreign Office on Sunday. On Monday despatches, dated 9th Oct., were received at the Colonial-Office, from the Governor of Van Dieman's Land; and on Tuesday from the Governor of Gibraltar; and on Thursday from Sir George Arthur, Lieutenant-Governor of Upper Canada; and from Sir W. Nicolay, Governor of the Mauritius. Despatches were sent off last evening from the Colonial-office, for Sir Lionel Smith, Governor of Jamaica.

Prince George of Cambridge has completed his tour of Andalusia, and has returned again to Gibraltar.

Sir George Grey is appointed Judge-Advocate, and resigns the Under-Secretaryship of the Colonies.

The National has been seized for an article representing the French Army as in a most dangerous state of disaffection.

It will afford much satisfaction to the numerous friends of Sir Herbert Taylor, to be informed that he is recovering from the dangerous illness which has afflicted him at Rome.

The exterior of Kensington Palace has been thoroughly re-embellished, and the wing occupied by the Princess Sophia entirely rebuilt. The apartments of the Duke of Sussex have been also painted, and otherwise re-embellished, during his extended visiting tour. It is rumoured that her Majesty, after the Easter recess, will sojourn at the palace (where she still retains her apartments) for a month or six weeks.

Sir Rufane Shaw Donkin has been returned for Sandwich without opposition.

The Marquis of Normanby has succeeded to the colonial seals, and Lord Morpeth has a seat in the cabinet, still retaining the Secretaryship of Ireland. Lord Normanby leaves Dublin this day, and Lord Clarendon is reported as his successor.

The will and five codicils of the late Lieut.-Gen. Phillips, have been proved in Doctors'-Commons by the executors. The testator's personal property is sworn under 90,000*l*., independent of valuable freehold and other estates in Salop, which are left to his wife and three sons. The late General served 40 years in the Bengal Army.

M. Van De Weyer, the Belgian Ambassador, was married on Tuesday to the rich heiress, daughter of Mr. Bates, of Portland-place.

The election for Coronership of Middlesex commenced on Thursday. Mr. Wakley and Mr. Adey are the candidates. The former has had on each day an overwhelming majority of votes.

On Thursday, in the Queen's Bench, Mr. B. Gregory, the Proprietor and Editor of the Satirist, was found guilty of a libel on Mr. Hogg, M.P. for Beverley, and his lady.

The Queen has, on the nomination of Lord Foley, appointed Mr. Alfred Perkins one of Her Majesty's honourable corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms, vice Blackmore, retired. Her Majesty has appointed the Hon. E. Butler Lieutenant of her Majesty's hon. corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms, vice Sir S. T. Spry, retired.

The new Great Seal for Ireland, which has just received the approval of the Queen in Council, has on one side a figure of Her Majesty seated on a throne, supported by two figures of Religion and Justice, and on the other an equestrian portrait of the Queen, the horse being led by a page in a fancy costume.

The Thomas Coutts sailed from Portsmouth on Sunday last, with Sir James Rivett Carnac, Bart., the Governor of Bombay, his family, and suite, on board.

The Nelson Tribute.—The sub-committee upon the models, in competition for this monument, have been engaged throughout the week in considering, so as to make a report to the general committee and subscribers at large. Rumour speaks highly of designs by Baily, Laugh, Carew, and others.

The Indian Prince, David Sombro, is making preparations at Rome for a grand service in honour of his grandmother, the Begum of Sirdhanad, for which purpose the Church of Saint Charles Borneo had been left at his disposal. The Begum, who was a French woman by birth, left by her will 60,000 scudi, upwards of 300,000f., to the Pope, on condition that His Holiness should personally perform a mass for the repose of her soul.

Her Majesty has given permission to the younger brothers and sister of the late Earl of Clarendon to take the rank of the sons and daughter of an Earl.

Wellington City Statue.—The sub-committee have come to a final arrangement with Sir Francis Chantrey. Government having presented the material of cannon taken at Waterloo, of the value of upwards of 1500*l*.—making the whole subscription up to 10,500*l*.—the guns and the sum of 2000*l*. are immediately to be given to the artist, a second sum when the small model is finished, and the remainder when the work is completed. Sir Francis undertakes that this shall be done by Midsummer 1843. The same horse as that upon which Sir Thomas Munro is mounted is not to be employed, but another modelled and cast.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, Feb. 11.—On the motion of the Bishop of London, an address to Her Majesty for certain papers relative to the transmission of letters by the Post-office on the Lord's day, and with regard to idolatrous meetings in India, was agreed to.—The Marquess of Londonderry said he had considered that he should have been able to have expressed a professional opinion of the affairs which had taken place in Canada, independently of the general question. But finding, from the papers now laid on the table, the certainty of a discussion of the most important nature upon a most important subject, he considered that he ought not to detach that discussion by the notice he had given. He reserved to himself, however, the right of taking up the professional view of the subject when the matter should come under debate. He must take leave to say one word in reference to what passed on Friday evening. He, perhaps, should not have resisted a specification of the place to which he then alluded, had it not been that the noble lord the Commander-in-Chief made a direct call upon him for that specification when that noble lord must have recollected that that very morning he had had a conversation with him upon the subject, when he had asked him for a public order, which had been sent out. The noble Commander-in-Chief, therefore, having been put fully into possession of every information on the subject by him within two hours of the time at which the subject was mentioned in their Lordship's house, he was the last person surrounded by any set of noble lords who ought to have persisted in calling for that specification, respected as that noble Commander-in-Chief was, and had always been, by him (the noble Marquess), and then whom no one ever respected him more.—Lord Melbourne laid upon the table papers relative to Canada, and also Lord Durham's report on the state of the North American colonies.—A long discussion ensued on the subject of the publication of the report in the newspapers before being laid before Parliament.—The Earl of Minto asked the Earl of Hardwicke, who had withdrawn his motion on the state of the Navy, whether he was disposed to name another day for the discussion.—The Earl of Hardwicke would not bind himself to bring it forward during the Session. Lord Colchester thought it unfortunate that the motion had been withdrawn. He had made statements regarding what had fallen from Lord Minto, which he wished for an opportunity of making good. The Earl of Minto said,—"I take this opportunity of stating that I perfectly agree with what fell from the noble Lord who spoke last—that it is exceedingly unfortunate, especially as regards the impression made upon the public mind, that the noble Earl has abstained from the discussion, to which I have been so long and so anxiously looking. I only wish now to say, that if the noble Earl, or any other noble Lord, should think proper to bring on this question, I shall be prepared to defend the administration of the Admiralty as at present conducted, and I hope to furnish a complete answer and refutation to the numerous statements which have been forced upon the public."—Adjourned.

Tuesday, Feb. 12.—The Earl of Hardwicke, in consequence of the abolition of the Naval College, inquired what system of education it was intended to adopt in reference to the Naval service? Lord Minto answered at considerable length, defending the abolition of the College, an opinion which he said had the sanction of the most experienced officers. There had been a school for gunnery established, which would embrace all the branches of useful education; and it was intended to introduce a system of instruction on board all sea-going vessels, by the appointment of superior instructors. The subject called forth some desultory discussion. We have noticed this matter in a separate article.

Thursday, Feb. 14.—A conversation arose regarding Lord Durham's report, and the despatches connected therewith; in the course of which Lord Melbourne stated, in answer to the Duke of Wellington's inquiry, that he should not object to the production of Sir F. Head's despatches.

Friday, Feb. 15.—Lord Colchester gave notice that on Tuesday next he would move for further returns on the state of the Navy, and in doing so he would take the opportunity of stating his views as to the numerical strength and efficiency of our ships in commission.—The Duke of Wellington moved an Address to Her Majesty for copies of the correspondence between the Secretary of State and Sir F. Head; also copies of the despatches of Sir John Colborne respecting the establishment of rectories in Upper Canada. After some discussion, copies of some and extracts of others were ordered to be laid on the table.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, Feb. 11.—Lord J. RUSSELL, in laying Lord Durham's report on Canada on the table, said that the course which the Government intended to pursue on this subject was to introduce a measure respecting Canada before Easter; and that being then printed, the second reading of it should take place immediately after Easter. His Lordship introduced several Bills relative to the administration of justice.—Mr. FOX MAULE obtained leave to bring in a Bill for improving the police in and near metropolis.

TUESDAY, Feb. 12.—Lord J. RUSSELL, having presented papers regarding education in England, entered into extended details of the views of the Government on this subject. He intimated that a Board was to be established, consisting of the Marquess of Lansdowne and others, to carry the plans into effect, by the establishment of normal schools, &c.; and that he proposed to ask a grant of 30.000*l.* for the purpose of working out the plans. Much discussion ensued. Sir R. PEEL and others contended that the plans were essentially defective, and could not be expected to work well.—Mr. Sergeant TALFOURD obtained leave to renew his Bill of last Session, "To amend the Law of Copyright," after Mr. Warburton had stated that he should again oppose the measure.

THURSDAY, Feb. 14.—Sir R. Donkin took the oaths and his seat for Sandwich. A new writ was ordered for Devonport, in the room of Sir G. Grey, who was appointed Judge-Advocate-General.—Mr. C. WOOD stated, in answer to questions from Sir E. Codrington and Capt. Gordon, that neither Sir John Barrow's dissertation on the state of the Navy, nor Capt. Berkley's pamphlet, had been published at the suggestion or with the sanction of the Admiralty.—Nearly the whole of the remainder of the evening was occupied with a discussion upon Lord Mahon's resolution relative to the trial of controverted elections. The resolution was negatived on a division by 177 to 63.

FRIDAY, Feb. 15.—After the presentation of a vast number of petitions, principally against the Corn-laws, Mr. C. WYNN moved that a new writ be issued for Southwark, in the room of Mr. D. W. Harvey, who had accepted the office of Registrar of Hackney Carriages. The ATTORNEY-GENERAL moved, as an amendment, that "the papers relative to the appointment of Mr. Harvey to the office of Registrar of Hackney Coaches be referred to a select committee, and that the committee be directed to report its opinion, whether Mr. Harvey had vacated his seat in the House by accepting the said office." Amendment was agreed to.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—The report of the Mexicans having issued letters of marque to the corsairs of the United States, occupies the French journals. The National admits that this is the most serious result of the quarrel. Two-thirds of the crew of a cruiser must be Mexican, in order to entitle her to be treated as a belligerent, not a pirate. But crews of Spanish South Americans are easily found in the ports of the United States. Should, however, France be rigorous in enforcing the law by hanging some crews of American pirates, will the Americans bear it? Will they not take advantage of the irritation already caused by the long blockade, to force the Government into reprisals, and involve France in a war with America?

SPAIN.—Letters from Madrid, of the 7th, and Saragossa, of the 9th, do not bring news of much importance. Espartero and Van Halen were making due exertions for the ensuing campaign.

BELGIUM.—The journals of the 13th state that King Leopold has sent orders to M. Van de Weyer to sign the Treaty of London on the 15th at latest, after having struggled as far as possible to ameliorate the conditions relative to the Scheldt.

GUADALOUPE.—From a letter dated the end of November:—

"We have had the yellow fever, the typhus, and other fevers at Pointe-a-Pitre and Basse Terre. Almost all the Europeans who arrived in the colony died in a few days. Most of the gens-d'armes sent from France three years ago have fallen victims. The troops in the several garrisons in particular have suffered, and are reduced to an insignificant number. In one company of Artillery only four men survive. The epidemic has severely visited the priests of the several parishes; those of Basse Terre and Pointe a-Pitre have perished. The medical men have escaped almost alone the disorders which they combat with the most devoted self-denial. The Isle of Marie Galante, which had till now been spared by epidemic disorders, even in the most fatal periods, has had its turn; the principal sufferers were children."

Judicial Wit.—At a recent bankrupt examination, it appeared that the unfortunate had dealt largely in discounts, and on one occasion was obliged to take as part payment, at a heavy price, a fine picture by an old master, of Elijah fed by Ravens. "These (observed Sir G—— R——, glancing at the ravens) were, I suppose, the first accommodation bills that ever existed."

Theatres.

OLYMPIC.—On Monday evening a new one-act piece called Our Cousin German, was brought out. It is a mere trifle, but a pleasant one, and was favourably received.

ST. JAMES'S.—Three new pieces were produced on Monday night: the first, entitled The Young Sculptor, was decidedly a bit; the second, Friends and Neighbours, may be also ranked among the number of successful aspirants for favour, though its reception was not so warm as that of its predecessor; the third, The Troublesome Lodger, was heard very patiently to the close, when it was saluted by a storm of cheers and hisses, which rendered it doubtful whether the ayes or the noes had it. This piece has since been judiciously altered in the defective scenes, and consequently the Troublesome Lodger will be a welcome tenant at the St. James's Theatre for some time to come.

Literary Notices.

The Deluge. By J. E. Reade. Saunders and Otley.

WE are happy to greet Mr. Reade so soon again after his late appearance; and still more happy to greet him on ground so congenial to his high-toned spirit, and the deep and pure sensibilities which are allied to it. It looks well for Poetry—that can dare to show itself boldly in such adverse times; and still better for the poet,—who thus proves to us that his one great aim is, to deserve that high and noble name—leaving what the world calls "success" to come when it may.

"The Deluge" was written, it appears, many years ago,—before the appearance of those extraordinary works with which its subject in some measure interferes—the "Loves of the Angels," and Byron's "Cain," &c. Had it been otherwise, we might have deemed it, if not injudicious, at least unsafe, to tempt comparisons for which there was no need. But nobody will pretend that a poet—and especially such a poet as Mr. Reade—should suppress an important work, merely because another of his high calling has chosen a similar subject. On the contrary, the comparisons which such a competition suggests,—if not instituted as a competition, but purely by accident, as in the present case,—are likely to be as curious as they are interesting. Our limits forbid us to even glance at such a comparison. All we can do in this respect is to say generally that "The Deluge" may safely be put to such a test. Its scenes are laid chiefly among the solitudes of Mount Hermon, and finally in the midst of the mighty world of waters, even up to the latest moment of their swallowing up all mortal and material things,—save only the little remnant that float upon the face of the dread element, at once a token of past evil and of future good. The descriptions that arise out of these scenes are executed with great skill and power; but they are kept quite subsidiary to the human passions that form the main feature of the work. These latter spring chiefly from a communion between certain immortal beings of the angelic tribe, and two mortal maidens of the earth;—and it is the guilty love—guilty on both parts—thus engendered, which is the medium of bringing on that catastrophe which gives title to the poem. In all these parts, the poet fully redeems the high reputation to which his previous works have pledged him; and, upon the whole, his new work is a noble addition to the rich stock of our poetical literature.

The Rise and Progress of the English Constitution. By A. R. Stephens, M.A., F.R.S., Barrister at Law. Parker.

WE have always avoided meddling with political literature, nor should we have mentioned the present work had it been possible to discover from its pages to what party its author belongs. If all our historians would show themselves equally cautious of substituting opinions for facts, we should no longer have to complain with Goethe, that novels are received as history, whilst histories are metamorphosed into novels. Should Mr. Stephens ever mount the judicial bench, he has only to display the same impartiality which he has shown in his constitutional researches, to insure himself reputation not unworthy a descendant of Sir Matthew Hale.

A History of Upper and Lower California, from their First Discovery to the Present Time. By Alexander Forbes, Esq. Smith, Elder, and Co.

FROM the very little knowledge we possess of the early history and the present state of California (discovered in the year 1534 by a squadron sent out by Cortez) Mr. Forbes' publication could not be otherwise than acceptable; but it becomes doubly so at the present time, owing to the declaration of independence by the peninsula, the changed relations with Mexico, and the position of the latter with respect to Great Britain and France. Our author furnishes very ample details of the productions of California, and its advantages as a field for European colonisation, or emigration. We also have a complete history of the missionary establishments, and of the present conditions of the Indians; and the volume winds up with an appendix, relating to steam navigation in the Pacific. Both in a political and commercial point of view the work is of considerable importance.

We shall make one extract in respect to the nations of Upper California:—

"The men in the mornings are accustomed to plaster themselves over with mud. This, they say, keeps out the cold; and accordingly when the sun grows hot they wash it off. These people have their marriages, but they consist of no other ceremony than the consent of the parties, and they are only binding till they disagree or choose to part. They have no other mode of cancelling a marriage, than by using the phrase, 'I throw you away.' It is nevertheless true that we found many couples, both young and old, who lived in great unity and peace, esteeming their children, and their children them. Parentage or relationship forms no obstacle to their intermarriages. It is very common for the wife to urge her husband to marry her sisters, and even their mother: and the common custom is, when a man first marries, that he takes the whole of the sisters for wives. These many wives of one husband live without jealousies or disputes, each looking on the whole of the children as their own, and the whole living in one house. In fact, the first baptisms made at this mission were of three children all born within two months, sons of an Indian man and of three sisters, to all of whom he was married, as well as to their mother."

Stammering Practically Considered, with the Treatment in Detail. By T. Bartlett, Assistant-Surgeon, the King's Own Light Infantry. Sherwood, Gilbert, and Piper.

THIS is the most practical treatise upon stammering that we recollect having met with. It is based upon a thorough scientific knowledge of the organs of speech, and of their use and mode of operation. And most gratifying and cheering must its perusal prove to such persons as may happen to be afflicted with the complaint to which it relates; since the writer, in perfect accordance with the opinion of Sheridan the elocutionist, affirms "that of the multitude of instances which offer, of a vitiated articulation, there is not one in a thousand which proceeds from any natural defect or impediment." On the contrary, it is shown "that perfect articulation may take place, when the most important organs of speech have met with extensive injuries of a very severe and dangerous description, apparently rendering any articulation perfectly impossible." "Since, then," observes Mr. Bartlett, "imperfect formation of the structures on which easy and perfect articulation depends has no reference whatever to the cause of stammering, a remedy may be discovered, and is herein offered for this disease, however inveterate in its character, and of whatever standing, which, if daily applied, and perseveringly followed up, cannot fail of effecting a perfect cure."

According to our judgment, Mr. Bartlett's rules are so clear, so simple, so perfectly natural in their origin and mode of application, that, acting upon them, we should scarcely shrink from undertaking the cure of the most inveterate stammerer that might be produced.

Dr. Watts' Divine and Moral Songs. Set to Music by E. Clare.

One Hundred Psalms and Hymn Tunes in Score. Composed by W. L. Viner. R. Cocks and Co.

THESE publications deserve our warmest praise. Mr. Clare's harmonies are extremely simple and pleasing, and admirably adapted for families. It has been truly said, that the children of high and low degree, of the Church of England, of Dissenters, baptised in infancy or not, may all join in the songs of Dr. Watts. Mr. Viner's compositions are no less easy; they are equally adapted for public and private devotion, and may be sung with as much effect as if the harmonies were more elaborately set.

TOURNAY AND THE DUKE OF YORK—14th, 37th, AND 53d REGIMENTS.

THE late and former wars afford innumerable instances of the bravery of our sailors and soldiers; and the occurrence to which we are about to allude, although it be remote, is not the less entitled to notice. It, indeed, forms a matter of history: yet we do not bear in mind, that in recent times it has been brought prominently into view.

As an introduction to the subject, we may look back to the spring of 1794, when the revolutionary armies of France took the field in overwhelming numbers. A formidable portion of these troops, under General Pichegru, was sent against West Flanders; and to oppose the successful progress of this force, a considerable body of the Allied Army, commanded by the Emperor of Germany, in person, assembled in the direction of Tournay, were destined for an attack; but of several columns in which the Allies were ordered to advance, that which was confided to the Duke of York alone fulfilled the part assigned for its first day's operations, so that on the following morning (the 18th of May), when the general attack on Pichegru's army was intended to have taken place, his Royal Highness, who had pushed forward to the vicinity of Lisle, found himself entirely without support and left to contend against the whole force of the enemy. The British at that time serving in Flanders, consisted of several regiments of Cavalry, a brigade of Guards, a brigade of Infantry of the Line, and a small park of Artillery—these, with a body, chiefly of Hanoverians and Hessians in British pay, formed his Royal Highness' corps on this occasion; and assailed as they were on all sides, they only succeeded in regaining their position, near Tournay, with a heavy loss, rendered inevitable by the arduous nature of the conflict maintained against so great a disproportion of numbers. The faults or errors which led to the failure of the other columns it is not our object to enter upon; but on the 22d of May, General Pichegru, following up the affair of the 18th, commenced at daylight an attack upon the right and centre of the Imperial Army, encamped a short distance in front of Tournay, threatening at the same time the left wing under the orders of the Duke of York. The action continued during the whole of the day, with alternate successes and reverses, until late in the afternoon, when the Allied troops which had been engaged were driven back to the walls of Tournay; dispirited by the repulse, these troops refused to return to the combat, and the enemy, availing themselves of a moment for repose, it seemed as if a renewed onset was meditated for the possession of Tournay, then in nearly its present defenceless state. At this juncture the Duke of York had repaired to meet the Emperor towards the right of the line, and the crisis being urgent, it was decided that such of the British as could be spared should be brought from the left wing, in the expectation of encouraging the discomfited troops. The brigade of infantry (reduced in its numbers by losses in former actions to less than 1,000 men), together with several field-pieces, under Major-General Fox, having accordingly reached the spot, and some encouraging words having been addressed to the men by his Royal Highness, expressive of reliance upon their bravery, they formed line in front of the repulsed troops and advanced: but none followed, excepting a few of the Austrian Officers, who nobly pressed forward; and the example thus shown having failed, it is not unlikely that a feeling of national pride prevailed over the Duke of York's inclination then to propose the recal of this little band, from whose unaided exertions no advantage could well be looked for. Not daunted, however, by the holding back of the thousands of veteran troops whom they had left, or by the formidable enemy in their front, they steadily went onward; the eyes of both armies were upon them, and the walls of Tournay were crowded with the inhabitants in suspense for the fate of their city. As the British, with quickened pace and under a heavy fire, neared the enemy, the moment became more and more exciting to the spectators (of which number was the officer who has favoured us with an outline of the present article), when a movement was observed in the ranks of the enemy, conjectured to have had for its object the surrounding of this seemingly forlorn hope; but soon came an appearance of falling back, then followed disorder, and finally, the whole of General Pichegru's army fled with precipitation; the British, still hastening forward, came up with that portion of the fugitives which took the route through the village of Pontachin, where the crowding of their numbers for a time blocked up the way, and there the slaughter of our countrymen, in the action four days previously, was amply avenged! After passing the village, the pursuit went on until the approach of darkness, when, many of the British having fallen, the remainder halted, until relieved during the night by a detachment of Hungarian troops; the French showed no inclination to relax in their retreat, and they appeared no more during the stay of the Allied Army in its position near Tournay.

It was subsequently ascertained at the imperial headquarters from deserters and prisoners, that General Pichegru's army consisted of 80,000 men; that the General was present, and had been disturbed by the attack whilst taking refreshment in a neighbouring country-house, and it was alleged that a rumour having spread in the ranks of the French that the advancing body which met the eye was merely the head of a numerous column of fresh troops lately arrived from England, a panic had succeeded; but be this as it may, we feel gratified in bringing before our readers an instance of bravery so honourable to the character of British soldiers. It was rewarded at the time by the thanks of the Emperor and the Duke of York, and now the 14th, 37th, and 53d regiments have "Tournay" inscribed on their colours, to commemorate the conduct of those corps forming the brigade so conspicuously employed in the battle of the 22d of May, 1794. Of the men who served in the ranks on that occasion we know not if any be in life. Of the officers, we have ascertained that five are in existence—a fair proportion, perhaps, considering the number of intervening years *.

Many brilliant actions of our troops in the early period of the late war, are now thrown into the shade or into oblivion by the glorious achievements of later times; and any brief and interesting information which our correspondents may favour us with of such actions we shall with pleasure receive.

Thus has been traced in abstract a mere delineation of our country's civilisation, wealth, and greatness; and, while following their hitherto undeviating course from the numerous sources, through the various means of replenishment and cause of duration, even in so transient a view, we discover our mariner as one of the most prominent and useful agents in all and every stage of these sustained advantages. We have followed him through the eventful and marked stages of his important calling, observed his growing knowledge, noted with attention his actions, habits, and natural passions, their cause and effects, and aided by the result of long experience, founded on and strengthened by anxious observation, portrayed the rewards of merit he enjoys in the Royal and National Navy—his unrequited industry and boldness in the trading marine. Although the tenor of that language in which his intrepid vocation has been described, and the evils resulting to the State from his present position detailed, may be deemed inapplicable to the occasion, yet in this, as under similar circumstances, where not only the understanding is to be convinced, but the sympathies and the better feelings of the heart engaged, it should, in justice to the ardent zeal which dictates it, be received as admissible. Nevertheless, having exhibited facts, and pointed, through the medium of reality, at those probably fatal consequences which may arise from overlooking his future interest, neglecting to identify him in the strongest possible ties to the service of his Sovereign, and failing to render him an integral part of the nation, (available in the hour of war by previous equitable stipulations, and a wise reorganisation of that marine which he serves in times of peace;) extending our inquiries into those laws by which the trading marine is at present regulated, aided by considerable evidence, we cannot fail to perceive their perfect inefficiency to secure the dignity and welfare of the country, to do justice to the shipowner and those interests connected with maritime security, or to protect the seaman from vexatious injustice, and alike incapable of enforcing due discipline or encouraging the regeneration of mariners. Having seen those palpable faults, and endeavoured to develope the hazardous tendency and the equal inaptitude of their spirit and letter as fully as prudence and a zealous regard for both services prescribes, or the limits and end of this work permits, it notwithstanding must become evident how imperative is the necessity of an extensive increase and considerable alteration in those edicts, and a perfect change in that branch of the marine to which they refer, with a view to ameliorate its condition, in order to sustain the hereditary prerogative of the seas, and the protection of an inestimable commerce. With these circumstances in view, and the absolute possession of almost incalculable advantages, danger so conspicuous should be avoided, and those measures, capable of achieving a result apparently so beneficial, adopted, even if involving a temporary sacrifice. How much more readily ought those arrangements be entertained which would not be found to press unduly on any particular portion of the community, or incur a general contribution. Although the resources of such an important measure would originate, it is true, from that branch of society, and those classes of mercantile pursuits, which equally derive profit and affluence by the exertions of the mariner; yet from the gradual operation of the principles upon which it would be based, and the progressive influence of the system on which it should be founded, it would not be even felt by the former or perceived by others, save in the operation of its benefits on the nation at large, and by the security of nautical commerce.

Numerous will be the objections, as is invariably the case, to any innovation on fixed and old principles or long-contracted usages and habits; or can these proposals hope for less opposition? Nay, we must even anticipate a more energetic resistance in this instance, than if it merely hinged on any general subject of common benefit; but as it is involving alike the national good by means of private and individual resources, it can only expect determined and interested opposition, caused alone by prejudice or illiberality of sentiment. After all the impracticable and unimportant arguments have been exhausted, the mariner's habits and inconstancy of purpose will place the veto on his emancipation, and seal the destiny of the national maritime body.

We have long been too prone to consider, and indeed deem the mariner, either in the service of his country or of the trading marine, as totally and equally indifferent to the provision of his welfare in old age, as also improvident of present happiness and prosperity. These opinions are more the effect of habit and fashion than the result of experience and knowledge; hence such conclusions are falsely assumed, and perfectly destitute of testimony. While attempting to decide on the natural or artificial habits of the mariner, it ought to be borne in mind that the act of improvidence is the wanton destruction unprofitably of means in possession, or neglecting to reserve for the time of need a suitable portion; that this act of carelessness or indifference is a want of regard alike to present advantages or future welfare, by habitually abandoning the opportunities of availing benefit or resigning profitable industry from sloth or indolence. We should now endeavour to point at what period of the mariner's life has he been in the necessary possession of means or superfluous resources (by squandering which he became, in reality, culpable of the former vice), or which would have contributed, in a laudable form, to his future welfare or present support; except, indeed, in the Royal Navy, from which he has invariably been deterred, by viewing it through the medium of falsehood imposed on him. We can discover none equal to his support or adequate to the nature of his employment; hence, if admitting these facts, the first opinion of his improvidence cannot be substantiated in the absence of proof: this the mariner in justice requires. On the other hand, in what law can be discovered, and to which he is subservient, the existence of any inducement held out or promise offered of a future provision for his worn-out constitution in the performance of his duty, that, by his compliance with it, or any fixed custom or prescribed rules, he would secure those advantages? Admitting alone the former exception, none can be found now extant. How then reconcile the latter opinion? how support such vague assertions? Where then is the improvidence, where that indifference of the seaman by which he is supposed not only to forfeit his claim to consideration, but also frustrates his happiness and destroys his future provision? He, in this instance, most justly requires the test;—yes, the public security, the nation's honour, justice to the mariner, and the protection of the shipowner and merchant, calls for it, and such a reformation of the trading marine as will not fail to endear the fidelity of its seamen to the service of the State when demanded. If, indeed, with all our nation's greatness and renown, coupled with and mainly emanating as it does from the bold industry of our mariners, together with the enormous profits of the shipowner and merchant, we possess not the means or inherit not the sagacity to adopt those plans if deemed beneficial, and which cannot fail to prove important to the general interest, it is truly pitiable, it is alarmingly unwise. If hundredfold returns, accruing from the prosperous and unlimited trans-marine commerce of our shipowners, and those equally interested in the welfare of the trading marine, prompt them not to action, and fail to inspire them with a participation in the neglect of the mariner, it demonstrates a weakness, an injustice, an obduracy of heart, and a want of common patriotism blameable in the extreme, and meriting an instant authoritative interference of our wise and judicious Government.—To be continued.

BRITISH WATERPROOF, 432, West Strand, near the Lowther Arcade—Woollen Cloths, Camlets, &c., rendered Waterproof without impeding the escape of perspiration.

To the Directors of the British Waterproofing Company.

GENTLEMEN,—Having impartially tested the merits of your process, in accordance with my promise, I state the result, which is a firm conviction of the decided superiority of your system. To this invaluable discovery of Waterproofing I have for a long period devoted great attention, and was the first who publicly introduced it, since which I have had great practical experience in connection with it, and having fully ascertained the relative merits of the various systems now before the public, I feel no hesitation in stating that the results of my experiments and experience are decidedly in favour of your process. I make this avowal that so valuable a discovery may not at the onset get into disrepute, through the introduction of any of the comparatively inefficient substitutes that others have offered to me.

I am, Gentlemen, yours respectfully,
WALTER BERDOE, Tailor, 69, Cornhill.

January 30ht, 1839.

AGENTS:—Mr. Willis, 178, Strand; Mr. Nightingale, Nottingham: Mr. Everett, Reading; Messrs. Wall and Sons, Welsh Pool; Messrs. Buck and Fraser, Ipswich; Mr. J. J. Owen, Shrewsbury; Mr. Slater, Bishop Stortford; Mr. E. Bilcher, Farringdon; Mr. G. Franks, Newcastle and Gateshead; Mr. F. Cherry, Waterford; Mr. Scovell, Bath; Mr. John Howland, Dover; Mr. C. Tagnell, Dorchester; and sole agent for Edinburgh, Messrs. Wm. Purvis and Co., Tailors, by appointment, to Her Majesty.

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.—FAMILIES in WANT of really good SERVANTS, of every description, will decidedly find their interest better consulted, and their object sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, 326, Oxford-street, corner of Regent-circus, (removed from 184, Oxford-street—established in 1826), than through the adoption of any other method whatever, as domestics are waiting to be hired from Ten to Five o'clock. Convenient rooms are appropriated to engagements, which prevents unnecessary trouble at home through promiscuous applications. Many persons are prejudiced against an establishment for hiring servants; but if the servants possess good characters, it must certainly be obviously absurd to suppose that they can be injured by the readiest method having been taken to procure situations. Fee for obtaining a servant, 2s. 6d.; as many as may be required in a family per annum, 14s.

TEETH.

MR. R. CLARK, Surgeon Dentist, late Assistant to Mr. Cartwright, brother and successor to the late J. Clark, formerly of 3, Keppel-street, Russell-square, and lately of 44, Sackville-street, respectfully begs to announce that he continues to execute EVERY BRANCH of the profession on the most modern and scientific principles. In consequence of the long and severe illness of Mr. C.'s brother, he has had numerous complaints from parties wearing ARTIFICIAL TEETH, owing to neglect, bad arrangement, &c.; he therefore begs to inform those who have the slightest complaint, that he will, at any time, make the necessary alteration, without any further charge.

SHEFFIELD PLATED DISH COVERS.—Entire SETS of DISH COVERS, plain and shaped, with rich silver mountings, handles, and shields, finished within the last month, are now submitted to inspection at JOHN COWTE'S SHOW ROOM, 11, Hollis-street, Cavendish-square, warranted of Sheffield Manufacture, as J. C. can certify from his experience of twenty-four years in the trade, that no plated articles can be relied on but those manufactured at Sheffield. Sheffield has for centuries been celebrated for the manufacture of Plated Goods and Cutlery. Soup and Sauce Tureens, and every other requisite to complete the table service.

PATRONISED BY HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

TROTTER'S ASIATIC TOOTH POWDER, established upwards of eighty years, so long been a general favourite of the Nobility and Gentry of this and foreign countries, conspicuous for its virtues in cleaning and preserving the Teeth. The Proprietor of this most excellent and invaluable Dentifrice having served as an Officer in his late Majesty's Navy the whole of last War, most respectfully solicits the patronage of the Officers of the United Service. Sold wholesale, and by the single box, at the Manufactory, 2, Arundel-street, Strand; and by all Perfumers and Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom.

FAMILIES, TRAVELLERS, MASTERS OF SHIPS, AND SPORTSMEN

Should never be Without MOXON'S

EFFERVESCENT MAGNESIAN APERIENT, decidedly the most generally useful Medicine ever offered to the public.

The unrivalled efficacy of the Magnesian in all Disorders of the Stomach and Bowels has obtained for it the uniform recommendation and approval of the Faculty.

This unique preparation unites all the active powers of the most approved saline purgatives with the palateable qualities of a glass of soda water. In torpid state of the liver and bowels, bilious affections, cholera morbus, pains in the head, or disordered state of the stomach, nausea, and violent sickness, it will be found a safe, speedy, and effectual remedy. It gives instantaneous relief in the heartburn, is of great service in preventing piles, fistula, and gout, and in alleviating the febrile symptoms attendant on the latter affection. Derangement of the stomach and head, &c., arising from too free indulgence in the gratifications of the table, is speedily removed by a tea-spoonful taken early in the morning.

Prepared only by BENJAMIN MOXON, Chymist, Hull.

Wholesale Agents—Barclay and Sons, London; J. and R. Raimes, Edinburgh and Dublin. Sold wholesale at all the Medicine Warehouses in London, and retail by all Venders of Medicines throughout the kingdom, in Bottles at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d.; and in family bottles at 11s., containing the quantity of five of the 2s. 9d. size, a saving of 20 per cent. to the purchaser.

N.B.—Be careful to observe that "Moxon and Smith, Chymists, Hull," is engraved on the stamp, without which it cannot be genuine.

May be had as above, that very popular and much-esteemed preparation of Sarsaparilla, the

CONCENTRATED COMPOUND DECOCTION,
Prepared by B. Moxon, Chymist, Hull.

"One table-spoonful added to a pint of pure water readily forms a pint of the Compound Decoction; and, in justice to the preparers, we must say, appears to be more impregnated with the virtues of the ingredients than the decoction made in the usual way."—See Gazette of Health and Practical Medicine for January, 1839.

In bottles at 4s. 6d., 12s., and 22s., the latter equivalent to 32 pints of the Compound Decoction of the London Pharmacopœia.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA.

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfumer superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 8s. 6d., 7s., and 15s. each.

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

WITHIN a period of Two Months upwards of Three Hundred Patients were successfully treated at the Metropolitan Hospitals with FRANKE'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

By JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London:—

"I have made a trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba.

"46, Lincoln's Inn Fields, April 15, 1835."

This invaluable Medicine is confidently recommended in all cases of Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Urethral Discharges, Spasmodic Strictures, Irritation of the Kidneys, Bladder, Urethra, and Prostate Gland: its purifying effects upon the general health render it particularly applicable in all cases of relaxed fibre and nervous debility.

Prepared only by GEORGE FRANKS, Surgeon, 90, Blackfriars Road, London; and may be had of all Wholesale and Retail Patent Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom, in Bottles at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each.

Mr. FRANKS may be consulted daily until Two o'clock.

CAUTION.—The Public are protected against Counterfeits by the name "George Franks, Blackfriars Road," being engraved on the Government Stamp attached to each Bottle.

FOR THE FACE AND SKIN.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, a mild and efficient Protector of the Skin and Complexion from the baneful influence of Frost, Cold Winds, or Damp Atmosphere; heals Chilblains, Chaps, and renders the most harsh and rough skin delightfully soft, fair, and smooth; effectually eradicates all Pimples, Spots, Redness, Tan, Freckles, and other Cutaneous Defects, at the same time imparting a healthy juvenile bloom, as well as realising a delicate White Neck, Hand, and Arm; in cases of Burns and Scalds, it immediately allays the irritability and reduces the inflammation.

This exotic preparation is perfectly innocious, acting, in all cases, by promoting a healthy tone of the minute vessels; and is the most elegant as well as effective toilet appendage hitherto submitted to universal patronage.

GENTLEMEN, after shaving, will find it allay the irritation and smarting pain, and render the skin smooth and pleasant.

Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per Bottle, duty included.

OBSERVE.—The Name and Address of the Proprietors, A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, HATTON GARDEN, LONDON, is engraved on the Government Stamp, which is pasted on the Cork, also printed, in RED, on the Wrapper in which each bottle is enclosed.

Ask for "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR."

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:—

"Sheffield, Oct. 11th, 1837.

"DEAR SIR,—Will you send me twelve dozen of Solvent; I find my sale rapidly increasing. The superiority of the Rotterdam Solvent over all other preparations for the entire removal of Corns and Bunions, is becoming generally known and appreciated. Sir, since I last wrote to you, I have heard of several remarkable instances of its efficacy. One I may give you, as I have the permission so to do. Mr. Whitham, a respectable manufacturer, residing in Bridge-street, Sheffield, has been a great sufferer from Corns for the last fifty years, hearing of the Rotterdam Solvent, he was induced to try it, and from the great benefit and relief experienced from its first application, he resolved to persevere in its use, and, in a comparatively short time, was completely cured, and continues so to this day. This gentleman will be happy to give any information to those who may personally apply. I am, dear Sir, yours truly, T. LOFTHOUSE."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Prepared and sold by J. A. Sharwood, 55, Bishopsgate Without, London, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each; and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; and by most Medicine Vendors.—Any Vendor not having it will procure it on its being ordered.

THE NEWLY DISCOVERED ASSAM

TEA.—The whole of the Assam Tea, (consisting of eight chests only), imported by the Hon. Company, and which has excited so much interest, was sold at a public tea sale on Thursday, the 10th Jan. After the most exciting competition from the tea-dealers, Capt. Pidding, the proprietor of the celebrated Howqua's Mixture Tea, purchased the whole of it. The first lot was knocked down at 21s. per lb., the last lot fetched 34s. per lb., exclusive of the duty, &c. In order to carry out to its fullest extent the intent of the Hon. Company and Board of Control, and to enable the greatest number of persons to taste this tea, Capt. Pidding has determined to have it sold in small sample parcels, at 2s. 6d. each. C. Verrey, Swiss confectioner, 218, Regent-street, and Littlejohn and Son, Scotch confectioners, 77, King William-street, City, sole Agents in London for Captain Pidding's Howqua's Mixture Tea, will also be the sole vendors of the Assam Tea. A few sample parcels will be allowed to his country agents. Orders will now be received, but none executed for more than one parcel of each of the two kinds, and to secure attention they should be made early.

N.B. Sample parcels of the newly-discovered tea from Upper Assam, British India—the first tea ever produced in a British Colony—may be had at 2s. 6d. each, of Captain Pidding's Agents only. There are only 8 chests of this extraordinary tea, which fetched at the public sale 34s. per lb., exclusive of duty.

SILVER TEA and COFFEE SERVICES.

T. COX SAVORY, 47, Cornhill, London (seven doors from Gracechurch street), offers for selection an elegant and most extensive assortment of Silver Tea Services, varying in price from 15l. to 30l., the Service of Tea-pot, Sugar-basin, and Milk ewer. THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Bouilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, No. 72, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sons, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand; Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c. &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading or any other Sauce.

BY ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

THE NEW PATENT METALLIC FOLDING-HINGED BEDSTEADS, COUCHES, COTS, &c.

To Officers of the Army and Navy and of the Hon. E. I. C. Service, Writers, Cadets, Surgeons, Passengers proceeding to the East or West Indies, these Bedsteads are particularly suited; as, in addition to their other advantages, for warm climates, they possess the inestimable quality of requiring neither Mattress nor Bolster, and can be used during the voyage as Swinging Cots or Ships' Sofas. For the barrack-room they will be found superior to all other inventions of the kind.

To Emigrants to the Canadas, Van Diemen's Land, Sydney, and South Australia, they are invaluable.

They are strongly recommended to all who may have occasion for a number of Beds on a sudden emergency; as, from their folding perfectly flat, they can be put aside when out of use in less than one-twentieth part of the room occupied by the common French Bedsteads.

Prices:—42s. 4s. 4s. 10s. 5l. 5s. 6l. 10s. 7l. 7s. and upwards.

An inspection of the above, at the Patentees', in which confidence solicited, where alone they may be had, together with every article of Camp or Cabin Furniture.

Passages engaged, Baggage shipped, and Cabins fitted up by experienced workmen. Drawings with Estimates forwarded into the country by the post, by addressing, post paid, to E. JOHNSON, 194, Leadenhall-street, near the East India House.

Tenders will not be received for a less quantity than 50,000 yards of Duck, 15,000 yards of Flannel, and 5,000 yards of Blue Cloth

Samples of the Articles, and the Conditions of the Contracts may be seen at the said Office.

No Tender will be received after One o'Clock on the day of Treaty, nor any noticed unless the Party attends, or an Agent for him duly authorised in writing.

Every Tender must be addressed to the Secretary of the Admiralty, and bear in the left-hand corner the words "Tender for ," and must also be delivered at Somerset Place, accompanied by a letter signed by Two responsible Persons, engaging to become bound with the Person tendering in the Sum of £25 per cent. on the value for the due performance of the Contract.

CONTRACTS FOR BRICKLAYER'S, CARPENTER'S, AND MASON'S WORK.

Office of Ordnance, 13th February, 1839.

PERSONS who may be willing to perform such work as may be required of them by the Honourable Board of Ordnance, in the above stated branches, at or within 5 miles of Pall Mall, from the 1st April, 1839, to the 31st March, 1841, upon Contracts determinable on either party giving Three Months' notice, after the expiration of the first year, will send in Sealed Tenders on or before Thursday the 14th day of March next, addressed to the Secretary to the Board of Ordnance, Pall Mall, and endorsed "Tender for Bricklayer's, Carpenter's, or Mason's Work," as the case may be.

Printed Schedules, containing the Conditions of Contract, and a list of the Articles or Work likely to be required, may be had on application at the Commanding Royal Engineer's Office, 21, James-street, Buckingham Gate.

By order of the Board,

R. BYHAM, Secretary.

Adm. Sir C. Paget has been seriously attacked with yellow fever; for three days his death was hourly expected, but he fortunately recovered, and was removed to Bermuda on 18th ult. in the Tyrian steamer; the influence of the disease has removed all paralytic and rheumatic affections.

WHITEHALL, FEB 26.

The Queen has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the great seal, constituting and appointing the Right Hon. Gilbert, Earl of Minto, G.C.B., Vice-Admiral Sir Charles Adam, K.C.B., Rear-Admiral Sir William Parker, K.C.B., Captain Sir Edward Thomas Troubridge, Bart., Captain Sir Samuel John Brooke Pechell, Bart., and Archibald Primrose, Esq. (commonly called Lord Dalmeny), her Majesty's Commissioners for executing the office of High Admiral of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and the dominions, islands, and territories thereunto belonging.

PORTSMOUTH, March 1st.—(From our own Correspondent)—Orders arrived on Sunday announcing a new regulation relative to the officers who hold the situation of Director of Police in the different dock-yards, from and after the 1st April next; the salary is to be 250*l.* a-year instead of 200*l.* The appointment is to be under the same regulation as that of Admiral-Superintendent, viz., for five years. The Boatswains of the dock-yards, hereafter to be appointed, are to have but 200*l.* per annum.—Wolf arrived from the Cape of Good Hope on Tuesday, after a long passage of two months; she had not any news.—Pantaloon has been despatched to Liverpool and Bristol for new raised men to join the flag-ship. Lt. Bevan, her Commander, is unwell, and on leave; the Admiralty have sent Lt. Tryon to act in her during his absence.—Four vessels have been taken out of dock, viz., Waterwitch, Clio, Curlew, and Childers, and with the Snipe, are ready for commission.—A brig called the James has been brought into the port in a leaky state, and must discharge her cargo; she was from Bahia to Amsterdam.—Capt. Brandreth, the Civil Engineer and Inspector of public buildings, visited the dock-yard on Saturday and Monday.—It is expected the Naval College will be ready for the reception of the officers by the end of the month.—Ships in Port—Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Etna; and the usual vessels attached to the port.

PLYMOUTH, March 1st.—(From our own Correspondent).—Feb. 22d—The Tyrian packet, 6, Lt.-Com. Edward Jennings, came into harbour, was taken into dock the next day, new coppered, and undocked the 27th; as soon as her defects are made good she will return to Falmouth. Sailed the Goodwill and Aid lighters for Chatham and Sheerness, and Duck lighter for Portsmouth and Sheerness, with stores for the dock-yards. Arrived the Nettley tender to the Royal Adelaide, from Liverpool, with volunteers for the Navy. 23d—Arrived, Swale, tender to Astrea, from Falmouth, with unserviceable stores, and returned to that port on 28th, with stores for the packet service. 24th—Arrived Tagus, Peninsular steam-packet, from the eastward, and sailed the same evening for Falmouth, whence she takes the mail to Lisbon and Gibraltar; also arrived Liverpool, Peninsular steam-packet, from Falmouth, where she landed the Lisbon mail—she proceeded to the eastward on the following day. Arrived the Sylvia, Lieut.-Com. Clayton, with volunteer seamen, and returned to that port on 27th. 27th—Arrived Camel lighter, with stores from Liverpool, Holyhead, and Pembroke. Sailed, Alonzo transport, Lt. Simpson, agent, with stores for Deptford. 28th—Arrived Inconstant, 36, Capt. D. Pring, in fourteen days, from Halifax; she sailed from Cork on the 16th of January for Halifax, with troops, consequently has been absent only six weeks; she has brought Montreal and Quebec papers, the former of the date of 26th, and the latter 29th January, but no intelligence of consequence. The trial of the prisoners was still going on. Four had been executed, and fourteen others were under sentence of death. Seven were to suffer death at Montreal on the 1st of February. The Halifax House of Assembly have voted 1,000*l.* for the relief of the widows and orphans of those who had fallen in the defence of Canada. The Acorn, 14, Com. J. Adams, was towed from the harbour into the Sound by Rhadamanthus steam-frigate. Arrived the Drake lighter, with stores from Portsmouth. 1st March—It is expected the Implacable, 74, Capt. F. Harvey, will move from the harbour into the Sound this day; her crew is to be completed to the war establishment, viz., 675 men. Eighty boys, of the 2d class, are ordered to be entered in the Ordinary. In Harbour—Royal Adelaide, San Josef, Implacable, Rhadamanthus, and Tyrian. In the Sound—Inconstant and Acorn.

MILFORD HAVEN, 27th Feb.—(From our own Correspondent).—There has been no arrival or sailing of importance during the week. Mr. Lawes, Storekeeper of Pembroke Yard, went on public leave last Thursday, the 21st inst. The Director of Police at that Arsenal is placed on the same footing as those at the other dock-yards, and is to retain the situation for five years, as is the case with the Superintendent and other Naval officers holding civil situations. Report says that some changes are likely shortly to take place among the Shipwright Officers of those establishments, consequent on the retirement of one of the Master Builders. Another misunderstanding has arisen at Pembroke between some of the officers, the particulars of which I have not yet been able to obtain, but trust I shall do so for you by next week. It is something in the manner of the former opposition, but not carried to such lengths, I presume. Wind west. Weather tolerably fine.

The Powerful and Cleopatra will leave Sheerness about the middle of the month; the former ship is nearly manned, but the men have evinced an unwonted disinclination to enter for the latter. The complements of both ships are put on the new scale, adopted with the new armament.

Lieut. Parsons, R.N., Coast Guard, St. Alban's Head, and crew, have most bravely and humanely saved the lives of twelve men, the crew of a vessel recently wrecked there.

Vice-Admiral Sir David Milne, K.C.B., has become a donor of ten pounds to the Rl. Naval School.

Lieut. E. Franklin, R.N., of the Coast Guard Station at Hove, near Brighton, has been presented with a medal, and his boat's crew with rewards, from the Humane Society, for their intrepid and praiseworthy conduct, in saving the crew of the brig Friends from a watery grave, on the morning of 29th Oct. last.

By letters from the squadron in the West Indies, we learn that Capt. Polkinghorne, of the Crocodile, died on shore at Barbadoes on 9th January.

H.M.S. Wolf was to sail from the Cape of Good Hope for England 2d Jan.—since arrived. The following ships were at Malta Feb. 6th—Princess Charlotte, Rodney, Asia, Vanguard, Bellerophon, Pembroke, Minden, Hastings, Talbot, Harlequin, Scorpion, Ceylon, Beacon, and Maypie; Megæra, Hermes, and Firefly, steamers.

On Wednesday Sir Edward Codrington was entertained at a public dinner, at the Crown and Anchor, Strand, on the occasion of presenting the gallant Admiral with a piece of plate. The chair was taken by Capt. Pechell, M.P.; and among the Naval officers present were Captains Forbes, J. Dickinson, Fead, Marshall, Saumarez; Lieuts. Barclay, Turtle, Bishop, Somerville, Lean, &c. The gallant Chairman presented the piece of plate to Sir E. Codrington. It was a large and massive salver, highly embellished with appropriate Naval emblematical devices, and in the centre was the following inscription:

"Presented on the 27th of February, 1839, to Admiral Sir Edward Codrington, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., G.C. of St. Louis and of the Legion of Honour of France, G.C. of the Redeemer of Greece, Knight of the Second Class of St. George of Russia, and M.P. for the borough of Devonport (by a limited subscription), from 800 Naval officers, as a mark of their esteem, respect, and regard, and in testimony of the deep and grateful sense they entertain, not only of his unwearied, independent, and able advocacy of the rights and privileges of their profession in the Commons' House of Parliament, but also for his generous support and defence of the forlorn and friendless officer, the distressed widow, and the destitute orphan, whether suffering under injustice and oppression, or sustaining injury and wrong."

Extract of a letter from an Officer employed in the Flotilla at Prescott, U. C.:—

"We are greatly mortified at finding that our Captain's official account of the part we acted in the Prescott affair has not yet been published, although the operations of the troops have occupied a large space in the Gazette. Sir J. Barrow has lately reminded us that 'it is a dirty bird that fouls its own nest.' Who is the bird that performs this office towards us and the service, by withholding the only reward we are likely to receive for having performed our duty in a manner which we hope was creditable to ourselves and to the service to which we belong? We see that an account of our killed and wounded has been published; but as this was not done at the same time with the Army account, few people will notice that our share of the total killed and wounded was full one-third; and I affirm, that but for our steam vessels, and the exertions of our Officers, Seamen, and Marines, the Yankees would have had it all their own way. I am convinced but that for those exertions, their footing would have been so firm as to have caused hundreds at once to have rallied round their standard; but, having the command of the water, we drove back numbers which attempted to cross, even in daylight, and for two nights a cat could not have attempted to cross between the enemy's position and the Yankee shore without losing its tail. As the public letters of Colonel Dundas and of the Militia Colonel have appeared in full detail, it is doubly unfair towards us, and the service to which we belong, that our Captain's letter should not also have been published, the more so because our operations were necessarily distinct from theirs, although tending to the same common object; and I am proud to affirm that on the spot it is allowed, that but for the Navy, the most serious consequences would in all probability have resulted from the actual invaders being seconded (as they would assuredly have been) by the whole force of their 'brother sympathisers,' who were assembled in crowds on the opposite shores ready to come over (the distance being only a mile-and-a-half across); but they did not like the vigilance of our three armed steamers and four gunboats, which, with 200 men, 15 guns, and 2 mortars, was our force, although by the account which has been published, you would suppose that we had only two gun-boats employed, and that 'they fired with little effect.' The fact is, that our guns were brought under a point of land, within 400 yards of the mill, or tower, where the Brigands were posted. It was late in the afternoon when we began, and we only discontinued when it became dark. Our shot passed into the tower, and in less than an hour longer it would have been blown up by our shot and shell. They hung out a flag of truce at the water's edge, which we did not regard; but at dusk we landed, and finding that the troops were not then doing anything, we sent in, and brought out about 70 fellows, who surrendered at discretion, no other terms being allowed by us. The rifles of the rascals were not idle, even after showing their flag of truce, for several of us were struck from the windows of the houses occupied by them. Capt. Sandom had a narrow escape from a ball, which struck his right breast, but was turned off by his brace, and he only suffered a slight contusion. Many of our Marines had two wounds, some very bad ones; and all had shots through their clothes or caps. All this might have been ascertained before the Military reports were sent away; but the fact is, they knew nothing about our operations, or the effect of our shot; nor was it, I presume, any part of their duty to collect and publish for us a detailed report of our proceedings. It was naturally expected that this would be done for us, by the official account thereof being published, as we all flattered ourselves it would have been."

Nelson Testimonial.—A numerous meeting of subscribers to the Nelson Testimonial was held on Saturday, at the Thatched House Tavern, St. James's-st., to receive the Report of the special sub-committee appointed by the general committee to consider the merits of the various models and designs. The Marquess of Northampton (in the absence of the Duke of Wellington, who was to have presided) was called to the chair.

Report.—"To the General Committee appointed for erecting a memorial to commemorate the achievements of the late Admiral Lord Nelson:—The Special Sub-Committee having carefully examined the various models and designs for a memorial to Lord Nelson, in Trafalgar-square, have selected for recommendation to the General Committee the design No. 81, by Mr. Railton, being a column of 174 feet, surmounted by a statue of 17 feet, as that to be erected, and entitled to the first prize; but as, at such a height, the features and characters of the statue could not be satisfactorily distinguished, and as the subscribers would be naturally desirous of transmitting to posterity a closer resemblance of so great a man, the select Sub-Committee further propose and hope, that their funds will allow that a statue in marble, of the size of life, and offering the most accurate likeness of Lord Nelson which can be obtained should be also executed, and be deposited under shelter in the National Gallery, or some other public building open to general inspection. They have further selected the model No. 10, by E. H. Bailey, Esq., R.A., as entitled to the second prize; the model No. 37, by Messrs. Fowler and Stevier, as entitled to the third prize."

After some conversation, the consideration of the Report was adjourned for a fortnight, and it was resolved that the members of the general committee and their friends should be entitled to admission the whole of the first week; and that on the first five days of the week following, the secretary be authorised to grant cards of admission to persons applying for them. The prizes will be awarded on Saturday, 9th March.

A meeting of the competitors for the Nelson memorial was held on Monday at the Thatched House Tavern, to take into consideration the Report from the sub-committee appointed to decide on the plans or designs sent in for competition. The room was filled with most of the leading architects and sculptors of the day, and it was resolved that a committee be forthwith appointed to communicate with the committee for the Nelson monument, in order to ascertain the present position of the designs and models, and report to this meeting on Monday next at 2 o'clock.

CAVALRY.

Rl. Horse Gds. (Blues)—"A few days since a paragraph went the round of the papers, stating that Captains the Hon. Cecil Forrester and Hanmer had fought a duel, and fired three shots. Up to the period of the duel, however extraordinary might be the circumstances of the case, it was simply a personal quarrel between two officers, and in which the public had properly no concern, but the affair, and the circumstances attending it, have, since the duel, been brought under the cognizance of Lord Hill, and it has now assumed altogether another character. It is no longer a personal question—it is even more than a regimental one—it must be regarded as a precedent for all other officers in the service, showing to them how the Gen. Commanding-in-Chief treats such conduct as that complained of in his own regiment. It may be well, although they are already generally known, to state shortly the circumstances which preceded the duel, in order that the whole case may be the better understood. They are as follow:—Captain Hanmer received so gross an insult from Captain Forrester at the messtable of the Royal Horse Guards (the Blues), in which distinguished regiment both these gentlemen have troops, that he instantly quitted the room and sent his friend, Captain Conroy, of the Coldstream Guards, to Captain Forrester, for the purpose of arranging a meeting. This, when proposed by Captain Conroy, was declined by Captain Forrester, who refused to fight Captain Hanmer unless he was accompanied by a brother officer of the Blues. Upon this, Captain Hanmer assaulted Captain Forrester in Pall-mall, and struck him a blow with a stick. In consequence of this, Captain the Honourable James Macdonald, on the part of Captain Forrester, challenged Capt. Hanmer; and the meeting took place, at which three shots were fired. So far it seemed a mere private quarrel. It appears, however, that Captain Hanmer, on returning to his regiment at Windsor, after the duel, found his society avoided by all his brother officers; and having reason to believe in the existence of a conspiracy having for its object to force him out of the corps, he addressed a letter through his Lieutenant-Colonel to Lord Hill, requesting that his Lordship might be pleased to order that a Court of Inquiry should be assembled, for the purpose of examining all the circumstances of the case, and deciding whether his (Captain Hanmer's) conduct had been such as to justify the system of exclusion practised towards him. His Lordship, instead of complying with this request, ordered all the officers of the Blues to wait upon him at the Horse Guards, where he received them dressed in full uniform as Colonel of the regiment. His Lordship commenced by asking whether Lieutenant-Colonel Richardson, or any of the other officers, had anything to complain of in the conduct of Captain Hanmer, or any fault to allege against him; and his Lordship desired, that if such were the case, the officers would immediately proceed to lay the complaint before him. Upon no answer being returned, Lord Hill produced a paper, on which he stated he had written down the substance of the address he was about to make, in order that it might serve as a record of the steps he had taken, should the case come again before him. He then proceeded to censure, in the strongest terms, the course pursued by the officers in regard to Captain Hanmer, which his Lordship designated as one unworthy of their character as gentlemen, setting the worst example to other regiments, and highly detrimental to the service. He concluded with a command that a total change of conduct should be adopted, and with the expression of his earnest wish that he might not be again called upon to notice a recurrence of what had passed. What has been the result of this parade at the Horse Guards? The result is, that the orders of Lord Hill have been of no avail, the system of exclusion is still continued, for it is notorious that Captain Hanmer is never addressed by any of the officers, and is barely answered when he speaks. We need scarcely say that this subject is much canvassed among military men, and that impartial officers condemn that system of exclusion practised by the Blues as one totally subversive of all proper discipline in a regiment; and among its many evils they recognise the fact, that it has placed an honourable and high-minded gentleman, such as Captain Forrester most assuredly is, in the position of having wilfully insulted a person to whom he was not prepared to give immediate and ample satisfaction. The reason assigned by him for his refusal is only an aggravation of the fact; for how was Captain Hanmer to get a brother officer to be his second, when all had taken part against him in favour of Captain Forrester? In conclusion, we have to assure Lord Hill that military men are drawing a comparison between what he would have done if such things as these had happened in any unfortunate regiment of the line, and what he is now doing in his own aristocratic corps."—Observer. (See our Leading Remarks.)

1st Drags.—will move to Fermoy this month.

2d Dragoons—One troop (30 r. and f.) from Newbridge to Dublin, 20th February.

4th Lt. Drags.—Lieuts. J. F. Geils and H. St. G. Priaul, and Cornets Hyder and M. Kuwan (lately exchanged from 13th Lt Drags.), accompany the detachment in the Glenelg.

6th Dragoons—The troop from Kilkenny to Carlow, during the election, 23d and 24th February.

INFANTRY.

10th—Brev.-Maj. Galloway has joined from leave.

11th—The people of Paxo have presented Capt. M. Richmond with a large gold medal, as a testimonial for the kind and valuable services tendered by him during the period he was British Resident in the Island. Translation of the inscription on the medal:—"To Capt. Richmond; the Paxiotes and foreign official residents, with their good wishes.—1838."

14th—One company and the hd.-qrs. of the corps (about 140) embarked on board the Duke of York on the 25th Dec., to proceed from Antigua to Barbadoes. On the following morning, at two o'clock A.M., they were wrecked on a coral reef, off St. Rose, near Guadaloupe. The French authorities gave the most prompt assistance, by which all were saved; and they further immediately provided tonnage to convey the troops and crew back to Antigua.

20th—Ens. P. H. Crampton is on leave.

23d Depot—Capt. R. E. Campbell is on leave.

25th—Lieut.-Col. Chambers has joined from leave.

27th—The case of Capt. Tucker is noticed in our columns, and we have been requested to publish the following letter, addressed to the Editor of the Times :—

Sir,—In justice to a regiment not less distinguished for the gentlemanlike conduct of its officers than for the tried gallantry in the field, I beg to refer you to the "Army List," and to assure you, that the person calling himself Capt. John Tucker, of the 27th Foot, alluded to in your police report of this day, does not hold a Captain's, nor any other commission, upon either the full or the half pay list of the 27th reg.

Junior U. Service Club, Friday. AN OLD ENNISKILLENER.

27th Depot—Lieut. Smith, Ensigns Stapylton and Tunnard, accompany Capt. Byrne and the draft to the Cape. The Depot Paymastership is vacant by the promotion of Lieut. Durnford to Capt. Manly's comp. Capt. M. distinguished himself in the service, and was badly wounded at Waterloo. Lord Hill has very considerately appointed his son to the vacant Ensigncy.

29th—A General Court-Martial was held on 27th Feb., at Government House, Devonport, on a private, for mutinous conduct.

30th—The detachment of 3 officers and 72 men, under charge of Capt. the Hon. J. Jocelyn, had arrived from England, 28th Jan.; and although they had a most tedious and tempestuous passage of 68 days, and very narrowly escaped shipwreck, having run upon the rocks on the north-west side of Bermuda, yet they effected their landing without a single casualty. Col. Bridge, R.A., and Mrs. B.; Lieut. and Mrs. Sillery and family, and Ens. Shum, 30th; and Lieut. Fenwick, Rl. Eng., were passengers.

32d—The late gallant Col. the Hon. J. Maitland, whose premature demise at London, U. Canada, we announced in our last, had commanded this corps for 21 years. Col. M., six or seven months only previous to his demise, had received a Companionship of the Bath for his distinguished services in the Canadas. The following are the dates of his commissions from Hart's New Army List :—Ens., 26th Feb. 07; Lieut., 21st July, 08, Capt., 30th Aug., 10; Major, 2d Feb. 15; Lieut.-Col., 24th March, 16; and Bt.-Col., 10th Jan. 37. He served in the Peninsula. His death was from the breaking out of an old wound, occasioned by excessive fatigue.

36th Depot—A General Court-Martial was held at Government House, Devonport, on 28th Feb., on a private, for striking an officer belonging to the Rl. Marines; but it appears the officer was in plain clothes.

38th—We last week notified the presentation of New Colours to this corps, but had not space for the address of the Commanding Officer, Lieut.-Col. Piper, which we take from the Inniskillen Chronicle.

"Thirty-Eighth, I am acting on the part of our Colonel, Sir Henry Pigot, in presenting these colours. It is with feelings of no common pride that I do so, that I hand these banners to the custody of soldiers whom it has been my good fortune to form and train. With the colours I have received this paper, which I will now read. I have been directed by General Sir Henry Pigot, our Colonel, to say, that it gives him very particular pleasure in having an opportunity to present to the 38th regt., under his command, a new pair of colours, a regt which knew so well how to protect and uphold the honour of the old ones on so many occasions in which it was engaged, and in many of which it distinguished itself in different parts of the globe. The late General Sir Robert Pigot, uncle of Sir Henry, was Lieut.-General of 38th regt. 10 or 11 years, and Colonel of it 21 years, a period of one or two-and-thirty years. He commanded it during the American war, in which the regt distinguished itself, particularly in the battle of Bunker's Hill. Sir Robert has had at different times three nephews in the 38th regt., one of whom Sir Henry has now the honour, through the kindness of his late Majesty William the Fourth, to be placed at the head of it, his Majesty having in the most gracious manner been pleased to remove him to the command of the 38th regt. from that of the 32nd, (an excellent regiment,) induced thereto, the General humbly presumes to think, in a great measure from the circumstances above stated. I am directed by Sir Henry Pigot to say, that he should have been highly gratified to have been at his post in the regiment this day, had the state of his health permitted. He begs, however, to assure the regiment, in whatever part of the world it may be stationed, it will have his prayers and good wishes for its welfare and happiness. I am sure I speak the sentiments of every officer and soldier in the regt., when I assert that we should have been proud to have seen at our head this day our gallant and veteran Col. Sir H. Pigot, an old and distinguished soldier, who reckons more than 70 years' service, and who received from his late Majesty the honour of a Knight Grand Cross of the most distinguished Order of St. Michael and St. George, as the captor of Malta. Soldiers, these colours, which are about being placed in their post, in the centre of our line, bear upon them names commemorative of blight and glorious deeds. It will be our task not only to preserve unsullied the glory so chronicled, but as opportunity offers to add additional wreaths to the laurels with which they are already charged. I have met an account of the presentation of colours by the Duke of Wellington to another regiment. It has been the great good fortune of the 38th to have served much under the command of the Duke of Wellington, and to have formed part of that army with which he has since declared he believed he could have gone anywhere—have done anything. I cannot do better than read to you part of his address on the occasion I have referred to. [The gallant Colonel then read a part of the Duke's address, wherein he simply, but emphatically, enforces a strict attention 'to the rules of discipline, subordination, and good order,' as alone calculated to render them efficient and orderly, to lighten the relative duties of officers and men, and contribute to their mutual comfort and happiness.] Such, 38th, resumed the Colonel, were the words of the greatest man of the age—of the greatest soldier who ever wore the British uniform—of one whose every word should be law to us. This is a great and solemn occasion. The presentation of new colours may not occur again in a soldier's life, and I would wish to take this opportunity to caution the young and thoughtless, of the solemn oath by which we are bound to protect these standards with our lives, and to remain by them at all seasons, and under all circumstances in peril and in difficulty, or in the bright hour of victory; that we are wedded to them in fact for better or worse, and that the crime of all others which attaches the deepest disgrace to a soldier, is the desertion of his colours. Soldiers, we have reason to be proud of the reputation handed down to us by those who have gone before us in the 38th; let it be our emulation to pass that reputation not only unsullied, but more bright, to those who are to succeed us in these ranks. This end we shall attain by obedience, sobriety, steadiness in quarters, gallantry in the field, and devoted loyalty at all times to the person of our most gracious Sovereign, Her Majesty the Queen."

50th—Lieut. Sheaffe, lady, and two children, Ens. Needham, 30 r. and f., six women, and 13 children, arrived at Sydney on 20th Sept., in the brig Governor Philip, from Norfolk Island. Ens. Enoch and 7 r. and f. arrived at Sydney in the Lord William Bentinck, from Portsmouth, on 26th Sept. Capt. O'Hara, Capt. Tew, Lieut. Baxter and lady, Lieut. Stapleton, with 60 r. and f., 11 women, and 23 children, arrived at Sydney on 2d Oct., from Port-Adelaide.

51st—Lieut. Isham, with a draft, arrived at Sydney in the Clyde on 11th Sept.

52d—We notified, in the N. & M. G. of 12th January last, the death at Barbadoes of Lieut. and Paymaster Winterbottom. The U. S. Journal of this month has the following :—

"Paymaster Winterbottom received, while serving on the Peninsula, as Lieutenant and Adjutant of the 52d, a remarkable wound, which excited much speculation at the time. In the action of Redinha, on 12th March, 1811, Winterbottom was struck from his horse by a cannon shot, but finding no bones broken, nor any other symptom of hurt, he remounted and went through the remainder of that brilliant affair with his usual spirit. On subsequent examination, an extensive discoloured contusion was discovered near the hip, and the contused flesh having sloughed away, a large and deep wound was formed, from which he suffered much. Yet Winterbottom declared the ball had not touched him—that his clothes were intact—the skin unbroken—and that it was the wind of the shot which had unhorsed and disfleshed him. For the cause, considered secundum artem, we cannot vouch; the effect we can attest from ocular proof, having jolted side by side in the same waggon with poor Winterbottom."

55th—At a General Court-Martial, held 6th Nov., 1838, Lieut. T. A. Heriot was arraigned on the following charges :—

First, for having at Madras, Sept. 28, 1838, sent Hon. Mr. Talbot with a message to Maj. Wright, 39th, to demand satisfaction in a duel from him for his conduct when interfering as Commanding Officer of the troops on board the ship Plantagenet, to suppress a quarrel likely to arise from language made use of by the said Lieut. Heriot to Assist.-Surg. T. T. Smith, H. C. S., in wantonly insulting him, by saying to him at the Cuddy-table after dinner, "Your language is the language of Billingsgate," or words to that effect, notwithstanding he subsequently admitted his error, by apologizing for the same to the said Assist.-Surg. Smith. Secondly, for conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in having, in a letter dated Poonamalee, 22d Oct. 1838, in reply to a communication made to him by the Dep. Adj. Gen. H. M.'s Forces, requiring an explanation of his conduct as detailed in the first charge, asserted —that the said Major Wright had shaken his clenched fist at him on that occasion—he, the said Lieut. Heriot, never having either directly or indirectly brought the same to Maj. Wright's notice, and well knowing and believing, at the time he made the aforesaid statement, that it was false and unfounded.

Finding and Sentence.—The Court found the prisoner guilty of the first charge, and guilty of the second charge, with the exception of the words "and well knowing and believing at the time he made the aforesaid statement that it was false and unfounded," of which they acquit him. And having found him thus guilty, sentence him to lose six steps in his regiment, by being placed immediately below the six Lieutenants who at present stand next to him, and having his commission dated one day after the date of the regimental commission of Lieut. Henry Bayly, of the same regiment; and that he be severely reprimanded in such a manner as his Excellency the Comm.-in-Chief may be pleased to direct.

(Confirmed) P. MAITLAND, Lieut.-General.

Remarks by the Court.—With reference to the finding on the second charge, the Court think it necessary to observe, that the assertion of the prisoner in his letter to the Dep. Adj.-Gen. of H.M.'s Forces was fully disproved, and that it was made by him on very questionable grounds. The Court are unwilling to animadvert on the evidence of Capt. Wood and Ens. Hosea son, as its nature, on the perusal of the minutes, will be sufficiently apparent.

Lieut. Heriot is hereby severely reprimanded in General Orders, in accordance with the sentence of the Court.

(Signed) P. MAITLAND.

69th—Two cos. have arrived at Halifax from Barbadoes in the Crocodile.

74th—Ens. Mein, son of Col. Mein, died at St. Lucia on 2d Dec., aged 19 years. He entered the reg. 5th Aug., 1837, and was much regarded by the whole corps.

84th—Lieut. and Adjut. Bridge has joined from leave.

95th—By a letter received on Thursday, we find that H.M.S. Jupiter, having on board this regt., arrived at Simons Town, Cape of Good Hope, on the 26th Dec., from Rio Janeiro, after a delightful passage; all well on board. They expected to sail for Ceylon in a few days. The Apollo, with the 94th, had left the Cape about a fortnight before the Jupiter's arrival.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.—It is reported that the increase to the reg. will only amount to 72 Bombardiers and 144 Gunners and Drivers per company, being an addition of 1 Bombardier and 2 Gunners and Drivers to the present establishment. Capt. Otway's comp., 3d batt., has been moved from Quebec to Kingston, and replaced by Capt. Armstrong's comp., 4th batt., from Halifax.

GENERAL ORDER, Feb. 22, 1839.—Second Lieut. Lemprier is transferred from Major Cruttenden's comp., 8th batt., to Capt. Freer's comp., 6th battalion.

GARRISON ORDERS, Feb. 27, 1839.—Col. Macdonald's comp., 4th batt., will relieve Major Willis's comp., 5th batt., from Field Battery service to morrow. As soon as the horses, ordnance, and equipments, are handed over, Major Willis's comp. will rejoin the 5th battalion.

The Commandant begs again to express his gratification at the very high commendation bestowed by Lieut.-Col. Cleaveland on the officers, non-comm. officers, and men of Major Willis's company; and to assure them that it was with very great regret that he was obliged to forego seeing them in the field, where he has no doubt their efficiency would have been as conspicuous as in the other parts of his inspection this morning.

At a recent meeting of the inhabitants of Brighton, to consider the propriety of originating a subscription to relieve the sufferers from the late hurricane in Ireland, Col. O'Reilly, the husband of the Dowager Duchess of Roxburgh, said that—"It was now 27 years since he had marched into the town at the head of the 41st reg. He was then an Ensign, and was in command of the advanced guard. They marched from Sussex to Portsmouth for embarkation; he then visited every part of the globe: he had fought in three quarters of it, and he had the honour of commanding the English, Irish, and Scotch soldiers, and he never saw the man of either country that could claim pre-eminence over the other. He therefore appeared before the people of Brighton, not as a stranger, but as one whose acquaintance with it commenced with his entrance into the British Army; and when he held a commission in that army, the common informer might have deprived him of it by swearing he saw him in a mass-house. Such was the law of this country at that period; but he thanked his God that the brand was now taken off his forehead, and he now held his head as high as the proudest in the land."

The Rev. John Laugh, A.B., of Queen's College, Oxford, Garrison Chaplain, died at Bermuda on 15th January. He had passed more than twenty years in that island, highly esteemed and respected, and he died most sincerely lamented by his numerous friends. He was followed to the grave by Sir W. Burnaby, Bart.; the Hon. Mr. Kennedy, Colonial Secretary; Lieut.-Col. Robinson, 30th reg., Commandant; Lieut.-Col. Bridge and Major Wood, Rl. Art.; Lieut.-Col. Emmett, Rl. Eng.; the Hon. Capt. Jocelyn and the Hon. Mr. Pery, 30th reg., as well as by the rest of the Officers of the Garrison; also by Dr. Hunter, the Mayor, and every respectable individual of St. George; and by a crowd of the coloured population.

LORD GLENELG.—We have heard it confidently stated, as a reason for his expulsion, that Lord Glenelg, as well as Lord Melbourne, refused his assent to a scheme for transferring the control of the Army from the Sovereign and Military Authorities to a Civil Department.—U. S. Journal.

We have great pleasure in directing attention to the following remarks by our gallant friend, the able Editor of the United Service Journal. It is unnecessary to add that our opinions coincide, for in the Naval and Military Gazette of the 9th ult., page 90, we noticed the unmilitary objections to Courts of Honour, put forth in another quarter:

"Although we should have been better pleased to see an officer of competent knowledge and experience at the head of the Judge-Advocate's Department, it is satisfactory to find that in the selection of Sir George Grey for that quasi-military office, due regard has been shown to character and competence. The personal respectability and professional connexions of the new Judge-Advocate give earnest of an honourable discharge of his peculiar functions; and, if Sir George Grey will do us the honour to take counsel from us, as possessing a far more intimate knowledge of the habits and feelings of the service than he has had opportunities of acquiring, we would recommend him, while due respect is paid to the broad principles of our civil law, to discard the pettifogging practice of the Old Bailey from the forms and proceedings of military courts, and preserve to the more noble and equitable institution of Trial by Court-Martial its essential and chivalrous characteristic as a Court of Honour."

RETIREMENT OF GENERAL SIR HENRY FANE.—Secret Department, Camp at Feroozepore, Nov. 30, 1838.—The retreat of the Persian army from before Herat having been officially announced to the Government, as notified to the public, on the 8th instant, the circumstances no longer exist, which induced the Right Hon. the Governor-General to solicit the continuance of the services of His Exc. the Commander-in-Chief, with a view to his conducting Military operations to the west of the Indus, and as it is probable that Her Majesty will graciously acquiesce in the wish of the Commander-in-Chief, to be relieved from his command in February next, the Right Hon. the Governor-General is pleased to dispense with His Excellency's services in the field, and will direct other arrangements for the command of the Army of the Indus. The Governor-General has, on this occasion, to record his grateful sense of the readiness with which His Excellency has been (as he is yet) prepared to postpone every personal consideration to the service of his country.

Memorandum.—By the Act 4 George IV., cap. 71, a sum of 60,000*l.* per annum is paid into Her Majesty's Exchequer by the East India Company, on account of the charge for retiring pay and pensions, and other expenses of that nature, arising in respect of Her Majesty's forces serving in India. This sum is applied towards the general expenses of the State.

War Office, Feb. 18, 1839. HOWICK.

The late Major-General Sir James Carmichael Smyth, Bart.—"As this day will terminate the present eventful year, it may not be inappropriate to glance cursorily over some of the most striking and important occurrences which have taken place during the course of it. The 4th day of March in this year will be memorable in the annals of this Colony, as the day on which we lost, by a very sudden death, our late Governor, Sir James Carmichael Smyth, Bart.—a man in whose character such a variety of talents and virtues were combined, as rarely fall to the lot of any individual. During the too short time he was spared to us, the powerful energies of his mind and body were indefatigably exerted, so to work through the interesting and important period of the apprenticeship of our former slaves, as to prepare both them and their employers for the great transition which has since taken place, to a state of general freedom. In the performance of this task, this great and good man did not escape the censure and bitter enmity of many who could not penetrate the profound wisdom of his views, or appreciate the benevolence of his motives. Few men ever had a more difficult task assigned them than that which was entrusted to Sir James, when he was appointed at so critical a period to the government of this important province. He saw his way, however, clearly from the beginning, and steered his course in a straight undeviating track. Secret legislation, private jobbing, clique ascendancy, restriction of the press, and the like, the narrow and vicious resources of our former Governors, were at once by him discarded, as inconsistent with his policy. His views were wise, and his objects just; publicity, therefore, in all the transactions of his government, he courted as his most sure and powerful auxiliary. That a Governor thus hurling defiance without compromise at corruption, in high places, should draw around him a host of powerful enemies, can excite no surprise. Few men ever experienced more inveterate opposition, or presented to it a more manly front. Time, the great tell-tale, who seldom fails at last to discover truth, however deeply concealed within her well, removed the delusive veil which had been spread over the eyes of an abused and deluded public; and those who had been induced in 1834, clamorously to petition for the disgrace and removal of their best friend and wisest Governor, before 1838 saw through the delusion which had been practised upon them, and "took shame to themselves" for having been so far duped. On the melancholy calamity of the 4th March, this community with one voice, throughout the colony, testified the sincerity of their grief, and consciousness of the loss they had sustained. The day will come when this province will greatly prosper; and then his memory shall rise, like a Phœnix from the ashes of his tomb, and cheer the efforts of as yet unborn patriots."—Guiana Chronicle.

Barbadoes.—Capt. Miller, B.M. of Clare Castle has been promoted to a second class; Gort is now attached to his district.—The following changes are in contemplation:—Capt. O. Fry, of Galway, relieves Capt. Joyce, of Limerick, who accepts the retired allowance, having served 27 years as Barrack-Master. Mr. Hughes, B.M. of Roscrea, (which station is to be placed under Capt. Dobbs, of Nenagh,) takes charge as B.M. of Galway, v. Capt. Fry. Capt. Barnes, B.M. of Gort, accepts the retired allowance. Lieut. Hughes, B.M., has been promoted to Galway. Roscrea, Maryborough, and Portumna, at present under the command of that officer, are to be consolidated with Nenah, Parsonstown, and Newbridge.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE BRITISH ARMY.—Corrected to this Day.

COURT-MARTIAL.

Lieut. C. Darby.—Head-Quarters, Camp, Munnymajra, Nov. 7, 1838.—At a general Court-Martial, assembled at Nusseerabad, on the 22d Sept. 1838, Lieut. Charles Darby, of the 52d regt. N.I., was arraigned on the following charges:—

First Charge.—For having been drunk, when regimental officer of the day, on the 23d July, 1838. Second Charge.—For not having visited the guards on that day. Third Charge.—For scandalous conduct, unbecoming the character of a gentleman, in the following instances:—

First. In having, on the same day, and in the presence of Ens. Edward Hall, and two officers of the 9th regt. L.C., spoken grossly abusive and indecent words regarding his immediate commanding officer, Major George Kingston, and other officers of his regiment. Second.—In having, on the same day, applied grossly abusive and indecent expressions to Ens. Edward Hall, accompanied with threats and attempts to horsewhip the said Ens. Hall. Third.—In having, on the 24th July, 1838, addressed an insulting note to Surg Alex. M'Kenzie Clark.

Upon which charges the Court came to the following decision:—

Finding.—That the prisoner, Lieut. Charles Darby, 52d regt. N.I., is—Of the first charge, not guilty, and does acquit him thereof.—Of the second charge, guilty.—Of the third charge: of the first instance, guilty, of the second instance, guilty; of the third instance, guilty.

The Court, having found the prisoner guilty as above, is further of opinion, that such conduct is scandalous, and unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman.

Sentence.—The court sentences the prisoner, Lieut. Charles Darby, of the 52d regt. N. I., to be discharged from the Service.

Approved, (Signed) H. Fane, General,
Com.-in-Chief, East Indies.

Recommendation.—The Court, having thus performed the painful duty of awarding punishment commensurate to the crime the prisoner has been found guilty of, respectfully begs leave to recommend the prisoner to the merciful consideration of his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief, with a view to his case being brought to the favourable consideration of Government. The Court grounds this recommendation on the irritating circumstances which occurred prior to, and at, the time he committed himself.

Remark by His Excellency the Com.-in-Chief.—The Commander-in-Chief regrets, that the repeated misconduct of Lieut. Darby precludes the possibility of his attending to the recommendation of the members of the Court. The sentence to have effect from the date of its promulgation at Nusseerabad.

Fermoy is to be the station for cavalry in the Cork district, in place of Ballincollig, and the stabling in the former place is now under repair.

East India Intelligence.

On Tuesday the bulk of the Indian mails arrived in town, being brought to Falmouth by the steamer Liverpool, from Gibraltar. We are now in possession of the details of the information previously received through Marseilles, of which our last Number contained a hasty sketch.

The following extract from the Agra Ukhbar, 20th Dec., will give a concise account of the objects contemplated by the Government of India :—

"The objects contemplated by the present movement on our north-western frontier daily receive new light, and as far as we can rely on the information, the following are among them :—A line of posts is to be formed along the Indus, connecting these provinces with the Bombay Presidency. The principal stations on the line are to be Ferozepore, Bhawulpoor, and Shikarpoor, or at a spot nearer the junction of the five rivers of the Punjaub with the Indus. This occupation, of course, implies the consent of the Bhawulpoor Rajah and the Scindians, and while it completes our frontier from Bombay to the Sutledge, it will give us such a commanding influence over the political affairs of the Punjaub and Cabul, that we can never be surprised in those quarters by any foreign aggression. The restoration of Shah Soojah will connect us indissolubly with his interests, and the guarantee which it is understood we have given, to support the succession of the heir of Runjeet, must speedily place us in the relation with that power of paramount and inferior. The Scindians, it is thought, will give some trouble—but that will consist more in reconciling them to our arrangements than in the shape of force. The probability of these arrangements is strengthened by the indirect route chosen for the Army, which still proceeds to Shikarpoor, and not direct to Cabul through the Punjaub. By a part of this plan, Ferozepore is immediately to become the head-quarters of the Sirhind division with a strong force, and Bhawulpoor dependent on it. Lahore will thus be within a march of us and Bhawulpoor, in close connection with the Bombay station to be formed at Shikarpoor. Among other changes, it is understood Kurnaul and Meerut will be incorporated, the head-quarters of the division being at the former station."

The following troops for Aden embarked on the 30th December :—

Detail of Artillery—Capt. Willoughby, commanding; 1 Lieut., 2 Sergeants, 22 rank and file, 1 Drummer, 2 Native Officers, and 102 Gun Lascars.

European Regiment—Major Osburne, commanding: 3 Captains, 9 Subalterns, 1 Surgeon, 1 Assist.-Surgeon, 25 Sergeants, 288 rank and file, and 9 Drummers and Fifers.

24th Regiment N I.—Major Baillie, commanding, 1 Captain, 7 Subalterns, 1 Assist.-Surgeon, 7 Native Officers, 26 Havildars, 350 rank and file, and 16 Drummers and Fifers.

Sappers and Pioneers—1 Native Officer, 2 Corporals, and 45 rank and file.—Bombay Times, Jan. 2.

We hear that Major-Gen. Salter is about to visit the Presidency on sick certificate.—Bombay Times, Dec. 29.

Ferozepore, Dec. 2d, 1838.—The day of the departure of that portion of the army under orders for Cabul is now more uncertain than ever. Intelligence has been received of the immense difficulty attending the collection of supplies, and the disinclination of the people to afford us any assistance. Letters from Moultaun state, that Major Parsons had been misinformed respecting the resources of that place. To remedy the difficulty, Lieut. Bezant, the Interpreter and Quartermaster of the 21st N.I., who has attracted the notice of Government by his great success in the acquisition of languages, was yesterday appointed to the Commissariat, and despatched to Mittenkhote, escorted by 80 of the Maharajah's sowars, and 10 of his regular cavalry. Five lacs of rupees were also forwarded across the river, for the purpose of meeting the expense of collecting grain, the Maharajah providing the escort.—Englishman, Dec. 18.

The General Orders of the 11th Dec. contain arrangements for the permanent occupation of Ferozepore and cantonments, particular instructions being given, in General Orders of 11th Dec., as to the choice of site for the huts for the troops, which are to be constructed as a sufficient protection through the rainy season.

The Commander-in-Chief was to have commenced his passage down the Sutledge on the 16th inst., but does not resign the command of the army, as he purposes reviewing the combined troops of Bengal and Bombay at Shikarpoor, an arrangement by which they will enjoy the benefit of his inspection, and His Excellency a longer continuance of his command.—Agra Ukhbar, Dec. 20.

Scinde Army.—Sir John Keane has issued orders to the Scinde Army upon their disembarkation, preparatory to commencing their march on Tatta and Hydrabad, in which he calls upon his men to treat the natives with gentleness, as he states them to be a very sensitive class. His Excellency passed a high encomium on the conduct of the troops since their arrival in the encampment, and fully anticipated a continuance of the same orderly and good conduct.—Bombay Times, 2d Jan.

Burmah.—A company of Sappers and Miners is encamped on the western esplanade for immediate removal to Moulmein, and there is a rumour that an express arrived here a few days ago from Calcutta, directing the embarkation of troops for the same quarter at the earliest possible moment. Two European regiments are in readiness at Ceylon, to move at the shortest notice, and as the Admiral is there, and prepared to lend effective assistance should war be declared against Burmah, no time will be lost in transporting them to the scene of action the moment their services are required.—Madras Herald, Dec. 22.

The Lord Elphinstone has been taken up to convey the troops to Moulmein, and small vessels for the transport of the stores.

Camp on the Hujamree, branch of the Indus, 17th Dec., 1838. The whole of the troops, with the exception of the irregular horse and a few of the 1st cavalry, are now here. There are about 1,400 camels in camp, and the 500 from Cutch, would have been here some time ago, if the Rajah of Murpoor had not refused to allow them to pass through his territory.—Bombay Times, 29th Dec.

Abolition of the Pilgrim Tax.—The October mail brings intelligence that a despatch has been sent from the Court of Directors to the Supreme Government relative to the forced attendance of Christian officers at idolatrous festivals, and the collection of the Pilgrim tax, which was calculated to satisfy the public expectation. We are happy to be enabled to inform our readers that it has been anticipated by Lord Auckland, and that the Pilgrim tax at Allahabad has already received its death-blow. We have it on undoubted authority, that his Lordship has signified his wishes that, at the approaching festival at Allahabad, the tax usually levied on the devotees should be remedied. Gya and Juggernath will follow Allahabad, and nine years hence we shall discover that the dissolution of our connexion with the shrines of idolatry, the restoration of them to their legitimate guardians, and the abolition of all idolatrous imposts, left no feeling in the country but that of increased respect.—Friend of India, Dec. 13*th*.

A circular has recently been issued by the Sudder Board of Revenue, requesting the opinion of the local authorities of the several districts, as to the propriety of investing the uncovenanted revenue and judicial officers of Government, with powers which have been hitherto exercised by local agents. They have likewise desired to be informed of the notion entertained by the generality of the people, of the interference of the religious endowments by Government officers.—Moorshedabad News, Dec. 8*th*.

Messrs. Raper and Co.'s Waterproof Cloths.—We have every reason to believe that a new discovery has been perfected in connexion with the waterproofing of woollen cloths, which will entirely supersede those cumbersome and unsightly objects, the Macintoshes; at the same time avoiding the mischievous and even dangerous quality of that invention—its suppression of the perspiration. Should such a desideratum have been attained, it will be a matter of real importance, especially to the Navy and Army.

NATIONAL CORPS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—It has been observed to me, that, after repulsing Sir Charles Napier's columns of attack, I ought to storm the great gun which he has brought to play on my line of defence. I allude to the opinion of Sir J. Moore, that a perfect regiment should consist of one-third Irish, one-third Scots, and one-third Englishmen. Now, as a chief of division, that lamented leader was undoubtedly of high mark, although I believe in no respect superior to a score at least of others, who require but opportunity to display their talents on a larger scale: nor is there any room for doubt amongst those who knew both parties, that Sir Charles Napier would equal at least, if not surpass, the departed hero. Nevertheless, in the moral management of men's minds, in the art of converting his followers into machines of his will, in the science of converting even the vices of those under him to advantage, Sir John displayed comparatively small power, and may not for an instant be compared to Gustavus, Napoleon, and Suvoroff, or, on a smaller scale, to Sydney Smith, Stewart, Lowry Cole, and Wolfe; yet, on investigation, we may find that it was from directing his attention towards physical, rather than moral power, he in this point proved defective. That careful study of nationality might have enabled him to exert a greater degree of influence, both as a diplomate and as a General-in-Chief during his one disastrous campaign; and that his failure to conciliate the esteem either of Swedes, Portuguese, or Spaniards, may be traced to the accursed notion of modern liberalism implanted by false education in his mind, that all men are born equal and alike, and must be treated on the same principles, and in the same way. Howbeit, as Sir Charles thinks his patron's name of weight sufficient to silence my batteries, I must take the liberty of unmasking some heavier guns, hitherto kept in reserve, and fairly putting it to every military reader on which side the greatest weight of fire shall be seen to preponderate.

Against attention to nationality, I find the following chiefs to have declared themselves:—The Emperor Joseph—thrashed everywhere; Sir William Howe, of Bunker's Hill, &c.; Gen. Burgoyne, of Saratoga; Gen. Tarleton, of the Cow-pens; the Prince of Saxe Coburg, vide Giurgevo Heraus, and everywhere else when engaged; the "Butcher" Duke of Cumberland; Marshal Jourdan, the Anvil-Victor, of whom Napoleon's opinion in latter days may suffice; Sir John Murray, Lord William Bentinck, Gen. Whitelocke, Mina, Espartero, Quesada, et hoc genus omne, may I believe be added if the reader will. Some perhaps may think that coincidence with these people in opinion does not increase the weight of that expressed even by Sir John Moore.

In favour of an adherence to nationality more rigid than that which I recommend, we shall find Gustavus Adolphus; Marshal Turenne; William (of glorious memory); the great Lord Chatham, who introduced and ascribed to it much of the renown of the seven years' war; Marshal Suvoroff, second to Wellington alone, if second to man; Napoleon Buonaparte; and the noble Zumalacarregny. The array of names on my side is undoubtedly smaller; but there are who think "one salmon worth ten thousand frogs," and who hold that forty Whitelockes might fail to beat one Wellington, and that one Lord Chatham may achieve more for his country than the collective wisdom of one hundred Joseph Humes.

Sir Charles seems, in his enmity to nationality, to forget that the four races composing the British empire have four different creeds. I say four different creeds; for whilst admiring above all others the Established Church of England, I feel that it is not adapted for the lower classes of Welsh, and that with the native Irish it never can become popular. A compromise betwixt the Scotch Kirk and the Episcopacy of England, as sought by Archbishop Usher, would suit these more ardent and less intellectual families of mankind. In the meantime, those Welsh who have any religion run for the most part into Methodism, whilst the Irish continue attached to Rome. Any religion is, however, preferable to none at all. By exciting some degree of religious feeling we can alone, I think, keep men steady under such circumstances as those to which they are now liable in Canada. The 93d, where the men are all of the Kirk, has not lost a man by desertion. When you mix Catholics, Churchmen, Presbyterians, and Methodists into one mass, you speedily find, either that one faith destroys the other, that the men look on religion as a bootless form, or that a smothered feeling of dislike is generated, far more dangerous than those feuds which Sir Charles Napier professes to fear. The first result is certain with the many; the second more than probable with the few. If men are mixed, it is impossible that the Commanding Officer can be looked up to by all in the light of a feudal chief. The observances of religion are likely to sink into contempt, and those who retain them to be, in some degree, sneered at by those of a different creed. There can be little brotherhood betwixt men of opposite faiths brought together, though there may be much of regard when not in daily contact. To cause a Catholic soldier to attend Protestant worship would be cruel: to compel a Protestant to kneel at mass would, I have been told, expose the offender to tremendous penalties, more formidable than irreversible outlawry, if I understood right. Yet, if there be different creeds, the followers of one must often be debarred from worship altogether; and the appointment of a chaplain will not remedy this defect. I have understood from old officers that when a Gaelic chaplain was appointed to every Highland corps, the fear of his rebuke operated more powerfully on the Scot than all the cats in the world upon mixed regiments; and those who know the influence of an Irish priest or a Welsh clergyman of native blood, whose whole heart is given to the duty, will be aware that it is scarcely less strong. The Methodist preachers put down the revolt at Merthyr in 1831: I doubt if 5000 troops could have done it without their aid.

The first deviation from this principle began under Sir William Howe, who lost us America. He first admitted Irish Catholic recruits to Saxon corps. To a man they deserted the day after Bunker's Hill, more than replacing the traitors slain in action, and supplying Washington with sufficient veterans to drill the whole rebel force; yet those very Irish, when embodied by themselves under Lord Rawdon, did not lose a man for months. Till 1780 the 42d had never from its formation suffered a stain on its moral conduct. One hundred Irish were then enlisted amongst 600 Gael. In twelvemonths, the famed "Black Watch" became as disorderly as any corps in the service. The Irish were transferred to the 26th, and that regiment was demoralised in like manner, taking many years to regain old renown.

We have a later instance of the like result. Up to 1825, the 93d was a regiment purely national, and for morality and steady conduct the first in the world. Since that time its Colonel was compelled to take a few miscellaneous recruits, and he, the first disciplinarian in the service, was compelled to become sternly severe; for the Gaels became as much corrupted as the Milesians themselves. No sooner had it been restored to its old nationality, than its fame revived, and it is now, as before, the steadiest and most popular corps in the service. Col. Macgregor's opinion I should think equal to that of Sir John Moore. He says that, in a purely national corps, the lash may be dispensed with; but that in a mixed one it must be brought into play. ARTHUR.

HOW TO MAKE PAIXHAN'S GUN-SHIPS CUT AND RUN.

SIR,—Believing, with yourself, that "the system of war will be now modelled in many respects, and the art become based on the principle of individual prowess, rather than upon the science of gunnery;"—proud of, and thankfully appreciating, your approval and encouragement of my labours, practically as well as theoretically to prove how "physical strength, personal skill, and individual courage" can be improved in both the services, to be in readiness against such a change!—and gratefully joining in your generous and reasonable hope that Government's timely and hard-earned encouragement will avert that ruin otherwise likely to recoil on your too enthusiastic correspondent, from these loyal endeavours, it must seem so much more ungracious in me to differ in opinion from a writer whose courtesy is alone exceeded by his store of information and sound judgment; yet I must do so when deridingly you call "a gasconade" the extensive adoption of the Paixhan's Artillery in Foreign Navies, and the throwing as a bauble, yet with the precision of ordinary shot, into the hulls of ships, there to burst, a "bombshell of 120 pounds!" I humbly think, also, that, so far from finding a counterpoise in our (not always) superior machinery of steamers, or in the mischief inferior coal will do to theirs, that their influence will only be something like 1 in 1000, and that chiefly in the expense of more frequent repairs of wear and tear. Believe me, neither croaking nor quailing form any part of the Stadium drills; but brought up in (then certainly) the first Cadet school in Europe, it was deeply impressed on my juvenile mind, that, to hold an enemy, or his strategies, cheap, is, if not to second him in victory, a sure way of tarnishing the laurels of your own! So impressed and hardly justified for taking an amphibious post in aid of national defence, with all my fondness for "the clash of steel," and "personal conflict" with boarding-pike, as well as lance or bayonet, I must own that, although at first fascinated by perceiving a practicability of boarding, by means of swimmers, driving spars with flat floats lashed to the ends of each before them, to enable their standing upon them without their turning round when alongside of their intended prize, I decided on a preference of "infernal compounds," (invented by me in 1813, and kept secret ever since,) in order to make these floating Paixhan's Monster-dens cut and run, instead of exposing brave swimmers to the fire of small arms, and their ship, be it even once in every six minutes, to receive holes as big as barn-doors, not so easily stopped as those riddled by rapid broadsides into the hulls of enemies, who thus aimed not only at an equality, but at a superiority in conflicts; a motive which, stimulating the weaker, ought equally to influence the superior force, the better to preserve the disparity. It has been observed that inventions progress slowly towards practical application, borne out by Mons. Paixhan's having published his invention as long ago as 1822, (for I then had some thoughts of employing it in a high command I was appointed to in South America) but that cannot justify equal tardiness in measures counteracting their effect, and especially when we discover that such inventions, as if to make up for delay, have spread in their adoption as widely as suddenly.

But How to make these bullies cut and run, "Aye, that's the question!" I pledge myself to do it, provided Government will remunerate me liberally for transferring, and for its exclusive use—an invention which, out of loyalty, I refused to disclose to a great power, whose accredited agent, and an officer of rank, pressed me repeatedly so to do, as I can prove, and under dazzling offers too! He had seen, in a book published by me so long ago as 1816, and containing a list of my then inventions, but describing their merits only, without explaining in any way the means employed, the following account:—"A compact accoutrement for light troops (containing most furious combustibles) not exceeding 1¼ pound in weight, but enabling a private soldier to set on fire, or blow up successively, a number of baggage or ammunition waggons, at a range of even 400 to 500 yards *. The performance is easy, certain, and rapid; the fire can only be extinguished by one article, scarcely thought of, and then even with much difficulty. The same kind of apparatus on an increased scale, but much less encumbering than a Congreve rocket battery, may be used, 'with equal facility and certainty,' at ranges from 800 to 1,000 yards, either in the field, from the shore, against shipping, or by being placed in ships' boats, thereby rendered terrible to the largest ships; for, whilst their diminutive size at a distance of 1,000 yards must greatly protect them against the enemy's fire, they can forward, with great rapidity and precision, constant and adhesive supplies of liquid fire, to set in a blaze the spacious sails and rigging of large ships, even at so great a distance." I need hardly point to the immense difference of a fire in the hull from the conflagration of the sails and rigging, and the next to impossibility of extinguishing the latter!

Few will deny that the following are among the leading qualifications necessary for the accomplishment of heroic exploits. The securing of important advantages, not only by skilful manœuvres and their daring execution, but equally so by an aptitude and promptness in shaping ourselves to circumstances, instead of slavishly, or rather blindly, adhering to old rules, although they have been diminished in value and efficacy by the changes of the times, of men, or of their measures; to investigate, without regard to party, persons, or want of introduction, and therefore impartially and sensibly, all proposals and recommendations promising benefits—but more especially those founded in scientific discoveries—instead of driving advantages into the embrace of enemies or rivals, as Fulton and some others were, by indifference or stinginess in reward; on the contrary, to remunerate them fairly, nay, liberally, as Napoleon invariably did (and which caused his being served as powerfully as cheerfully), from a sense of policy as well as fairness, thereupon to know how to convert such discoveries, fairly made our own, into powerful auxiliaries to the service, by employing them promptly and in a novel manner. Stadium, Cremorne House, Feb. 25. DE BERANGER.

* Captain Norton's rifle shell not only is a very different invention, and of at least twelve years' later date; but it explodes only, and therefore cannot be used for throwing adhesive fire against sails or rigging, if even it contained anything like the same quantity as here is propelled.

BLACK TROOPS FOR COLONIAL SERVICE.

SIR,—In the year 1799 I took the liberty of suggesting to the late Duke of York the great advantages which would result to the Service from the having one third of our troops stationed in our tropical colonies, composed of the coloured race—a suggestion which his Royal Highness did not feel disposed to adopt at the time.

But subsequently eight regiments (I think) of that description were raised, and continued as forming part of the Service, until the greater part of them were expended, and the eight were drafted into two nominally, though only the second (I believe) was kept in an effective state, at a great expense to the country, by keeping up recruiting parties in Africa. Instead of incurring which expense, I strongly urged the expediency of selecting fresh recruits from among the captured slaves, than being brought into our colonies, under the operation of the Abolition Act, as such recruits would not cost the country any additional expense to that allowed their Captors—a measure partially resorted to—while pointing out at the same time the favourable opportunity which presented itself for realising the plan which I had originally suggested at head-quarters in the year 1799, from the partial employment of such a force in every one of our tropical colonies; thereby not only saving the 100*l.*, which it cost for replacing every white soldier who died, but would at the same time prevent the expenditure of thousands of valuable lives, at no other expense than that of the black recruits' kit; yet all my efforts proved effectual in the accomplishment of the object.

Whether the adoption of Sir S. Whittingham's plan would be equally eligible and judicious at the present day (since having rendered them essentially black colonies), we must let those determine who have to keep watch; but my own opinion is, that before a dozen years elapse we shall not be in possession of one single colony in the Western hemisphere that will be worth the keeping, save that of Bermuda, (which, from its position, I view as the Gibraltar of that portion of the globe), where the white population rather preponderate; and who consequently, if they choose to consider themselves otherwise, will not come under the denomination which I have affixed to our other West India possessions. AN OLD COLONIST.

THE BRITISH MILITARY SYSTEM.

SIR,—I assure you, that we here enter most warmly into Baron de Berenger's feeling as to the value and necessity of gymnasia—indeed, it was with the view of following (though at an humble distance) his exertions for their establishment, as the sole remedy for many evils complained of, and the most useful as an amusement for the soldier's leisure hours, that I was induced to lay bare a few of the evils existing in the Army. With respect to his barrack-gardens, I must (respectfully) differ from him, having had an opportunity of witnessing their inutility; but with gymnasia, ball-practice, swimming-baths, &c. &c., the results will be gratifying to those who have exerted themselves for their introduction, beneficial to those partaking, and satisfactory to the authorities sanctioning their erection.

It is only in pursuance of my original plan *, that I did not glance at this subject before; but as I intend, with your permission, to trace the soldier in his career, it will come in its proper place †. Let us hope, then, Sir, as a commencement, that the first great evil, "inadequacy of bounty," will, ere long, by one plan or the other, be removed; other improvements will follow, of course. And as you justly remark ‡, "that by opening promotion from the ranks, a more efficient body of officers will NOT be obtained; but by the certainty of some rising to officers, we may obtain a superior class of recruits, whose good sense will convince them that they are excellent material for the non-commissioned ranks, and will ultimately force an improvement in the pay and position of that invaluable class." These sentiments do you honour, Sir, and are the hopes and feelings of the general body of non-commissioned officers who are not eager for "the § great military prize of an Ensigncy of 5*s.* 3*d.* per diem" (especially if he has a wife and three or four children), subject to the deduction of ninety days' pay for mess and band funds, 80*l.* for equipment, and should his regiment fortunately be in the East Indies, 180*l.* for passage out. The Ensign is the worst paid individual in the service, unless the Infantry Serjeant-Major on his bare pay of 3*s.* per diem. But I am intruding on your kindness, and will therefore close this, and next week pursue my proposed subject without digression. CHEVRON.

SATURDAY, MARCH 2, 1839.

The affair of the Mexican Pilot has not yet ceased to attract public attention; and viewing the matter, as we do, with the deepest mortification, we hope that the Government will extract a proper apology from that of France, or prove (which has certainly not yet been done) that such an apology has already been made. Within the last ten or twelve years England has experienced more insults than she had brooked for the preceding five centuries. Within that period, when did she tamely submit to any? We have suffered affronts not only from powerful but from contemptible nations—from some whom it would be ridiculous to dignify with the name of rivals;—not from the French and Russians only, but from the Portuguese! If our endurance of the last is to be ascribed to magnanimity (as a mastiff can afford to despise the impertinence of a poodle), we must be doubly careful to guard against the encroachments of more formidable States.

Party appellations are alike to us: we have always maintained a strictly independent position; and in the present case we think it but honest to admit that the Admiralty, notwithstanding the outcry against them, really seem, as far as was in their power, to have rather exceeded than fallen short of the attention which their Tory precursors bestowed upon that service, which is their peculiar care. But if their Lordships are easily satisfied upon so nice a point as that to which we have been alluding, they must not hope to escape the indignation which every man, with a British heart in his bosom, will certainly feel, and which many will express. Let us ask any one of them as individuals what he would think if, in walking quietly along Parliament-street, or Whitehall, a ruffianly fellow, no matter of what rank, should purposely thrust him into the kennel, or knock off his hat, and, on an explanation being demanded, should reply, with a grin, "Sir (or my Lord), I did push you into the mud, &c. &c. It was very wrong, very wrong indeed: it must have been very disagreeable to you; good morning!" Would either of their Lordships consider this an ample apology? Would the bystanders consider it one? Yet the explanation of the French Admiral has not been proved to have been more satisfactory than this; and it has never been pretended that the Prince de Joinville has been put in arrest, or even reprimanded for his conduct.

If once it gets abroad that John Bull is a kickable personage, we may be well assured that millions of puny feet will be joyfully raised in every part of the world to dishonour his portly and heretofore respected figure. We do think, therefore, that the insolence of the Prince de Joinville, whether he acted spontaneously, or with the sanction or command of his Admiral, should not have been submitted to. We have no wish to be unnecessarily hard upon the officer commanding the packet, who is personally a stranger to us, and whose character is believed to have been hitherto unstained. His apologists may perhaps say, that a person in mortal peril should not be reflected upon by those at a distance and in safety, and that an outcry against him here by the people at large would resemble the cry of "Turn him out!" against the disturber of a theatrical performance, always shouted most zealously by those who are farthest from the obnoxious individual. We must, however, be excused for thinking that an officer who places life in comparison with his country's honour, has no business in the British Navy. Be this as it may, what can be said for Commodore Douglas, always supposing the apology offered by the French Admiral was not more satisfactory than it has yet been made to appear? The affair would not have been so quietly passed over formerly. Had a British officer been found to submit to a foreign insult, the Admiralty, the Government, the country, would not have suffered the reproach to be of a week's duration.

In the last century, when Admiral Thos. Smith, then Lieutenant of the Gosport, fired into a French frigate, only for omitting the usual compliment of lowering her topsails when putting to sea from Plymouth, he was broke, indeed, by a Court-Martial for his irregularity, but made Post the next day for his patriotic zeal. Without requiring the present generation of officers to go all lengths with Admiral Smith (whose spirit procured him the name of "Tom of Ten Thousand"* then), we think some of them might study this and other anecdotes of past times with advantage.

We abstain from all remark on the occurrences said to have taken place in the Royal Regiment of Horse Guards. We conceive that such matters are best left to the decision of the Military authorities, without reference to the Military body generally. In reprinting in our columns the article from the Observer, we hold ourselves in no way responsible for the facts or comments it contains.

We have been at some pains to give a correct account this week of the New Armament for vessels of all classes, adopted on the suggestion of that able and intelligent officer, Captain Hastings, of H.M.S. Excellent. Part of it has already appeared in a contemporary journal, and our only reason for not having also published the scale, arises from our anxiety that every table of this kind, inserted in the Naval and Military Gazette, may be depended on for its authenticity, and available for future reference, to those subscribers who file our journal.

Weight of metal . . . . 80 lbs.
Weight of broadside . . . 56 lbs.

This is the Brisk class of brigantines, pivot gun, being fought on both broadsides.

The guns of the new patterns are ultimately to supersede the bored guns of the Congreve and Bloomfield patterns, but as there are a great many of these patterns in store, they are to be used as long as they last. The Congreve 24-pounder thus bored out is 7½ feet long, and 40 cwt.; the Bloomfield 7½ feet 24-pounder is 41 cwt.; and there is a Bloomfield 24-pounder of 8 feet, which has been bored out to the calibre of 32 pounds. There are also some 24-pounders of common pattern, of 8 feet and 9 feet length, of 40 cwt. and 46 cwt. respectively, which have been enlarged to the calibre of 32.

* Bloomfield's or Congreve's guns.

THERE we have noticed the resignation of General Sir Henry Fane, as Commander-in-Chief in the East Indies, and we will now offer a few remarks as to his successor in that important command.

With the utmost deference for the General Officers of the Queen's Army, and of the East India Company's Army in general, we hazard nothing in saying, there is not one who could carry to the office such essential qualifications resulting from particular and general, or varied experience, and local knowledge acquired at all the general Presidencies in India, as Lieutenant-General Sir Jasper Nicolls; with an intimate and favourable opinion of the character and conduct of the native soldiery, on whose attachment and fidelity the maintenance of our empire in India does and must depend.

"From the last edition of the "Royal Military Calendar" containing the services of the General and Field Officers of the Army, we take the following note of Sir Jasper, at the time of publication Colonel, Nicolls's services:—

He served in the West Indies, and acted as Regimental Paymaster, twice as Judge Advocate, and also as A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Nicolls; subsequently in the East Indies as A.D.C. and Military Secretary to the same officer, until he joined as a volunteer the Army under the Duke of Wellington. He commanded a company of the 78th Foot in the Mahratta war, and was at the battle of Argaum, and at the siege and storm of Gawil Ghur. He returned to Europe on his promotion to a Majority. In 1805 he embarked for Hanover, and in 1806 for the Rio de la Plata with the troops under Brig.-Gen. Crauford. He was engaged commanding a detachment in the town of Buenos Ayres; and subsequently employed as a hostage and head of a committee to correspond with the Spanish Government after the return of the Army to Monte Video. He commanded the 14th Foot in Spain under Sir David Baird, and was at the battle of Corunna, where he distinguished himself. In 1809 he served in Walcheren. In April, 1811, he was appointed Assist. Adjut.-Gen. at the Horse Guards; and on the 1st of Jan. 1812, Deputy Adjut.-Gen. in Ireland, where he was seven months at the head of that department, Sir H. Clinton being at that time on service in Spain. In Aug., 1812, he was nominated Quartermaster-General of H.M.'s forces in the East Indies, and repaired thither in Jan. following. In March, 1815, during the Nepaul war, at the desire of the Gov.-General and Commander-in-Chief, he took charge of the reinforcements destined to support the operations commenced in the mountainous provinces of Kemaoon by a body of irregular Infantry under command of Lt.-Col. Gardner. The enemy concentrated his force, between three and four thousand men, in the vicinity of Almora, the capital; but being attacked with success on the 22d and 26th of April, the Goorkha Chiefs surrendered the whole province on conditions on the 27th, and it was formally ceded to the East India Company by the treaty of peace. In Dec. 1815, and in Mar. 1816, he was again directed by the Marquess of Hastings to take charge of a corps ordered to assemble in the Naloah Vizier's territories, for the purpose of invading the Western Provinces of Nepaul. On the latter occasion, the troops had moved from the point of assembly, in number about 5500 men, but their exertions became unnecessary in consequence of the rapid and astonishing success of the Army under the command of Sir David Ochterlony. In 1817 this officer returned to the U. Provinces of Bengal, with the Governor-General, and during a part of the operations against the Pindarees and Mahratta powers he commanded a brigade in the centre division of the grand Army, with which the Marquess of Hastings was present. The treaty with Scindia prevented this division from having any active share in the operations of 1817-18.

The foregoing, published some years since, does not embrace his later and most brilliant career. In brief, as respects his services in India, he in earlier times was at Bombay on the Staff of his relative General Oliver Nicolls; then as Quartermaster-General of H.M.'s troops in Bengal, and whilst in that situation was selected to command a division of troops in the Nepaul war, with which he added to the lustre of our operations by the conquest of the Province of Kemaoon; then as Major-General on the Staff at Madras, and afterwards as Major-General on the Staff in Bengal, where he closed that period of his service by being present at the capture of Bhurtpoor; and at this moment on the spot, and in the vigour of life, at hand to fill the vacant office of Commander-in-Chief.

"We will not suppose that in any quarter it can be an objection, that Sir Jasper Nicolls entertains favourable impressions with regard to the Company's Army, and for the peculiar character of the native soldiery. But on impartial public grounds, and that essential qualification resulting from long acquired experience, which has been a desideratum in all who have gone before him in the office in question, this would prove the highest recommendation, and such, by the blessing of God, it may so prove. In every other respect, too, he seems eminently qualified for the office. Great moderation and equanimity of temper, long official experience, with peculiar habits of business, and official routine, he could not fail to render general satisfaction to the service at large, thereby promoting the best interests of the State, by fulfilling every expectation of the Government at home.

THE great facility with which a soldier can procure his discharge, if he or his friends can pay the regulated price of 30*l.* in the Cavalry, and 20*l.* in the Infantry, has caused of late years a very large number of men to leave the service: and the public accounts show that the money thus obtained has gone far towards defraying the expenses of the Recruiting Department. However great the benefit may have proved to individuals, and however much the charge in the recruiting may have decreased, it is matter of notoriety in the army, that this system has deprived every regiment of its most respectable recruits, and lessened the materiel out of which the most valuable non-commissioned officers would be supplied. Hence it is that we hear a very general complaint that regiments do not possess, in these days, many non-commissioned officers equal to those who have been discharged within the last ten years. We may be singular in our opinion, but we have good grounds for thinking it would be found productive of much benefit to the Army if soldiers were not permitted to purchase their discharge under seven years' service. The result of this restriction would be, that the better class of recruits would be retained for that period at least; and it is probable very many would become attached to their profession, and, having risen in it, would continue in the service with a view to obtain their pensions. Certain it is that, under the present system, the Army loses, almost immediately after attestment, the very best recruits, who, finding the period of their drill irksome and fatiguing, solicit their friends to purchase their discharge. Few soldiers, we understand, are desirous of purchasing out after they have been even one year in the service. The subject merits the consideration of those who are anxious for the improvement of the materiel of the Army; and we believe it has already received some close consideration at the Horse Guards.

IT is a gratifying part of our duty, as Journalists for the United Service, to record the names and services of the officers of the Royal Navy and Royal Marines who have within the last twelve months received the "Pensions for Good and Meritorious Services." Those previously on the List were recorded in our volume for 1838.

In pursuance of an Order in Council, dated 12th July 1837, founded on the Recommendations contained in the Report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons on Army and Navy Appointments, dated 12th Aug. 1833.

Royal Marines.

Major-General Sir John Boscowen Savage, R.M., C.B & K.C.H.: Second Lieut., 2 Jan. 1777; First Lieut., 1 Jan. 1780; Capt., 24 Apr. 1795; Major, 15 Aug. 1803; Lt.-Col., 24 Mar. 1812; Col. Commandant, 20 June 1825; Major-Gen., 10 Jan. 1837.

Was Ensign in the 48th reg. for nearly four years before his appointment to the Royal Marines, during which time he was employed in the Island of Tobago against the revolted negroes; served in the Bedford as First Lieut., under Sir George Rodney, in the engagement with the Spanish fleet, under Don Juan de Langaro, when six sail of the line were captured and two destroyed; served as Captain in the Orion at the battle of St. Vincent, when four sail of the line were captured; was Capt. in the same ship at the battle of the Nile, when 11 sail of the line were captured and destroyed; in this action he was severely wounded; was Capt. in the Ganges at the battle of Copenhagen; afterwards served under Lord St. Vincent off Brest, and at Jamaica; has been sixty years in the service, nearly six of which as Commandant of the Chatham Division, and nearly seven as Deputy Adjutant General in London.

In our last number we affirmed that the general opinion entertained of Ireland being the chief source whence recruits were drawn for the Army, was extremely erroneous; and we challenged Mr. O'Connell to move for a Return to show the number of each country now serving in the British Army. In turning over the leaves of the United Service Journal, for December, 1837, we alighted on a statement which goes far to prove our assertion. In the year 1814, we observe that the following numbers of each country were enlisted, viz.—

RECRUITS ENLISTED:—

English for Life	.	. 1670	English for Limited Service	687
Scotch ditto	.	. 236	Scotch ditto	.	84
Irish ditto	.	. 565	Irish ditto	.	1
Total	.	2471	Total	.	772

Total—English, 2357; Scotch, 320, Irish, 566.

We asserted last week that the returns would justify our stating not one-fourth of the Army to be Irish: we stand by our assertion, though we have only the Official Returns of one year,—"Ex uno disce omnes." If our statement be true of the Army, it is still more so of the Navy, in which certainly not one-twentieth part is Irish.

The following regulations, just issued by the Admiralty, respecting the future accommodation of troops in hired transports, are, we conceive, calculated to afford general satisfaction, and to obviate some of the objections that exist to that mode of transit. We shall be glad, however, when a sufficient number of troop-ships are fitted and maintained, to keep moving the customary reliefs, leaving the hire of transports to be adopted on other occasions, when unusual circumstances make their assistance necessary. It is but fair to add, that the whole credit of this liberal and excellent regulation is due to Lord Howick, the Secretary at War.

Considering it, on several accounts, of great importance that one uniform system should be observed in the fitting of transports, in order that the same degree of convenience should, as far as practicable, be afforded in every ship, both as to the officers and troops, the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty are pleased to direct that the following General Regulations shall be adopted in the fitting of all transports taken up in future, and that no deviation from them shall be allowed, except by their Lordships' express authority:—

1. That the officers' mess place shall always, when practicable, be under the poop.

2. That the Commanding Officer shall have the aftermost cabin for himself under the poop, on the larboard side.

3. That the aftermost cabin under the poop, on the starboard side, shall be for officers' wives.

4. That the Agent shall have the foremost cabin under the poop, on the starboard side.

5. That the Master shall have the foremost cabin under the poop, on the larboard side.

6. That one cabin under the poop shall be fitted as a pantry for the officers' mess.

7. That the remainder of the space under the poop shall be fitted for officers' cabins.

8. That each cabin shall be fitted up with two sleeping berth, fore and aft.

9. That each cabin shall be seven feet long, and six feet wide.

10. That the mess place of the Agent and Master shall be in the aftermost part of the lower deck, on the starboard side.

11. That two cabins on the lower deck shall be appropriated for the officers of the ship; one for the Chief Mate and the other for the 2d Mate and Carpenter.

12. That the foremost berth on the larboard side shall be appropriated for a sick bay.

13. That the aftermost sleeping berths on each side, with jalousied screens to separate them from the men's berths, so far as they are required, be appropriated for the soldiers' wives and their children.

14. That the remainder of the sleeping berths shall be occupied by the non-commissioned officers and privates, —one-third being constantly on deck, according to the present practice.

15. That the number of water-closets shall be as follows:—One for the Commanding Officer under the poop, on the larboard side; one for officers' ladies and children, on the starboard side; two for officers under the fore part of the poop; two for soldiers' wives, non-commissioned officers, &c., under the after part of the forecastle, and that none shall be allowed on the lower deck.

16. That the berth shall be kept about three inches from the ship's side, to prevent the bedding from being wet.

17. That no hammocks shall be used amidships.

18. That arm-racks shall be fitted between the fore and main hatchways.

Secondly, with regard to the number of troops to be conveyed when proceeding on foreign service:—

For the purpose of diminishing the inconvenience that has arisen from the crowded state of troops embarked, when proceeding abroad, it will not only be desirable that one uniform system should be established for the fitting of transports, but that the number to be embarked should be in proportion to the accommodation to be afforded by those fittings, and to the stations to which they are under orders to proceed.

After giving the most deliberate consideration to these points, their Lordships are of opinion, that the adoption of the following scheme will go far to remedy the inconvenience which has been experienced, if not entirely to remove every just cause for complaint, viz.—

That the allowance for tonnage shall be increased from one ton and three-quarters to two tons, in voyages to the following places:—All places to the southward of the line, West Indies, and Coast of Africa; from one ton and a half to one ton and three-quarters, in voyages to Gibraltar, the Mediterranean, North America, and Newfoundland; and from one ton to one ton and a half in Coastwise or other short voyages; and that this tonnage shall be calculated on the number of persons embarked, reckoning two children under ten years of age as one adult, and excluding only those persons who are accommodated under the poop.

That no ship shall be taken up as a transport that measures less than six feet four inches from deck to deck, and that for the purpose of strengthening the crews of transports, the Master and Chief Mate shall, as the Clerk is at present, be in addition to the established number of seamen and boys.

It is their Lordships' opinion that the Military authorities, both at home and abroad, should be instructed, when making requisitions for the conveyance of troops, to furnish the exact number of persons of each description, viz., of officers, their wives, and children; non-commissioned officers, their wives, and children; for whom transport accommodation may be required, distinguishing particularly the number of children under ten years of age.

A correspondent, Veritas, is altogether in error in designating the Artillery, Engineers, and Marines, favoured corps; and even the "few facts," as he terms them, which he has produced to prove them so, are quite incorrect, as we shall show after introducing his letter:—

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—It has long been a matter of surprise amongst many old officers, that whilst statements have been brought forward by other branches of the service, by which they have obtained a most unjust advantage in promotion, that this subject has never been taken up, or investigated, by any General Officer of the line in either House of Parliament. I allude to the fact of Captains of the Artillery, Engineers, and Marines, stepping at once from Captains to Lieut.-Colonels, over the heads of all the Majors in the army. It is not just to select men of high interest and money, and compare their promotion with men who are in a branch of the service, in which neither high interest or any sum of money can place you over the head of your senior officer. But, take for comparison, those officers of the line who cannot purchase, or I will even give you those who have money, and would [redacted] but lack powerful influence to back them, [redacted] branches [redacted] has been taken for granted without investigation.

I shall take the liberty to state a few facts, the truth of which a reference to the Army List will prove. Major Tobin, of the Rl. Artillery, of 1821, promoted to Major General, 1837*; whilst Majors of the line, same date, 1814, promoted by Brevet to Lieut.-Colonel, 1837*. Captains of Rl. Engineers, of 1813 (Oldfield, &c.), promoted to Lieut. Colonels, 1830; whilst Captains of the line, of 1810*, Brevet-Majors*, 1830. Captains of Rl. Marines, of 1825, promoted Lieut.-Colonel, 1839. Captains of the line, 1810*, 15 years' senior, Brevet-Majors, 1830.

Captains of 1810, who purchased Majorities in 1826, still remain Majors; and you will find Captains of the line, of 1810, 1812, 1813, &c., &c., still remaining Captains in their regiments with only the Brevet rank of Major, a rank which all other branches of the service jump over. It is not my wish to detract or lessen the high opinion so justly formed of the Artillery, Engineers, and Marines, but simply to state, that I believe the world have yet to learn when, where, or how, the loyalty, zeal, courage, or utility, of the troops of the line have been less conspicuous than these favoured corps. Should you think any part of this communication worthy of notice in your paper, and that you assist in drawing attention to the cause of justice, by advocating its principles, you will confer a favour upon every old and tried soldier. I have, &c. VERITAS.

To this statement we reply,—1st, "Maj. Tobin, &c., of the Royal Artillery, of 1821, promoted to Major-General in 1837, whilst Majors of the Line, same date (1814), promoted by Brevet to Lieut.-Colonel, 1837." Major-General Tobin is not a Major of 1821, but of the 1st Jan. 12, and Lieut.-Colonel, 19th July 21. He is a Second Lieut. of the 1st Jan. 94, and a Major-General of the 10th Jan. 1837, after upwards of forty-three years' service; besides, he is the junior officer of the Artillery, promoted to Major-General in 1837, with the exception of that most distinguished officer, Sir Alexander Dickson, whose Second Lieutenancy is dated 6th Nov. 1794. The four senior officers then promoted are Majors of 25th Feb. 1808. According to our judgment, this promotion does not afford much grounds for the imputation of favouritism to the Royal Artillery. Neither is Veritas correct in stating that the "Majors of the Line of 1814 were promoted to Brevet Lieut.-Colonels in 1837." On reference, we find that thirty-four Majors of the Line, of 1814, were promoted Brevet Lieut.-Colonels on the 22d July 1830; the remaining Majors of 1814 were certainly not promoted by Brevet to Lieut.-Colonels until 1837; but, at the same time, the fact should not be overlooked; that of these last only one is now serving in the Line, viz., Major and Bt.-Lt.-Col. Grierson, of the 15th Foot, who is the oldest officer now serving as a Regimental Major, having received an Ensigncy in the late 111th Foot, 31st May, 1795; a Lieutenancy in the 39th Foot, 1st Oct. 1795; and a company in the 15th Foot, 27th Aug. 1804, from which period until the present moment he has uninterruptedly belonged to the 15th. This is a single exception of unfortunate promotion to an officer who has followed the fortunes of one corps, and therefore cannot with any fairness be quoted as the rule. On the other hand, there are others who have obtained Lieut.-Colonelcies without purchase in half this time, viz., Lieut.-Colonels Deare, 21st Fusiliers, Ensign, 30th Oct. 1817; Lieut.-Colonel, 28th Dec. 1838. Maitland, 32d Foot, Ensign, 26th Feb. 1807; Lieut.-Colonel, 24th March 1816. Shelton, 44th Foot, Ensign, 21st Nov. 1805; Lieut.-Colonel, 6th Sept. 1827; Bartley, 49th Foot, Ensign, 28th Feb. 1806; Lieut.-Colonel, 25th April, 1828. Craigie, 55th Foot, Ensign, 3d June 1813; Lieut.-Colonel, 21st Nov. 1834. These are also exceptions on the bright side of the picture, and as such are quoted by us. It must not be supposed that we consider these officers too fortunate; on the contrary, we should rejoice, were it possible that all our friends of the different branches of the Army could be equally so.

2d—"Captains of Engineers of 1812, Oldfield, &c., promoted to Lieut.-Colonels, 1830, whilst Captains of the Line of 1810, Brevet-Majors 1830." Lieut.-Colonel Oldfield is not a Captain of 1812—but of the 1st May 1811; nor was he promoted to Lieut.-Colonel in 1830—but to Brevet-Major only. Lieut.-Colonel Slade is the Senior Captain of Royal Engineers, of the year 1812, and he did not obtain his promotion to Lieut.-Colonel until the General Brevet of 10th Jan. 1837. Captains of 1812, equally with those of 1810, received the Brevet of Major in 1830.

3d—"Captains of Royal Marines of 1825, promoted Lieutenant-Colonel 1839." There are no Captains of Royal Marines of 1825. Lieutenant-Colonel Powell, the junior Lieutenant-Colonel, is a Captain of 14th November, 1823; Lieutenant-Colonel 7th November 1838; and a Second Lieutenant of the 31st January, 1800. The senior Captain (Brevet-Major Burton) is a Captain of the 8th April, 1824; and a Second Lieutenant of the 4th August, 1800. Truly, we are not sufficiently clear-sighted to perceive any favouritism here—nay, we should rejoice to be able to announce any measure which could bring about a most extensive promotion in these gallant and distinguished corps, and in which their no less gallant comrades of the Line would participate.

There are instances of extremely rapid promotion, without purchase, in the Line, even in these piping times of peace, which cannot, by possibility, fall to the lot of the Ordnance or Royal Marines, viz., Captain Fawcett, of the 55th regiment, Ensign 6th April, 1826; Captain, without purchase, 21st November, 1834: the Captains of Marines of 1834 entered the service in 1806, twenty years prior to Captain Fawcett. On the other hand, Colonel Elrington, of the 47th, would have been a Major-General some years since had he belonged to a gradation corps.

Veritas must now perceive that he has written on a subject upon which he is totally uninformed; and amongst our numerous and even most talented correspondents we find this to be invariably the case, when they draw comparisons between their own and other branches of the service, more especially when Officers of the Navy draw comparisons from the Army, and vice versâ.

We always regret when this mode of elucidation is resorted to, for we generally find that the cases of greatest hardship in the one service are usually placed in juxtaposition with the very few cases of extreme good fortune in the other, which has a natural tendency to create divisions among the different branches of the service. Let us then all rather unite in one cause, and with one heart, and show up the real hardships under which we either individually or collectively suffer, and so give a long pull, a strong pull, and such a pull altogether as shall be irresistible.

Since the above was in type, a friend has favoured us with the present average length of service and age of the officers of the Royal Artillery.

In this calculation it is taken for granted that the average age of each officer on joining the Military Academy was fifteen.

Fourteen General Officers on the strength of the Army to succeed to battalions before any regimental promotion can take place in the higher ranks.

TRULY has it been said, that "discussion elicits truth," and truly does the maxim apply to the discussion which Naval matters have rather roughly and somewhat unfairly been subjected to during the Parliamentary recess, when no opportunity occurred for official contradiction to the preposterous statements so confidently advanced.

We feared, from the sudden withdrawal of Lord Hardwicke's motion, at the desire, it is rumoured, of the leaders of his party, that an opportunity would be wanting, until the Navy Estimates were moved, for refuting these statements which assumed our Naval strength to have passed away; as it would not have been altogether regular for the Government to have mooted an opportunity.

The motion of Lord Colchester, however, on Friday se'nnight afforded the First Lord of the Admiralty the desired opportunity. How he availed himself of it, his Lordship's statements in the debate, as they appeared in our last, will show; and that his vindication and exposition were complete is proved from the fact, that his political antagonists, Earl De Grey and Lord Melville, both of whom had filled the high office, and therefore knew the difficulties a First Lord of the Admiralty has to contend with,—both these noblemen acknowledged, in the most candid and honourable manner, that so far from the efficiency of our Navy in force and condition having been injured under Lord Minto's administration, they had been considerably strengthened.

So much for the calumny which has been so unceasingly heaped upon the First Lord of the Admiralty by the party press, supported, we grieve to say, by the anonymous attacks of Naval Officers under various forms; proceedings which are as discreditable as they are unworthy, knowing as they must do the true state of the Navy, as compared with foreign fleets, and with comparative periods; otherwise most presumptuous for them to put forth when ignorant of those matters.

The question has dwindled to two points; for the assertion that our force in commission is inferior or inadequate for the purposes required, can no longer be maintained in the face of facts and figures, substantiated by the official returns of the proper authorities. But it is argued, although 21 line-of-battle ships are kept in commission, they are for the most part abroad, and not instantly available for the defence of the realm; next, that these ships are on a peace establishment of men, and therefore not fit to encounter an enemy on equal terms.

To the first objection, Lord Minto very properly replied, that the country was not now, nor indeed ever had been, prepared for invasion, unless such an event was anticipated; and that the maintenance of some half dozen ships, on one or more points, would not be sufficient to prevent this, if it was intended; therefore to prepare to resist invasion would involve the expenses of war. His Lordship made it appear, that he had, disposable, a dozen ships of the line, not lying in harbour idle, but at sea exercising their crews; certainly these ships could be concentrated as soon as others would be commissioned and equipped. Besides, it has always been our plan to anticipate attack, and when this is apprehended, on the part of Russia, it is probable that a British fleet will appear in the Baltic. Rupture of a serious nature between two great nations cannot, however, occur without some previous misunderstanding; and when this arises, our Government must of course be aware of it, and it will then be time to prepare for the consequences. To collect a large armament, and station it in a position to overawe the fleet of Russia, would be a most expensive mode of exhibiting distrust, and most probably produce the very feeling which is now repudiated. There is nothing new in the practice of Russia exercising her summer fleet; she has always done so for more than a century past; sometimes even in the English Channel; and for the last 15 or 20 years the Baltic fleet has been annually equipped, during no part of which time the Naval force maintained by this country has been so great as at the present moment.

Next, as to maintaining the crews of ships in commission on a peace establishment, a practice of very ancient date. We have frequently given our opinion on this point. Not that we think the ships are inefficient—because it must be evidently easier to complete a crew to a war complement than to equip a new ship, and the more vessels maintained, even in a state of nucleus, the more forward are our preparations,—but there appears to be a disinclination on the part of seamen to enter ships weakly manned, and it is mortifying to officers to find themselves excelled at evolutions by ships of rival nations, more strongly manned.

It appears, however, that this is in the course of remedy; and whatever may be said, any one who will impartially consider what has been done of late years, in improving the form of our ships, their armament, increasing the actual force, and making that force more efficient by the alterations in the Ordinary,—to say nothing of the regeneration of our nursery for seamen, by going back to the old mode of rearing them as apprentices—any one, who considers these things, and whose mind is not absolutely blinded by prejudice, must admit that the First Lord of the Admiralty had good reason to congratulate himself on the motion of Lord Colchester, which afforded him the opportunity of justifying his conduct in the face of Parliament and of the country, and dissipating the notions which had been so falsely circulated respecting the fallen condition of the British Navy.

OUR attention has been directed to a paragraph in a contemporary paper of last week, wherein it is stated, that Captain Marryat had denounced the system of Sir W. Symonds's ship-building. Our contemporary has ingeniously applied the portion of a sentence in the gallant officer's forthcoming work, which refers to the form of our Merchant Ships, and the reasons why they are, or rather were, badly formed to the construction of the Navy. We have reason to believe that the opinion of Captain Marryat as to the ability of Sir W. Symonds, and the non-ability of the School of Naval Architecture, remains unchanged since the period when he criticised one of the productions of the latter, in an article which the U. S. Gazette described as "admirable," and at the same time agreed with Captain Marryat that the "6250*l.* they (the students) already received might be well saved to the country; and that if the major part of them were dismissed, the business of the dock yard would go on quite as well as it does at present." Now, whilst we have often denied the ultra merit which these gentlemen assume to themselves, we have never advocated their "dismissal," nor even that injustice, in any form, should be done them. But our contemporary, it appears, was not always the warm advocate in their favour that he has now become. We thank a correspondent for the copy of the United Service Gazette, 2d November, 1833 from which the above passage is extracted. It is unnecessary to allude to the other quotations he has marked.

NEW PENAL CODE FOR INDIA.

In our last week's notice of this work we gave a few brief extracts from the notes appended to the Code, exemplifying the views taken by the Commissioners of offences affecting the various religions and castes of the natives of India, and of the crime of bribery, as a means of corrupting public servants. We now proceed to offer some remarks upon their ideas relative to general punishments. Our limits compel us to quote a few paragraphs only, as illustrative of the general reasoning, but we may observe, that the whole of the notes, and particularly the clear logical deductions drawn from the previous premises, will amply repay the entire perusal of them.

The reader cannot have made much progress in the work before he is forcibly struck with the extreme difference, in several instances, between this code and the English law; first as to the fixed amounts of pecuniary fines, attached in our statutes to certain offences, and which in almost every instance in the Indian Code is indefinite; we are, therefore, bound to allow the Commissioners to explain their own impressions.

"Fine is one of the most common punishments in every part of the world, and it is a punishment, the advantages of which are so great and obvious, that we propose to authorise the Courts to inflict it in every case, except where forfeiture of all property is necessarily part of the punishment. Yet the punishment of fine is open to some objections. Death, imprisonment, transportation, banishment, solitude, compelled labour, are not indeed equally disagreeable to all men. But they are so disagreeable to all men, that the legislature in assigning these punishments to offences may safely neglect the differences produced by temper and situation. With fine the case is different. In imposing a fine it is always necessary to have as much regard to the pecuniary circumstances of the offender, as to the character and magnitude of the offence. The mulct, which is ruinous to a labourer, is easily borne by a tradesman, and is absolutely unfelt by a rich zemindar.

"It is impossible to fix any limit to the amount of a fine, which will not either be so high, as to be ruinous to the poor, or so low as to be no object of terror to the rich. There are many millions in India who would be utterly unable to pay a fine of fifty rupees; there are hundreds of thousands from whom such a fine might be levied, but whom it would reduce to extreme distress; there are thousands to whom it would give very little uneasiness, there are hundreds to whom it would be matter of perfect indifference, and who would not cross a room to avoid it. The number of poor in every country exceeds in a very great ratio the number of the rich. The number of poor criminals exceeds the number of rich criminals in a still greater ratio. And to the poor criminal it is a matter of absolute indifference whether the fine, to which he is liable, be limited or not, unless it be so limited as to render it quite inefficient as a mode of punishing the rich. To a man who has no capital, who has laid by nothing, whose monthly wages are just sufficient to provide himself and his family with their monthly rice, it matters not whether the fine for assault be left to be settled by the discretion of the courts, or whether a hundred rupees be fixed as the maximum. There are no degrees in impossibility—he is no more able to pay a hundred rupees than to pay a lac. A just and wise judge, even if entrusted with a boundless discretion, will not, under ordinary circumstances, sentence such an offender to a fine of a hundred rupees. And the limit of a hundred rupees would leave it quite in the power of an unjust or inconsiderate judge to inflict on such an offender all the evil which can be inflicted on him by means of fine.

"Closely connected with these questions respecting the punishment of fine, is another question of the highest importance, which indeed belongs rather to the law of civil rights, and to the law of procedure, than to the penal law, but respecting which we are desirous to place on record the opinion which we have formed after much reflection and discussion. In a very large proportion of criminal cases there is good ground for a civil as well as a criminal proceeding. The English law, most erroneously in our opinion, allows no civil claim for reparation in cases where injury has been caused by an offence amounting to felony. Thus a person is entitled to reparation for what he has lost by petty fraud, but to none if he has been cheated by means of a forged bill of exchange. He is entitled to reparation if his coat has been torn, but to none if his house has been maliciously burnt down. He is entitled to reparation for a slap on the face, but to none for having his nose maliciously slit, or his ears cut off. A woman is entitled to reparation for a breach of a promise of marriage, but to none for a rape. To us it appears, that if two sufferers, he who has suffered the greater harm, has ceteris paribus the stronger claim to compensations; and that of two offences, that which produces the greater harm, ought to be visited with the heavier punishment; hence it follows, that in general the strongest claims to compensation will be the claims of persons who have been injured by highly penal acts; and that to refuse reparation to all sufferers, who have been injured by highly penal acts, is to refuse reparation to that very class of sufferers who have the strongest claim to it. We are decidedly of opinion, that every person who is injured by an offence, ought to be legally entitled to a compensation for the injury. That the offence is a very serious one, far from being a reason for thinking he ought to have no compensation, is, prima facie, a reason for thinking that the compensation ought to be very large."

The Commissioners then refer to the works of the late justly celebrated Mr. Livingston, and contrast their somewhat different opinions with that gentleman, upon the amalgamation of certain punishments, and the appropriation of fines, and express their decided objection to the adoption of degrading punishments,—such as the pillory, flogging, &c. In elucidation of which they observe,—

"An offender, who, though he has been drawn into crime by temptation, has not yet wholly given himself up to wickedness, and discarded all regard for reputation, is an offender with whom it is generally desirable to deal gently. He may still be reclaimed. He may still become a valuable member of society. On the other hand, the criminal, for whom disgrace has no terrors, who dreads nothing but physical suffering, restraint, and privation, and who laughs at infamy, is the very criminal against whom the whole rigour of the law ought to be put forth. To employ a punishment, which is more bitter than the bitterness of death, to the man who has still some remains of virtuous and honourable feeling, and which is mere matter of jest to the utterly abandoned villain, appears to us most unreasonable."

The laws relating to self-defence, for such an empire, have evidently presented legions of difficulties, and indeed, after describing the state of Indian society, the Commissioners are compelled to acknowledge their sense of it,—they observe,—

"We think it right, however, to say, that there is no part of the code with which we feel less satisfied than this. We cannot accuse ourselves of any want of diligence or care; no portion of our work has cost us more anxious thought, or has been more frequently re written. Yet we are compelled to own, that we leave it still in a very imperfect state; and although we do not doubt that it may be far better executed than it has been by us, we are inclined to think that it must always be one of the least exact parts of every system of criminal law."

Notwithstanding this confession and self-discouragement, on the part of the Commissioners, we cannot, as admirers of British freedom, but applaud their sentiments and reasons on the subject of slavery; and which, in justice to themselves, and for the benefit of mankind, we shall insert at length: the language carries to the mind conviction; it embodies the philanthropy of Bentham and Macintosh, with the liberal and enlightened legislation of Fox and Romilly, and sets for ever at rest the policy of human degradation.

"We have not the smallest hesitation in recommending to his Lordship in Council, that the law throughout all British India should be conformable to what, in the opinion of the Court of Nizamut Adawlut at Allahabad, is now actually the law in the Presidency of Fort William; and to what, in the opinion of the Court of Foujdarry Adawlut at Fort St. George, is now actually the practice in the Madras Presidency. That is to say,—We recommend that no act, falling under the definition of an offence, should be exempted from punishment, because it is committed by a master against a slave.

"It may perhaps be thought that by framing the law in this manner, we do in fact virtually abolish slavery in British India; and undoubtedly, if the law as we have framed it, should be really carried into full effect, it will at once deprive slavery of those evils which are its essence, and will ensure the speedy and natural extinction of the whole system. The essence of slavery, the circumstance which makes slavery the worst of all social evils, is not in our opinion this, that the master has a legal right to enforce the performance of those services from the slave, but this, that the master has a legal right to enforce the performance of those services without having recourse to the tribunals. He is a judge in his own cause. He is armed with the powers of a magistrate, for the protection of his own private interest against the person who owes him service. Every other judge quits the bench as soon as his own cause is called on. The judicial authority of the master begins and ends with cases in which he has a direct stake. The moment that a master is really deprived of his authority, the moment that his right to service really becomes, like his right to money, which he has lent, a mere civil right, which he can enforce only by a civil action, the peculiarly odious and malignant evils of slavery disappear at once. The name of slavery may be retained, but the thing is no longer the same. It is evidently impossible that any master can really obtain efficient service from unwilling labourers, by means of prosecution before the civil tribunals. Nor is there any instance of any country, in which the relation of master and servant is maintained by means of such actions. In some states of society the labourer works because the master makes it worth his while; practically, we believe, it will be found that there is no third way. A labourer, who has neither the motive of the freeman nor that of the slave; who is actuated neither by the hope of wages nor by the dread of stripes, will not work at all. We understand how the planter of Mauritius formerly induced his negroes to work. He applied the lash if they loitered. We understand how our grooms and bearers are induced to work at Calcutta: they are gainers by working, and by obtaining a good character; they are losers by being turned away. But in what other way servants can be induced to work we do not understand. It follows, that if the master wishes the labourer to work at all, the master must have recourse to different motives to the motives of a freeman, to the hope of reward—to the sense of reciprocal benefit. Names are of no consequence. It matters nothing whether the labourer be or be not called a slave; all that is of real moment is, that he should work from the motives and feelings of the freeman. We greatly doubt, whether even a law abolishing slavery would of itself effect any great practical change; our belief is, that even if slavery were expressly abolished, it might and would, in some parts of India, still continue to exist in practice. We trust, therefore, that the Governor in Council will not consider the measures we recommend as sufficient to accomplish the benevolent ends of the British Legislature, and to relieve the Indian Government from its obligation, still to watch over the interests of the slave population."—(To be concluded in our next.)

On Thursday a motion was made in the Vice-Chancellor's Court to remove the injunction obtained by Mr. Colburn against Captain Marryat, as notified in our last. The Vice-Chancellor, after hearing counsel, continued the injunction, but gave a direction that the extent of the operation of the agreement between the parties might be tried by an action at law.

Copyright.—In the House of Commons on Wednesday Mr. Serjeant Talfourd moved the second reading of the Bill for the extension of the Copyright of authors in their works. His Bill last year gave well-founded cause of alarm to a number of eminent booksellers to whom copyrights had been assigned, and who saw in the reversion to authors after the expiration of the term, an obstacle to the continual improvement of books during the existence of that term, and a source of confusion and litigation afterwards; but in the new Bill, Mr. Talfourd has overcome the difficulty by contenting himself with applying the extension to the cases of authors who had retained an interest in their works, and to books hereafter to be written. In cases in which the copyright was from the beginning jointly in bookseller and author, the extension is granted to both; and with respect to future publications, the terms of the assignment can be easily arranged between the parties. On the withdrawal of the clauses subjecting publishers to certain inconvenience and probable loss, the opposition of the booksellers has ceased. The opposition of printers, type-founders, paper-makers, and others, grounded on the supposed injury their respective trades would sustain from an extension of the copyright, is not entitled to much favour.

The Queen has directed letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of a Baronet of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland unto the following gentlemen, and the heirs male of their bodies lawfully begotten—viz., Philip Crampton, of Merrion-square, in the city of Dublin, M.D., Surgeon-General to the Forces, and Surgeon in Ordinary to Her Majesty in Ireland; and Henry Marsh, of the city of Dublin, M.D., Physician in Ordinary to Her Majesty in Ireland.

On Thursday evening, in consequence of Mr. Roebuck refusing to retract some offensive remarks in a speech he made at Bath, a hostile meeting took place with Lord Powerscourt, M.P., at Coombe-wood, seven miles from town. His Lordship was accompanied by the Hon. H. Fitzroy, M.P., and Mr. Roebuck by Mr.

Trelawney. On Mr. Roebuck receiving his adversary's fire he discharged his pistol in the air, and, advancing to Lord Powerscourt, said, "Now, my Lord, I am ready to make any apology your Lordship may suggest, for certainly in my speech at Bath I did not mean to imply anything personally offensive." All parties being entirely satisfied by this frank procedure of Mr. Roebuck, returned to town.

Wellington Statue in the City.—On Saturday the general committee assembled at the Mansion-house for the purpose of completing the final arrangements with the sculptor, Sir Francis Chantry; the Lord Mayor in the chair. The report from the sub-committee stated that Government had presented gun-metal taken in the victories by his Grace of the value of 1,520*l.*, which, together with about 9,000*l.* already subscribed, constituted an amount of 10,520*l.* It also stated that the sub-committee had come to an agreement, subject to the approval of the committee, to hand over to Sir F. Chantry 3,000*l.* upon signing the agreement, 2,000*l.* with the metal when the small model is finished, and the remaining 4,000*l.* upon the completion of the work. The time for the completion is fixed for the 18th June, 1843 (Waterloo day). The report concluded with recommending that the 6,000*l.* be immediately invested in the Government funds, in the names of Sir P. Laurie, Messrs. Masterman, Barclay, and R. L. Jones, as trustees. It is to be an equestrian statue of bronze, and not less than ten feet high, from the top of the pedestal, on which the horse stands, to the top of the head of the rider. The report was unanimously adopted, and the agreement signed. The committee are to provide a site, and to erect a pedestal of granite or some other stone, three months before the completion of the statue.

On Saturday a few persons met at the Crown and Anchor, when Mr. N. A. Vigors took the chair, and stated that the object of the meeting was to present Mr. Hume, at a public dinner, with a service of plate, as a testimony of gratitude for his past services in Parliament. Mr. Vigors stated that he had applied to a number of his friends, English Members of Parliament, for their aid; but he was sorry to say there was a coolness among them he could not understand.

It seems that Hume, like his friend O'Connell, is to have a shilling subscription; but in one respect it is clear that Dan has the advantage of Joe, for, while the former's shillings came from pre-cursors, the latter's are to be wrung from hangers-back.

At Hatton Garden, on Monday, Captain John Tucker was brought before the Bench, on a charge of attempting to obtain money under false pretences, from John Booth, Esq., No. 6, Great Coram-street, Russell-square. The prosecutor stated that he received a letter, requesting him to subscribe to the relief of some parties whose names were withheld; and, on instituting an inquiry, he ascertained that the defendant had made a false representation. The letter concluded with a list of subscribers, amongst whom were, "Lieut.-Gen. Sir Hussey Vivian, 30*l.*; Lady Vivian, 20*l.*; and Mr. Vivian, 10*l.*" Sir H. Vivian stated that he had on no occasion been solicited for money by the prisoner. He knew him as a brother soldier, in the year 1793 or 1794, but lost sight of him from that time until last year, when he called at his office, and said he was desirous of obtaining an appointment, and he told him he was too old for any situation he had at disposal. The prisoner, in his defence, said that the distress did exist with his oldest and most valued friend, but rather than expose the name he would have his right arm severed from his body. He added, that the feelings of delicacy, or rather of humanity, of Mr. Booth, ought to have dictated any other course than the present extraordinary and harsh proceeding. The defendant, who is a very gentlemanly-looking man, was then locked up, and in the course of the day conveyed to the New Prison; but was released on Thursday, at the interposition of Mr. Booth, and under the promise of going abroad.—(See 27th Foot.)

Captain Elliot, formerly of the Life Guards, a brave and distinguished soldier, who has been in the Army thirty-five years, was recently, on most improbable evidence, given by a little girl and a jobbing painter, summarily convicted and sentenced by Mr. Gregorie, the Magistrate at Queen-square, under the Vagrant Act, to three months imprisonment and hard labour at the treadmill. The Captain yesterday appealed at Westminster Sessions, when the conviction was quashed, and he most honourably acquitted by a full bench of Magistrates, one of whom, a gallant officer, assured us, before going into Court, that the charge was wholly groundless. The Chairman closed his address to Capt. Elliott with these words, "I can now, Sir, only add, that you quit this Court with your character perfectly unblemished, unstained, and without tarnish, and I wish to God that this document had never come before it."

Coroner for Middlesex.—Monday being the tenth day, terminated the election for the Coronership. The gross poll was, for Mr. Wakley, 2,015; for Mr. Adey, 582. Mr. Sheriff Johnson declared Mr. Wakley duly elected, and he was immediately sworn into office.

The ceremony of laying the first stone of the new Houses of Parliament will take place on Monday.

A recruiting officer in the Leeds district has gone off to Gretna with the Mayor of Durham's daughter.

A female friend of the late Lieutenant-General Sir John Elley is left residuary legatee to his immense property, exclusive of 17,000*l.* he bequeathed to her by will.

Unfortunate Mistake.—On Monday an inquest was held at Charlton, on the body of John Dyneley, Esq., the brother of Major Dyneley, Royal Horse Artillery, who married the Hon. Mary Frederica Law, sister of Lord Ellenborough and the Recorder of London. It appeared that William Rivers, servant to the deceased, gave him some medicine from a wrong bottle. Verdict—"That the deceased did not come by his death by the violence of any person or persons; but in consequence of taking, by mistake, a liniment, instead of cough mixture, while labouring under a long-standing disease."

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

THURSDAY, Feb. 23.—Lord CHARLEVILLE instituted inquiry as to the supposed murderer of Lord Norbury, and as to the insinuations about the impression of a well-formed shoe or neat-heeled boot.—Lord NORMANBY said no information had ever reached the government to warrant any suspicion of the sort alluded to.—Lord LYNDHURST asked whether, when Lord Ebrington was appointed Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Lord Melbourne was aware of a speech uttered by that noble Lord (in the Commons) on the occasion of the Tithes (Ireland) Bill, stating that, although he disapproved of such a measure, he supported it, because it was calculated to afford still more formidable opposition to the Protestant Church of Ireland.—Lord MELBOURNE said that the appointment had been recommended, because the principles and abilities of Baron Fortescue well qualified him for the office.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, Feb. 25.—Affair at Vera Cruz.—Lord INGESTRIE thought that the communication of the Lieutenant with the British Consul might very properly be laid before the House. He should wish to know why, if that officer was now in England, the Admiralty did not immediately ascertain from him the whole of the circumstances of the case, and especially what became of the Mexican pilot.—Captain PECHELL wished to know whether the Board of Admiralty had received any communication from Lieutenant Croke? There was a certain opinion * abroad, in which he cordially concurred, that the officer commanding the packet should have bundled the Prince de Joinville, or whoever it was, overboard. The question was also asked, whether any written apology had been received from the French Admiral (Admiral Baudin) before the arrival of Commodore Douglas's squadron?—Mr. C. WOOD said that there was impropriety in agitating the question further, until more detailed information could be obtained; and he stated that Government had reason to believe that the next despatch from Commodore Douglas would give a much more detailed account of the transaction than had yet been received.

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 27.—Mr. D. W. Harvey took the oaths and his seat upon his re-election for the borough of Southwark.—A new writ was ordered for North Devon, in the room of Viscount Ebrington, who had been called to the House of Peers, and appointed Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. A new writ was also ordered for Wigan, in the room of Mr Potter, who has accepted the Chiltern Hundreds.—In answer to questions from Sir R. Peel, Lord J. RUSSELL stated, that if possible the bill for the future government of the Canadas would be introduced before Easter; but the second reading would not be taken until three weeks after Easter.—Mr. O'CONNELL hoped that steps would be taken to stop the effusion of blood in Canada; and Mr. LABOUCHERE stated, in reply, that the total number executed in Upper Canada was 16, and in Lower Canada 7.—Mr. Serjeant TALFOURD moved the second reading of the Copyright Bill; Mr. Daniel O'Connell and the Chancellor of the Exchequer ably supported the motion, which after some discussion was carried by a majority of 36: the numbers being, for the motion, 73; against it, 37.

THURSDAY, Feb. 28.—Mr. O'CONNELL moved for leave to bring in a Bill "to assimilate the franchises of electors in England, Wales, and Ireland, and to render the same more extensive." The motion was negatived, by 155 noes to 92 ayes.—Mr. O'CONNELL brought in a Bill to secure the liberty of the press, and to check vexatious actions for libel.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE moved that, during Lent, no greater restrictions should be placed upon theatrical entertainments within the city of Westminster, than are placed upon the like amusements at the same period in every other part of the metropolis. The motion motion was carried, by ayes, 92; noes, 72.

* See M. & M. C. of last week, page 122.

FRIDAY, March 1.—The select committee appointed to inquire into the circumstances under which Mr. Wynn had accepted the office of Steward of Denbigh Hall reported—"That the office of Steward of Denbigh Hall was an office, the appointment to which was in the Crown; that the Right Hon. W. W. Wynn had been appointed to that office by her Majesty; but that he had not accepted that office from the Crown since his election."—Mr. HARVEY moved for an address to her Majesty, for copies of any appointments made by the Earl of Durham, as Lord Commissioner of the British North American Colonies, previous to his departure from England, and during his stay in Canada; the name of each person appointed, the amount of salary, if any, and the nature of the duties to be performed."—Agreed to.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

SPAIN.—"Elisondo, Feb. 22*d.*—Those brave and patriotic Generals, Guergue, Sanz, and Carmona, are no more: they are numbered with the dead, not fallen on the glorious field of action, but from the hands of those brave volunteers they have so often led to victory; their crime, a want of confidence in Marotto, a desire to march forth and face the enemy. The unfortunate beings were shot at Estella on the 18th. The next day the work of slaughter continued, and amongst the victims were the chaplain of the general staff, Don Ramon Dallo, and Colonel Ojer, a distinguished officer, cousin to General Garcia."

The Baron de Meer has not ingloriously closed his command of the Queen's forces in Catalonia by the siege and capture of the fort of Agen, defended by a garrison of 700 men, and by 3,000 Carlists without. Agen is a mountain fortress, north of Balaguer, the point of junction of the road from it and from Trempe; and important as facilitating the communication of the Catalonian, Arragonese, and Navarrese Carlists.

TURKEY.—A gun of enormous calibre was tried on 5th Feb. at Tophana, and found to be capable of carrying a marble ball of more than half-a-ton weight. This formidable piece of artillery is to be mounted at the mouth of the Dardanelles, in order to protect them against the entry of hostile vessels.

PERSIA.—Letters from Constantinople dated 30th ult., confirm previous accounts of the departure of Mr. M'Neill from Persia on 3d Jan., and that he was to return to England via Georgia and Russia. Lieut.-Col. Sheil and the attachés of the Legation were proceeding to the Turkish town of Erzeroum. Lieut.-Col. B. R. Shee and the other British officers in the Persian service were ordered to remove to Bagdad, and to wait there for further instructions.

HOLLAND.—His Majesty has allowed the militia-men of the levies of 1832 and 1833, who are married and have one or more children, or wives in a state of pregnancy, and to widows with one or more children, to return to their homes till the 1st May next.

Theatres.

ADELPHI.—On Monday evening an adaptation by Mr. Coyne from the popular work by Boz, Oliver Twist, was produced. It aimed at being nothing more than a pleasant trifle, and it hit the mark at which it aimed. It will serve to fill half an hour very agreeably, producing no great laughter, indeed, but general satisfaction. The caste, as it is professionally called, is strong. The reception was enthusiastically favourable.

OLYMPIC.—Two new pieces were produced on Thursday evening. The first, a burletta, entitled Faint Heart never won Fair Lady, which was followed by Petticoat Government, also a burletta. Both pieces were well received, and the curtain dropped amidst unanimous applause.

Mr. Adams' Lectures on Astronomy.—Mr. Adams has chosen the Haymarket Theatre as the scene of his lectures this year, and he illustrates, with his usual ability and perspicuity, the noble science of which he treats; rendering it, by means of his splendid machinery, a subject as full of entertainment and popular interest as it is of indispensable utility as a branch of popular knowledge. All our youthful friends should attend these lectures, which cannot fail to afford them as much pleasure as profit.

Two New Panoramas.—Mr. Burford has just opened to the public two new and highly interesting views, the character of which will doubtless command for them an unusual share of popularity. That which occupies the large circle is a general view of Rome, as seen from the tower of the ancient Capitol; and nothing of the kind has yet been seen, either here or on the continent, which conveys to the spectator at once so magnificent and so true a picture of the "Eternal City." The characteristic merit of this beautiful and truly artistical work is, its harmonious result as a general view,—the sober and solemn unity of effect which is preserved throughout, by not sacrificing to those minor details which, while they appeal prettily to the mere uninstructed eye, outrage true taste at the same time that they violate nature and propriety. The prominent features of this view—the Coliseum, the Vatican, the Pantheon, the St. John Lateran, &c., &c., are quite sufficiently prominent to produce all their proper effect and yet not too much so to disturb the harmonious character of the whole.—The new view in the upper circle is very happily chosen in connexion with its companion. It is that of the Coliseum, as seen from within its own walls; the effect is most striking and imposing, and offers an admirable illustration of the chief individual feature of the companion picture.

Polytechnic Institution.—On Thursday evening last Mr. Macilwain commenced a series of twelve highly interesting lectures on the Physiology of Man. These lectures promise to bear some resemblance to those on a similar subject by Dr. Southwood Smith, which have recently excited so much attention at the London Institution. Those, however, of Mr. Macilwain, to judge by the introductory one of Thursday, if not so profound and recondite in their philosophical views, will be more popular in their character, and more useful and acceptable in proportion. The first lecture glanced at the philosophy of Life,—chiefly, however, with a view to pointing out in what it does not consist. Both the manner and the matter of this lecturer are clear and perspicuous, and the course is likely to prove highly satisfactory and valuable.

"THE MASTS THAT ONCE WERE CLAD WITH SAILS."

The masts that once were clad with sails—
The hulls instinct with life—
The lads who braved a thousand gales,
And twenty years of strife—
The trophied stern—the gilded prow—
What have they done? where are they now?

Struck are the masts, and stripp'd the hulls,
That once did all but speak!
His peaceful skiff the seaman sculls,
With age and service weak!
The prow and stern, all be unbedecked,
In the idle wave themselves reflect

What have they done? Unnumbered deeds,
In days but just gone by,
With trumpet-tongue, to him who reads,
And him who runs, reply—
And he the words in brass engraved—
'Twas they the British Empire saved!

From east to west, from pole to pole—
Wide o'er the waters blue,
With hearts of oak, and dauntless soul,
Unwearied still they flew.
By day, by night—blow high, blow low—
Through tropic heat, and polar snow—

Cut off from almost every tie
That soothes or sweetens life;
The tender look, the beaming eye
Of parent, child and wife;
From books—from flowers—from fragrant fields
And all the charms which nature yields.

Still—onwards still—through fire and flood—
Ye men of England, mark—
They rush'd, and freely pour'd their blood
To float thy grounding ark,
In peace and safety till it sat
Like Noah's on Mount Ararat.

U. S. Journal. ALEX. D. FORDYCE, Lieut., R.N.

Literary Notices.

A Winter Journey through Russia, the Caucasian Alps, and Georgia; thence across Mount Zagros, by the Pass of Xenophon and the Ten Thousand Greeks, into Koordistaun. By Captain R. Mignan, Author of "Travels in Chaldea." 2 vols. R. Bentley.

THE most valuable part of this very interesting work is unquestionably that which treats of Koordistaun, a country little known, though in it have been transacted some of the grandest events in history. It was through the territory of the Koords that Xenophon led his ten thousand Greeks after the defeat of Cyrus; while in scriptural history, it is the scene of those events which occurred in Kir, its ancient name. Captain Mignan's researches in this region are marked by singular industry and sagacity: whether he investigates the antiquities of the Koords, their peculiar manners, the wild and fearful scenery of their country, or their religion, he is alike intelligent and interesting. Another important feature in the Captain's work will be found in the discussion it contains relative to the dreaded invasion of our Eastern possessions by Russia. The arguments of the writer appear to us to be conclusive, and will prove an admirable specific against the Russo-phobia.

Memoirs of the Early Life and Service of a Field-Officer of the Retired List of the Indian Army. W. H. Allen & Co.

THE Field-Officer (the late Major David Price), whose journals form the subject of this volume, was distinguished as a soldier, and as an elegant Oriental scholar. He entered the Company's Army in 1780, a Cadet, in the Bombay Establishment, and after a continued service of twenty-four years in India, he returned to England in 1806, and settling at Brecon in South Wales, completed and published some years after a Chronological Retrospect, or Memoir of the principle events of Mahomedan History, from the death of the Arabian Legislator to the death of the Emperor Akbar. The Memoirs or Journals embrace the events of a most important period of our Indian Government, and are highly interesting. The Field-Officer died in 1835, aged 73 years; and his posthumous work has been edited by his friend Major Edward Moor, F.R.S., a veteran soldier, and from long personal acquaintance, we can add, a man of the highest worth.

H.B.'s New Sketches.—One is a scene from Oliver Twist, and represents "Oliver introduced to the respectable old gentleman" Fagin (O'Connell), who turns from his frying-pan to stare at Oliver, with no very gracious recognition. Oliver (Lord Morpeth) evidently feels the importance of the introduction, as he advances, cap in hand, with more humility than grace to the pattern of respectability before him. The Artful Dodger is the Ex-Viceroy, who, with a significant leer, acts as master of the ceremonies.—Lords Melbourne, J. Russell, and Howick, and Mr. Spring Rice, are regaling themselves in the back ground with their pipes, and have all the appearance of living quite comfortably in their places. The next sketch, "Playing off a practical joke upon an Old Friend." The practical jokers are Lords Melbourne, Duncannon, Normanby, and Morpeth. Lord Glenelg is fast asleep: Lord Melbourne is dexterously occupied in picking his pocket of the colonial seals, and the Marquis of Normanby stands tip-toe ready to receive them. Lord Duncannon is purloining the privy seals from the table, and Lord Morpeth, at the Marquis's elbow, appears to enjoin silence, lest the fun should be spoiled. The third sketch is the sequel to the preceding, and is entitled "The Somnambulist;" Lord O., in a state of somnambulism, with the eyes wide open, stalking out of the Colonial-office, having found his way to the wrong side of the door. The characters are admirably sketched, and the caricature inimitable.

CAPTAIN SLEIGH'S PLAN.

Continued from p. 118.—First, to increase, by judicious measures, favourable alike to shipowner and the State, the number of seamen in the trading marine; secondly, to encourage and secure their services therein during peace; thirdly, to render them available, by voluntary services in the Royal Navy, in time of war. In order to accomplish the first of these measures, it will be necessary to devise means of co-operating with and aiding the Nautical Apprenticeship Act. To obtain this end, it would be important to the State, as also beneficial to the shipowner, to introduce into the trading marine a class of young men who, from various circumstances, would most willingly avail themselves of any opportunity to become released from innumerable difficulties, distress, and poverty, by which they are oppressed on shore; and frequently rendered either a burden to their friends in the inferior scale of middle life, or a load to the parishes in the lower grades. From this description of young men, who are incessantly found thronging the densely populated towns of commercial note (particularly in the small sea-ports of Ireland, which would afford a large supply of experienced boatmen) in frightful numbers, and in a perfect state of starvation, from not being reared to any trade, (notwithstanding) are strong and athletic, and would not fail to form a body of efficient ordinary seamen in the trading marine, particularly if admitted at that age which is prohibited by the Apprenticeship Act, it would be a useful period of life to enter the above service, limiting it within the age of 27, obliging every ship to have a proportionable number to her tonnage; those men, after one voyage at the time of life they should be admitted, would not only become more useful in that time than a young boy after three, but also in a corresponding degree give more valued labour for his hire. The pay consequently may vary according to ability, and the period which the individual has served at sea. Thus would be readily formed, and kept up, a constant supply of mature ordinary seamen, previously secured to the country by those ties which the mariner never had time in early life, from the nature of his vocations, to form, or, if contracted, leisure to cherish. This portion of the proposed measures may probably be reprobated, and rejected under twofold objections. The first that arises will possibly assume that this would be an unjust burden on the shipowners, and that this class of men would never be made useful, or equal to the end desired. The second, that this body of young men would never become seamen, or be available for the Royal Navy when required. Ignorance, inexperience, or pecuniary tenacity, may indeed advance such opinions or offer such objections, but the experience such as dictates these proposals, humble as it is, can be supported by the testimony of keen observation, which can prove even that men going afloat at or after the meridian of life, frequently during a voyage, or in one year, make useful and good men on board; and although it must be admitted, as previously remarked, that the thorough seaman of England admits of no substitute, and that his perfection in the expert and bold performance of his duty arises from long-schooled habit and arduous experience, yet we find, that for the plain manual work of an ordinary seaman on deck, many are made most useful in a short time. We need only refer to the progress of that excellent and transcendent Naval Military corps of Royal Marines, who, when placed in a small vessel of war, during the first three years of sea service perform any duty on deck relative to plain seamanship, and at many other descriptions of seaman's work become perfectly au fait. Again, we perceive even the soldier-recruit, during a long voyage to his foreign destination, even from mere amusement becomes expert. If, under these circumstances, in ships of war, where double activity and perfection of duty is requisite, or in transports soldiers become useful and informed, what is to prevent men, who the peculiar interest of an increase of pay must encourage and stimulate, becoming equally useful and profitable in the trading marine? It again is repeated, that such a seaman as which the nation must rely on for assistance and support in war, must be a seaman from youth; but, on the other hand, it is equally evident, although possibly not so incontrovertible, that manhood often assimilates from necessity of circumstances where youth would fall short. Having answered, although possibly not refuted the beforementioned objections, it nevertheless appears evident that such an increase to the trading marine would be most unquestionably of great practicable importance to the shipowner, mariner, and nation; to the latter in a double consideration, as before stated. Hence an immediate and favourable equilibrium between the egress and ingress of trading mariners would be instituted and sustained by those measures, if placed in operation on the following scale:—

			No. of Ordinary Seamen.
Ships of	50 tons,	and under 250	1 at the least.
—	250	— 550	2 —
—	550	— 750	3 —
—	750 and upwards		4 —

None to be under 17 years of age or over 27.

Calculating from the number of trading vessels, which amount to 19,000, and the united tonnage of 2,150,000, belonging to and sailing out of Great Britain, the number of the above class of ordinary seamen would be most important to the nation at large. While considering this arrangement, it must not be omitted to take into account the operation of the numerous steam-vessels, which it must be admitted tends materially to check the increase of perfect seamen; and as the proprietors possess a decided advantage over the owners of sailing ships—in more than the one instance of economy—of getting landsmen or inefficient seamen to serve for low wages, they should, in justice to the trading marine, be compelled to have on their books one more ordinary seaman, according to the tonnage of their sailing vessels: from the fact of there being at present 750 steam-vessels, of the united tonnage of 82,867, belonging to subjects of Great Britain. As it is morally impossible that steam-vessels of themselves, independent of sails or seamanship, can become anything but as an auxiliary to the necessities of the nautical profession, it should therefore be incumbent, to prevent any innovation on the excellency of our thorough-bred seaman. With the additional number of ordinary seamen caused to be employed on board steam-vessels, we should possess an augmentation in the trading marine of 15,000 in a short space of time; and as war would naturally tend to increase not only the number of trading vessels, but also be the cause of augmenting the Royal Navy, in the same proportion, seamen will be in demand, and will, of consequence, be found to diminish in numbers. Hence the expediency of a natured nursery to our trading marine is obvious—the method to accomplish it distinct.

RAPER'S PATENT WATERPROOF.—patronised by the Queen, the Nobility, and several public establishments.—Messrs. RAPER and Co. beg respectfully to inform the public, that they are now carrying out Mr. Raper's newly-invented PROCESS of WATERPROOFING of all sorts of FABRICS used in CLOTHING, as well as leather, with increased and extensive machinery. Receiving-houses—8, Bridge-street, Blackfriars; 13, Marshall-street, Golden-square; and 46, Basinghall-street. Messrs. Raper and Co. beg unequivocally to state that they have no connexion whatever with any public company, and that theirs is the only Patent Waterproof.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Bouilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, No. 72, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sheborn and Sons, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c. &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading or any other Sauce.

J. DELCROIX AND CO., Perfumers to Her Majesty Queen Victoria, &c. &c.
No. 158, New Bond Street (opposite Stevens's Hotel).

The great superiority of J. Delcroix and Co.'s Perfumery has so incontrovertibly established by the distinguished patronage of her Majesty Queen Victoria, the Queen Dowager, the various Members of the Royal Family, and by the Nobility and Gentry generally, as to render it unnecessary for J. Delcroix and Co. to do more than enumerate their leading articles, viz.

BOUQUET DE LA REINE VICTORIA, a new perfume, prepared expressly for her Majesty.

HIS LATE MAJESTY GEORGE IV.'S PERFUME, BOUQUET DU ROI, prepared expressly for that Sovereign.

ESPRIT DE LAVANDE AUX MILLEFLEURS, so universally admired in every quarter of the habitable globe.

DELCROIX'S VEGETABLE EXTRACT, for cleansing Hair, &c.

POMMADE REGENERATRICE, for the growth and preservation of the Hair.

VEGETABLE CREME des SULTANES, for preserving, beautifying, and whitening the skin.

DELCROIX'S celebrated POUDRE UNIQUE, for dyeing the hair, &c.

PATE D'AMANDE A LA REINE, so justly esteemed for its healing and softening quality.

The TRUE OPIATE of the Circassian Ladies, for the preservation and embellishment of the Teeth.

To Ladies.—POUDRE SUBTILE, for removing superfluous Hairs.

DELCROIX'S ANTI-SCORBUTIC ELIXIR and ANTI-SCORBUTIC TOOTH POWDER, for preserving the Teeth and Gums from decay, and curing the Toothache.

To Gentlemen.—For the comfort of easy shaving, they can, with every satisfaction, recommend their Vegetable Polishing Soap Paste, and Pasta del Castagna.

ALMOND OIL SOAP, for Rough or Chapped Hands, and for softening and improving the Skin.

Also, Farina's Genuine Eau de Cologne—Eau Aromatique—Real Swiss Arquebusade, and all other articles of Perfumery of the very best description.

 J. Delcroix and Co. respectfully request that attention be particularly paid to the address upon their labels, No. 158, New Bond-street. No others can be warranted genuine.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:—

"Sheffield, Oct. 11th, 1837.

"Dear Sir,—Will you send me twelve dozen of Solvent; I find my sale rapidly increasing. The superiority of the Rotterdam Solvent over all other preparations for the entire removal of Corns and Bunions, is becoming generally known and appreciated. Sir, since I last wrote to you, I have heard of several remarkable instances of its efficacy. One I may give you, as I have the permission so to do. Mr. Whitham, a respectable manufacturer, residing in Bridge-street, Sheffield, has been a great sufferer from Corns for the last fifty years; hearing of the Rotterdam Solvent, he was induced to try it, and from the great benefit and relief experienced from its first application, he resolved to persevere in its use, and, in a comparatively short time, was completely cured, and continues so to this day. This gentleman will be happy to give any information to those who may personally apply. I am, dear Sir, yours truly, T. Lofthouse."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous. It is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Prepared and sold by J. A. Sharwood, 55, Bishopsgate Without, London, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each; and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; and by most Medicine Vendors.—Any Vendor not having it will procure it on its being ordered.

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

WITHIN a period of Two Months upwards of Three Hundred Patients were successfully treated at the Metropolitan Hospitals with FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

By Joseph Henry Green, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London—

"I have made a trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba.

"46, Lincoln's-inn Fields, April 15, 1835."

This invaluable Medicine is confidently recommended in all cases of Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Urethral Discharges, Spasmodic Strictures, Irritation of the Kidneys, Bladder, Urethra, and Prostate Gland; its purifying effects upon the general health render it particularly applicable in all cases of relaxed fibre and nervous debility.

Prepared only by George Franks, Surgeon, 90, Blackfriars Road, London; and may be had of all Wholesale and Retail Patent Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom, in Bottles at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each.

Mr. Franks may be consulted daily until Two o'clock.

Caution.—The Public are protected against Counterfeits by the name "George Franks, Blackfriars Road," being engraved on the Government Stamp attached to each Bottle.

BALSAM OF SPERMACETI.—Asthma, Shortness of Breath, Wheezing Coughs, soreness, tightness, and oppression of the Chest, and most affections of the Chest and Lungs, relieved in ten minutes, by taking one dose of WOODHOUSE'S BALSAM of SPERMACETI, or PECTORAL COUGH DROPS. Persons doubting the efficacy of this Medicine may take a dose in the Proprietor's Shop before they purchase. The Proprietor earnestly recommends a trial of these Drops to persons afflicted with the above complaints, but he does not introduce them as being an infallible cure (as many do), but is warranted in asserting their efficacy, from the extensive relief afforded in numerous cases of the above description. Constitutional Coughs of three, four, and more years' standing, have been cured in the course of a week by the use of these Drops. In the Hooping and Chin Coughs it will be found equally valuable. Two tea-spoonfuls of the Balsam are equal to one ounce of Spermaceti—it will at all times relieve the most violent Consumptive Cough.

In Bottles, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 10s. 6d. each.

This preparation is prepared only by Deeming Woodhouse, Operative Chemist extraordinary to his late Majesty, at his Laboratory, 13, Little James-street, Bedford-row; of whom it may be had Wholesale; also Retail of Nash, 18, King William-street, London-bridge; Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Hannay, 8, Oxford-street; and of all Medicine Venders.

FAMILIES, TRAVELLERS, MASTERS OF SHIPS, AND SPORTSMEN,
Should never be Without MOXON'S

EFFERVESCENT MAGNESIAN APERIENT, decidedly the most generally useful Medicine ever offered to the public.

The unrivalled efficacy of the Magnesian in all Disorders of the Stomach and Bowels has obtained for it the uniform recommendation and approval of the Faculty.

This unique preparation unites all the active powers of the most approved saline purgatives with the palateable qualities of a glass of soda water. In torpid state of the liver and bowels, bilious affections, cholera morbus, pains in the head, or disordered state of the stomach, nausea, and violent sickness, it will be found a safe, speedy, and effectual remedy. It gives instantaneous relief in the heartburn, is of great service in preventing piles, fistula, and gout, and in alleviating the febrile symptoms attendant on the latter affection. Derangement of the stomach and head, &c., arising from too free indulgence in the gratifications of the table, is speedily removed by a tea-spoonful taken early in the morning.

Prepared only by BENJAMIN MOXON, Chymist, Hull.

Wholesale Agents—Barclay and Sons, London; J. and R. Raimes, Edinburgh and Dublin. Sold wholesale at all the Medicine Warehouses in London, and retail by all Venders of Medicines throughout the kingdom, in bottles at 2s. 9d.; 4s. 6d.; and in family bottles at 11s., containing the quantity of five of the 2s. 9d. size, a saving of 20 per cent. to the purchaser.

N.B.—Be careful to observe that "Moxon and Smith, Chymists, Hull," is engraved on the stamp, without which it cannot be genuine.

May be had as above, that very popular and much-esteemed preparation of Sarsaparilla, the

CONCENTRATED COMPOUND DECOCTION,
Prepared by B. Moxon, Chymist, Hull.

"One table-spoonful added to a pint of pure water readily forms a pint of the Compound Decoction; and, in justice to the preparers, we must say, appears to be more impregnated with the virtues of the ingredients than the decoction made in the usual way."—See Gazette of Health and Practical Medicine for January, 1839.

In bottles at 4s. 6d., 12s., and 22s., the latter equivalent to 32 pints of the Compound Decoction of the London Pharmacopœia.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA,

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfumer superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Dietrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 2s. 6d., 7s., and 15s. each.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, OR PEARL DENTIFRICE.

A Vegetable White Powder, prepared from Oriental Herbs of the most Delicious Odour and Sweetness, and free from any mineral or pernicious ingredient, it eradicates the Tartar from the Teeth, removes decayed Spots, preserves the Enamel, and fixes the Teeth firmly in their sockets, rendering them beautifully white. Being an anti-Scorbutic, it eradicates the Scurvy from the Gums, strengthens, braces, and renders them of a healthy red, it removes unpleasant tastes from the mouth, which often remain after fevers, taking medicine, &c., and imparts a delightful fragrance to the breath.

Price 2s. 9d. per box, duty included.

ROWLAND'S ALSANA EXTRACT immediately relieves the most violent Toothache, Gum Boils, Swelled Face, &c.; it is also an excellent Stomachic, in cases of Flatulency, Spasmodic Affections, &c., and gives instantaneous relief. Price 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 10s. 6d. per bottle.

 Notice.—The Name and Address of the Proprietors,

A. ROWLAND & SON, 20, Hatton Garden, London, is engraved on the Government Stamp, which is pasted on each; also printed in red on the Wrapper in which the article is enclosed.

†‡† Be sure to ask for "ROWLAND'S."

Sold by them, and by respectable Perfumers and Medicine Venders.

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.—FAMILIES

in WANT of really good SERVANTS, of every description, will decidedly find their interest better consulted, and their object sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, 326, Oxford-street, corner of Regent-circus, (removed from 134, Oxford-street—established in 1830), than through the adoption of any other method whatever, as domestics are waiting to be hired from Ten to Five o'clock. Convenient rooms are appropriated to engagements, which prevents unnecessary trouble at home through promiscuous applications. Many persons are prejudiced against an establishment for hiring servants; but if the servants possess good characters, it must certainly be obviously absurd to suppose that they can be injured by the readiest method having been taken to procure situations. Fee for obtaining a servant, 2s. 6d.; as many as may be required in a family per annum, 14s.

THE MODEL OF THE BATTLE OF WATERLOO,

Is now EXHIBITED at the EGYPTIAN HALL, PICCADILLY, by brilliant artificial lights, constantly illuminated from Two o'clock in the afternoon, throughout the day in dark or unfavourable weather.

Open from Ten in the Morning until Nine in the Evening.

Admission, One Shilling.

G. WALKER, Military Tailor and Robe-maker, No. 33, St. James's-street, London, has the honour to make known to the Nobility, Deputy-Lieutenants, and Members of Parliament, that they can be supplied with the NEW UNIFORM and all the Appointments, also Court Dresses, Plain Clothes, Parliamentary Robes, and Liveries, on moderate terms. Court Equipments for a Civilian, M.P., or a Sheriff, 16 guineas; ditto, Deputy-Lieutenant, 30 guineas; ditto, King's Household Dress, or Diplomatic, 45 guineas; ditto, Full Dress, 110 guineas; Major-General's Uniform, including the embroidery, 20 guineas; Admiral's Uniform, 12 guineas; Captain of the Navy, 8 guineas; Lieutenant of the Navy, 7 guineas; Regulation Uniform for the Army, including gold lace, 9 guineas.

TEETH.

MR. R. CLARK, Surgeon Dentist, late Assistant to Mr. Cartwright, brother and successor to the late J. Clark, formerly of 3, Keppel street, Russell-square, and lately of 44, Backville-street, respectfully begs to announce that he continues to execute every branch of the profession on the most modern and scientific principles. In consequence of the long and severe illness of Mr. C.'s brother, he has had numerous complaints from parties wearing Artificial Teeth, owing to neglect, bad arrangement, &c; he therefore begs to inform those who have the slightest complaint, that he will, at any time, make the necessary alteration without any further charge.

23, Backville-street, Piccadilly; and E. Clark, 19, Old Steine, Brighton.

HODGSONS' EAST INDIA PALE ALE.—E. ABBOTT and Co., Wapping, are exclusively supplied by Messrs. Hodgsons and Abbott, of Bow Brewery, with this long-celebrated Beer, for home consumption; orders for which, in 18-gallon casks or bottles, immediately attended to. Export orders executed.

City Office, 98, Gracechurch-street.

SILVER TEA & COFFEE SERVICES.

T. COX SAVORY, 47, Cornhill, London (seven doors from Gracechurch-street), offers for selection an elegant and most extensive assortment of Silver Tea Services, varying in price from £18 to £36, the Service of Teapot, Sugar Basin, and Milk Ewer. The ground-floor, first, second, and third floors are fitted up expressly for the display of Plate and Plated Goods, and a pamphlet is given gratis, with Drawings, and a List of Prices. T. BY ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

THE NEW PATENT METALLIC FOLDING-HINGED BEDSTEADS, COUCHES, COTS, &c.

To Officers of the Army and Navy and of the Hon. E. I. C. Service, Writers, Cadets, Surgeons, Passengers proceeding to the East or West Indies, these Bedsteads are particularly suited; as, in addition to their other advantages, for warm climates, they possess the inestimable quality of requiring neither Mattress nor Bolster, and can be used during the voyage as Swinging Cots or Ships' Sofas. For the barrack-room they will be found superior to all other inventions of the kind.

To Emigrants to the Canadas, Van Diemen's Land, Sydney, and South Australia, they are invaluable.

They are strongly recommended to all who may have occasion for a number of Beds on a sudden emergency; as, from their folding peculiarly flat, they can be put aside when out of use in less than one [illegible] part of the room occupied by the common French Bedstead.

Prices:—4ft. 3in. 4ft. 6in. 5ft. and 6ft. 16s. 6d. and upwards.

An inspection of the above, at the Patentee's, is with confidence solicited, before they may be had, together with every article of Camp or Cabin Furniture.

Passage Steamers, Passage Smacks, and Cabins fitted up by Surveyors, Packers, Unappointed, Fitted, Undertaken, Paid, Stamped, Yacht, [illegible]

[illegible] silver vase, made by Dudley of Portsmouth, which it [illegible] presented to Dr. Mortimer, of Haslar Hospital, with the following inscription:

[illegible] by the Officers of the Coast Guard serving in the Ryde, Lymington, Yarmouth, and Swanage Districts, to [illegible], of the Royal Hospital, Haslar, as a trifling token [illegible] entertained by them of his [illegible] and skilful advice, [illegible]

[illegible] WELLS, and ASSISTANT SURGEONS, may be fitted out with the best description of goods on the most Reasonable Terms, at

THRESHER & GLENNY'S,

[illegible] Strand,

where Patterns, Necessary Outfits, Cabin Samples, and every particular, may be had on application. Also every information connected with Outfit, Packing, Shipping, Passage, &c.

N.B.—Parties residing in the Country, addressing a letter to THRESHER AND GLENNY, 152, Strand, will have immediate attention, and any information required.

DEPOT FOR NAVAL & MILITARY EQUIPMENTS.

SAMUEL LEVY, late of No. 2, Hemmings-row, having been obliged some time ago, from ill health, to abandon his business at the above place, he begs now to inform his Military and Naval friends and customers that he has recommenced it again at most spacious and extensive premises, No. 28, King William-street, Charing Cross, within a short distance East of his old station, where they will find the most extensive supply of every article formerly sold by him, and at even lower prices. He begs to assure his friends generally that the same punctuality and attention to their orders, which for so many years merited their approbation, shall mark his future dealings with them.

Portable Bedsteads, Canteens, and Camp Furniture of every description of the best manufacture 40 per cent. below the charges of any other house in the trade.

S. L. has no connexion whatever with the business now carrying on where he formerly resided.

Coldstream Guards, 1st Batt.—from Portman-st. to Wellington barracks.

Scots Fusilier Guards, 1st Batt.—Capt. Romilly is appointed Private Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

Scotch Fusilier Guards, 2d Batt.—From Wellington Barracks to Portman-st Barracks.—On Friday morning, the 1st inst., the proceedings of a district Court-Martial, held upon Corporal Smith, were read before the battalion, at the Wellington Barracks. The crime of the man was that he had acted in an unsoldierlike manner towards his Commanding Officer, Colonel Scott, by requesting him, in consequence of annoyances he had received, to be again reduced to the ranks. Upon his resignation being refused, he tore the stripes from his arm, and trampled them under his feet. He was sentenced to two months' imprisonment, and then to serve in the ranks. During the last three months three corporals have, upon their own petition, been sent to the ranks.

3d—Ensign Clarke has arrived in this country.

7th—See our leading remarks. Capt. Barton is about to exchange to half-pay with an officer, who goes into the corps to sell out.

Major Willis's company [illegible] batt., is under orders to embark on the [illegible] Devonport, to relieve Major Hanwell's company, 7th batt., which will join the garrison of Woolwich.

Royal Engineers—Lieut.-Col. Graydon, K[illegible] removed from Portsmouth Garrison to be Commanding [illegible] at Barbadoes and the Leeward Islands. Col. J. R. Arnold, K.H., will succeed Col. Graydon as Commanding Engineer at Portsmouth.

Disturbance among the Military.—About nine o'clock on Saturday night, the inhabitants of Northgate, in this city, were thrown into considerable consternation by a sudden outbreak among the military. For some time past angry feelings have been fomented between the Horse and Foot soldiers now stationed in our barracks, and various single-handed encounters have taken place. These angry feelings are supposed to have originated in the Cavalry calling the 45th "body-snatchers," which appellation they gained from a groundless story that was current in the city a short time ago; and the Cavalry, in return, have been honoured with the title of "cherry pickers," which has a military reminiscence for its foundation. On Friday night a rough rider of the 17th was much beaten by some of the 45th, but this affair was allowed to pass over. On the following night (Saturday), about tattooing time, a number of the 45th—we should say from thirty to forty—assembled in and about some yards in Northgate, awaiting the return of the Cavalry to barracks. The cause of this waylaying the Cavalry was stated to be, that a few of the latter had, in the early part of the evening, interrupted and ill used some of the 45th without any provocation. However this may be, the Dragoons, on making their appearance, were assailed and violently beaten with sticks, collected from bavins which had been purchased by the 45th. A general row ensued; the Cavalry made a regular stand up fight in defence, and succeeded in disarming several of their antagonists. The fight lasted about half an hour, during which the Infantry were sadly beaten, and much blood was shed, though not from any serious wounds. A few of the Dragoons likewise received some severe blows, and one or two have since lain in the hospital from the effects. A Corporal's wife, who took part in the riot in defence of her husband, was knocked down, and much hurt. The sticks were flying in all directions, and the inhabitants felt the greatest alarm, as well for personal safety as for their windows. Two policemen were present during the skirmish, but they did not attempt to interfere with such preponderating numbers. Several parties of the piquet were quickly ordered out, and they with some little difficulty succeeded in quelling the disturbance, by taking many of the offenders to the barracks. In some cases they had to resort to violence to accomplish their purpose. By way of punishment, the regiments were confined to barracks next day, and ordered to parade. The Cavalry have been confined since Saturday, but the Infantry were let out on Tuesday. A Court of Inquiry sat in both barracks on Monday and Tuesday, and, we understand, that Major Armstrong, of the Infantry, congratulated his men upon the satisfactory result, and exonerated them from all blame. We have not heard of the result of the inquiry in the Cavalry barracks. Whatever it may be, it is generally believed that one of the regiments will shortly be removed from Canterbury.—Kentish Observer.

The members of the Naval and Military Commission held a meeting on Tuesday, at twelve o'clock, at Lord Melbourne's office. There were present the Duke of Wellington, Earl of Minto, Viscount Melville, Viscount Howick, Lord Hill, Sir H. Vivian, Sir H. Hardinge, Sir A. Dickson, and Sir G. Cockburn. The meeting broke up at three o'clock.

The anniversary of the landing of Sir Ralph Abercromby in Egypt will be celebrated by the surviving officers on the 21st inst. at the United Service Club, as usual. The only invited guests are the Duke of Cambridge and the Turkish Ambassador.

The drafts from the depots at Chatham and Maidstone embarked for Bengal in the Thames, on the 6th inst.; and those for Madras in the General Kyd, on the 8th instant. The embarkation for Bombay in the Glenely will take place on the 13th instant.

General William Burnett.—The death of this gallant officer took place at his seat, Banchory Lodge, in Kincardineshire, on 26th Feb., in the 78th year of his age. General Burnett was many years in the 14th Foot, both in home and foreign service, and long commanded that corps, and was universally respected, both as a military man and in private life. He was one of the Aides-de-Camp of King George III.

General Lord Lynedoch gave his annual dinner on Tuesday, to commemorate the victory at Barrosa on 5th March, 1811, to the following officers, who fought on that memorable day:—Sir J. Hope, Col. Hare, Col. Calvert, Sir J. Macdonald, Sir R. Gardiner, Sir H. Townshend, Col. Lambert, Capt. Brereton Trelawney, Sir A. Murray, Cols. Jones, Wells, Campbell, Cato, Petre, &c.; also to Mr. Hume, Surgeon of the Staff.

PORTSMOUTH, March 8th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Wolf was ordered to proceed to Plymouth to be paid off, and has sailed thither accordingly. Zebra arrived from the eastward on Sunday, and is under orders to go to the Mediterranean; she is a few men short, and unless she gets volunteers, will have supernumeraries sent from the flag-ship. Waterwitch was commissioned on Monday by Lieut. H. J. Matson, late of the Pearl; a draft from the flag ship was immediately put on board, and she has already made considerable progress in her equipment. Curlew is lying alongside the Waterwitch; Lieut. Rose is appointed to her, and some men having also been discharged into her, the work of rigging and drawing stores has commenced; one of these vessels will go to South America, and the other to the coast of Africa. Snipe is next for commission; she is masted and in the basin, and ready for officers and men. Revenge is preparing for commission; most likely she will be reported ready next week. Childers and Cleo are in dock, and orders are down to hurry them out; their masts and yards are ready, and, doubtless, they will be in commission before the end of the month. It is determined to launch the Indus on Saturday week, the 16th inst.; the tides answer well for the purpose, and everything is prepared. Royal Frederick is to be launched on the 16th April, and then both ships are to undergo repair, and the ships fitted for ordinary. No time is yet fixed for Stromboli. Little is doing to Magicienne or Sapphire, the shipwrights being hard at work on the foregoing ships repairing and building. It is probable the present flag will come down the last day of the month, and the Britannia be paid off. Barham, Victor, Pelican, and Pylades, are daily expected. Ætna is in the Basin fitting, and will be able to go out next week. Ships in Port—Zebra at Spithead. Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Ætna, Curlew, Waterwitch, Messenger, in Harbour.

PLYMOUTH, March 8th.—(From our own Correspondent).—March 1st—Malabar, 74, was shifted from the North to the Stern Dock, to have her repairs completed. 2d—Arrived the Braganza, peninsular steam-packet, from the Eastward, took on board her coals, and proceeded for Falmouth, to take the Lisbon mail. The Rhadamanthus steam-frigate, Com. A. Wakefield, was taken into dock; on examining her bottom, it was found that she had carried away her false, and part of her main keel, and damaged her copper in several places, but these defects will be repaired in a few days. Arrived the Marquis of Camden Indiaman, outward bound, it is said she is leaky in upper works, and will be caulked before she proceeds on her voyage. 3d—Arrived Wolf, 18, Capt. E. Stanley, from Spithead, and came into harbour the next day to be paid off. Arrived Gorgon steam-frigate, from the North Coast of Spain; also Swale tender, to Astrea, from Falmouth. 4th—Inconstant, 36, Capt. D. Pring, came into harbour to refit, and to be caulked; she is to have the new armament of a 36 gun frigate. 5th—Arrived Royal Tar peninsular steam-packet from Falmouth, where she landed the Lisbon mail, and sailed the same day to the Eastward. 6th—Implacable, 74, Capt. E. Harvey, was towed into the Sound by Gorgon, where she waits for orders. Acorn, 16, Com. J. Adams, was paid wages in advance, and it is reported will sail for the Brazils in a few days. The Drake, lighter, sailed for Portsmouth with stores. 8th—Gorgon, steam-frigate, will sail for Pembroke this day, with Windsor Castle, 74, under her charge. In Harbour,—Royal Adelaide, San Josef, Inconstant, Wolf, Rhadamanthus, Tyrian. In the Sound,—Implacable, Acorn.

PORTSMOUTH, March 6th.—The appointment of Admiral the Hon. Elphinstone Fleeming, as Commander-in-Chief of this port, has been officially announced this day; as also the appointment of Capt. Alexander Ellice, M.P., to be Flag Captain, with Mr. Chimmo, Secretary.

SURVEY OF PORT ADELAIDE.—An immediate and most elaborate survey of this port is making by Col. Light, assisted by Captain Field.

The Indus is to be launched this day. The Royal Frederick is ordered to be ready for launching by April 1st, and her name is to be changed to Royal Sovereign (not Queen, as has been erroneously stated), and the latter to Royal Frederick.—The stern-frame of Warspite is up, as also her bow. The former will be very handsome, exactly like Pique's, the timbers all brought round.—The convicts are damming up the plot close to the Royal Frederick, preparatory to the ship (which is very unsound and defective) being repaired as soon as the ship is off.—Barham is daily looked for, but these winds keep her back.

It is intended, when Adm. Fleeming assumes the command at Portsmouth, that his flag-ship shall go to Spithead with 800 men, there to remain all the summer, and to cruise occasionally. This will be a most excellent plan; the men will then soon know their duties, and become seamen, which they cannot as long as the ships remain rotting in harbour. From the repairs Britannia requires, it is understood that the Neptune will be commissioned to take her place: this will be right, she has been launched now seven years.

We have been favoured with the sight of an elegant and massive silver vase, made by Dudley of Portsmouth, which has just been presented to Dr. Mortimer, of Haslar Hospital, with the following inscription:—

"Presented by the Officers of the Coast Guard serving in the Coast Ryde, Lymington, Yarmouth, and Swansea Districts, to Dr. Mortimer, of the Royal Hospital, Haslar, as a trifling token of the [illegible] entertained by them of his [illegible]apt and skilful advice, so disinterestedly given to their brother officer, Lieut. T. S. M. Watson, on the recent occasion of his receiving a dangerous wound at Hurst Castle.—March 1, 1839."

Messrs. Page and Hankey, Midshipmen, passed their examination in seamanship on board the Royal Adelaide on the 7th inst.

[FROM A CORRESPONDENT.]—The packets at Hobbs' Point are decidedly of too little power. If the Board of Admiralty would but allow Sir W. Symonds to build four vessels at Pembroke yard, of a size and power he may deem efficient, I am quite sure the regular transmission of the mail would be insured—the line of communication better patronized—and the station become a lucrative affair to the Government. I went to the dry-dock, while in the Dock-yard, and saw a beautiful steamer, on his plans, built there for the Liverpool station. She is quite a model; and, judging from her what he could produce, I do not hesitate to say it would be to the interest of the Admiralty, and truly advantageous to the nation, if he were to be ordered to provide new ones for Milford.

DEPTFORD, March 5.—Sailed Marquis of Hastings convict ship, for Woolwich and Portsmouth. Arrived, Isabella, to load for Cape of Good Hope, Simmonds Bay, &c. The Vanguard is fitting for Jamaica; the Bussorah and Egyptian for convict ships; and Alonzo transport, Lieut. Spencer, for service.

At the request of a correspondent, we publish the names and stations of the eleven ships of the line alluded to by Lord Ingestrie, in the debate of Wednesday, as being in commission in October 1792. We also give the total amount of line-of-battle ships belonging to the several Maritime Powers at the same period—being on the eve of the French revolutionary war.

Alfred, 74, John Bayly, with Lord Hood.
Bedford, 74, Sir A. S. Hammond, Bart., Spithead
Brunswick, 74, Sir R. Curtis, with Lord Hood.
Duke, 98, Vice Adm. Lord Hood, Capt. John Knight, cruising in Channel.
Edgar, 74 (G.S.), A. Bertie, Portsmouth.
Hannibal, 74, J. Colpoys, with Lord Hood
Hector, 74 (G.S.), G. Montague, Portsmouth.
Lion, 64, Sir E. Gower, Portsmouth, for China.
Orion, 74, J. T. Duckworth, with Lord Hood.
St. George, 98 (G.S.), Rear Adm. F. Cosby, Captain T. Hicks, Plymouth.
Vengeance, 74 (G.S.), T. Pasley, Blackstakes.
Those marked "G.S." were stationary guard ships; but whether fit to go to sea or not we cannot say.

At the same period the French had in commission twenty-seven sail of the line.

Captain Marryat's work on the American Navy contains little or nothing that is new. The gallant novelist asserts that the whole American Navy is manned by Englishmen, and that there are 30,000 British seamen in the merchant and Naval service of the United States. This may be true, though we believe the number to be exaggerated; but true or false, what is there alarming in the fact? The Americans entice our seamen by high wages because they cannot rear sailors of their own in any numbers, owing to the high value of labour in the new world.—Devonport Telegraph.

THE SEAMEN'S HOSPITAL SOCIETY.—The 18th anniversary of this institution was celebrated on Saturday last at the London Tavern, when about 160 friends of the society sat down to an excellent dinner, under the presidency of the Duke of Cambridge, who was supported by Viscount Melville, Lord Colville, Lord Radstock, Sir J. L. Lushington, Lord Bexley, Lord Ingestrie, Lord A. Fitzclarence, and Sir F. Omnianney. Among the company were also Sir R. Carnac, Adm. Young, Capts. Alsager, Bowles, Freemantle, Sotheby, Col. Galloway, Col. Forman, Capt. Petty, &c., &c. It appeared from the report that since its establishment in 1821, the society has been the means of administering medical and surgical assistance to 45,458 seamen of all nations, 4,000 of whom were during the last year. From a table extracted from the registry of merchant seamen at the Custom-house, showing the average ages of 5,000 seamen employed in the merchant service, it appears that there were under 15 years of age, 59 persons; 15 and under 20 years, 474; 20 and under 30 years, 2,376; 30 and under 40 years, 1,130; 40 and under 50 years, 672; 50 and under 60 years, 234; 60 and under 70 years, 49; 70 and upwards, 6. So that, out of 5,000 seamen, only 55 are in employment at the age of 60 years. The Chairman announced Her Majesty's donation of 100 guineas. On the toast of prosperity to the institution being drunk, Capt. Bowles made a forcible appeal to the company in aid of the funds, the result of which was that donations to the amount of nearly 1,200*l.* were announced.

At a divisional court-martial held this week at the Rl. Marine Barracks, Stonehouse, two Captains were obliged to sit as the substitutes of Lieutenants, there being so few of the latter rank at quarters. The three Captains and senior Subaltern comprising the court, counted a servitude of 136 years. We understand the fact is without a parallel, and shows the inconvenience the late reduction has led to. We hear also that there is a considerable deficiency of non-commissioned officers and drummers, so that the privates have to perform these duties without pay, in order that the service may be carried on.—Devonport Chronicle.

The Hon. East India Company have, with their usual munificence, lately presented a very valuable and handsome sword to Capt. Chads, for his services in the suppression of piracy in the Straits of Malacca.

[FROM A CORRESPONDENT.]—There is no longer any doubt of the Coast-Guard Service undergoing a complete modification, and the Secretary of the Admiralty, on moving the Navy Estimates, stated, a commission would have sat ere now, to revise this service, but for the indisposition of the Assistant Admiralty Secretary. The Coast-Blockade Service will, no doubt, be re-established; and the Russell, fitting for Sheerness, it is expected will lay in the Downs on this service.

Bribery.—"That San Juan d'Ulloa was gained partly by money I most potently believe. The present men are great imitators. Napoleon paid old Somariva, the father of the Marquis of that name, an enormous sum for the surrender of Mantua—but not more than the place was worth, and this capture of San Juan d'Ulloa was of a piece with it. It is an ungrateful task to 'pick the gold off the gingerbread,' or I could and would lay bare the secret means by which were won many of the trophies of the republic and the empire." For the correctness of this story I do not vouch, but it comes from a source so respectable that I myself do not question it.—Paris Letter

East India Intelligence.

The Jhansee Affair.—This affair appears one of greater magnitude than it was at first supposed to be. For the reduction of the fort, occupied, it is said, by 15,000 fighting men, it has been thought necessary to organize a force of five regiments of Native Infantry, one of Cavalry, a detachment of Artillery, and the entire Scindiah contingent. The whole will be commanded by Sir T. Auburey. There are two opposite parties at Jhansee, and as Mr. Fraser has declared in favour of neither, they are united in the determination to oppose us, under the impression that our object is to annex the disputed territory to our own. The troops to be engaged are as follows:—Cavalry—The 6th L.C., commanded by Lieut.-Col. Harriott; Cav. regt., Scindiah's contingent, Capt. Minto. Infantry—25th N.I., commanded by Lieut.-Col. Hewitt; 33d N.I., 60th N.I., Lieut.-Col. Tulloch; 63d N.I., Major Smith; 72d N.I., Lieut.-Col. Salmon; Scindiah's reformed contingent, Capt. Mitchell.

The following statement relative to the Southern Division Staff of the Bombay Army, may be relied on as accurate. The troops of the Madras Presidency are for the present to occupy the stations in the Southern Division, which, as a division, continues under the Bombay Presidency. Major.-Gen. Salter remains with his Dep.-Assist. Adjt.-Gen., and Dep.-Assist. Quartermaster-Gen., to conduct the duties of the division, while the whole Sholapoor Brigade Staff, and the Ordnance Paymaster, and the Divisional and Local Commissariat and Medical Staff, have been transferred to the Madras Army. The Staff appointments held by Madras officers are, 1 Brigadier, 1 Brigade-Major, and 1 Commissary at Sholapoor, 1 Paymaster. 1 Ordnance-Commissary, 2 Commissaries, 1 Superintending-Surgeon, and 1 Staff-Surgeon.—Bombay Times, 29th Dec.

By the retirements of Drs. Smyttan and Stuart from the Bombay Medical service (both of which will, we understand, take place from the 31st Dec.), Surgeons Furnell and Bell will be promoted to the rank of Superintending Surgeons, and Assist.-Surgs. Montgomery and Gibb to that of Surgeon. We are glad to learn that the professional friends of Dr. Smyttan have voted a handsome piece of plate to that officer on his retirement.—Ibid.

Ameers of Scinde.—The goodwill of the Ameers of Scinde to the passage of our troops through their territory, seems to be very dubious, and if they really do make a resistance, we need not expect to work out a passage without much trouble. The Beloochees are a hardy, persevering race; they will constitute a greater part of the Scindian Army, and their dogged and obstinate resistance, in a country abounding neither in water nor provision, may be the means of bringing the Bengal forces to our rescue instead of our reinforcing them.—Bombay Gazette, Nov. 7th.

An additional force of 4,000 men is ordered to proceed, as early as practicable, from Bengal to Scinde as a subsidiary. We also learn that a large increase is to be made to our Army, to the extent of one regiment of Cavalry, and five of Infantry.—Bombay Gazette, Dec. 5th.

Major.-Gen. Salter is about to visit the Presidency, on sick certificate.—Bombay Times, Dec. 29th.

By the latest accounts from Ferozepore, Major-Gen. Duncan had resumed command of the Sutlej Division, whose head-quarters are now fixed at Ferozepore. The station of Kurnaul is however to be increased beyond its present strength, and H.M.'s 44th Foot is accordingly on its way thither.

The recruiting at Kurnaul, and the drilling of the recruits under Capt. Mapleton, of the 60th N.I. proceeds with great activity.

Lieut. Hammersley, 41st, has been appointed A.D.C. to Maj.-Gen. Nott; Lieut. Gerrard, A.D.C. to Brig. Roberts, Brig. Arnold had not by the last account named his A.D.C.; but it was said that Capt. Mitchell, of the Buffs, would have the appointment.

The 5th L.C. has reached Delhi. Col. Kennedy, of this regiment, has been appointed Brig. at Nusseerabad. Brig. Burgh goes to the Presidency command. Major. Gen. Thackwell reached Ferozepore on the 9th inst., and took the command of the Cavalry Division of the Army of the Indus.—Bombay Times, 29th Dec.

Capt. M'Kean, 42d, has been pronounced by a Committee of Medical Officers unfit to continue with the Army of the Indus. He had made every effort, though sorely afflicted at Kurnaul, to proceed with the Army; but (as in the case of Major Boudieu) has been found quite incapable of going further.

A public notice has been issued at Calcutta by Capt. Birch, Superintendent of Police, that no further permits will be granted for the embarkation of Indian labourers, under contract to serve in any of H. M.'s Colonies, thus virtually putting a stop to the Coolie trade at Bengal.

Strenuous efforts are in progress in Ceylon, backed by all the influence of the Governor, to establish a regular steam communication between that island and Bombay. All the intermediate ports, Quilon, Cochin, Calicut, Cannanore, Mangalore, and Goa, are to participate in the benefits of the proposed establishment. A steamer of about 200 tons burthen is to be built in the dockyard of this Presidency, for the use of the Ceylon Government.

A writ of habeas corpus was moved for in the Supreme Court by the Advocate-General, directed to the Keeper of Her Majesty's Gaol, ordering him to bring up the body of Lieut. Stokes, late of 4th N.I., who, it will be remembered had been condemned by sentence of a Court-Martial to two years and six months' imprisonment, for the manslaughter of a Sepoy. The Advocate-Gen. grounded his application upon irregularities in the commitment; but chiefly on the absence of any power in the Court to award execution of a sentence not passed by themselves. The Chief Justice allowed the latter objection, and the consequence has been, the discharge of Lieut. Stokes from custody.—Madras Spectator, 10th [illegible] spoken to more

On Friday night rider of the 17th was much beaten by some of the 45th, affair was allowed to pass over. On the following Saturday), about tattooing time, a number of the 45th ould say from thirty to forty—assembled in and about rds in Northgate, awaiting the return of the Cavalry ieks. The cause of this waylaying the Cavalry was be, that a few of the latter had, in the early part of ning, interrupted and ill used some of the 45th without provocation. However this may be, the Dragoons, ng their appearance, were assailed and violently beaten oks, collected from bavins which had been purchased 45th. A general row ensued between the Cavalry and

TRISTRAM'S DEMONSTRATION AGAINST THE RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF THE BLOCKADE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—From demonstrating the system of the Blockade to be detrimental to the Navy in general, as it nurses seamen to shore life and pursuits, and weans them from their ships and the ocean, I will proceed to demonstrate that it is imperfect for the prevention of smuggling. The Coast Guard force is composed of three lines, revenue cruizers, boatmen, and riding officers; the Blockade of one line only, the beach, the tenders being but occasionally employed cruizing. The riding officers were those of the several divisions, Lieutenants, Surgeons, and Pursers, who merely attended to their departments. The Coast Guard is

STATE OF THE NAVY.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

A Flag-Officer of some standing, who is now, from gout, unable to write, begs, through his amanuensis, the favour of the inclosed letter being published in that highly valuable and truly respectable Paper, the Naval and Military Gazette. The subject is one all-important, and calling for immediate consideration, which it is hoped will plead the Flag-officer's excuse for this intrusion.

London, 1st March, 1839.

[Strictly independent of all party, we cannot refuse the publication of this letter, although the debates in both Houses of Parliament during the week should set at rest the question of the State of the Navy.—Ed.]

TO HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON, K.G., &c.

London, 1st March, 1839.

My Lord Duke,—Although laid on my beam ends, as sailors term it, with the gout, so as to be obliged to employ an amanuensis, yet my heart still beats strong, and my blood flows in true channels, for my country. Annoyed, beyond measure, at the present helpless and cruelly-neglected state of our country's Navy, I appeal to your Grace on behalf of England, as her greatest warrior, and only refuge in the day of trial.

The abortive motions of the two young Naval Peers have quite upset me, not that I expected complete success from either, but that one should conclude with a few insignificant remarks about the Naval College, and the other by calling for papers of no interest, is not what ought to have been expected. Lord Colchester's movement, at all events, produced some observations, on which I cannot fail to touch, as they twitch me most confoundedly. I allude, in the first place, my Lord Duke, to the cool admission of Lord Minto, that there is but one line-of battle ship on the home station (and she is ordered to an ulterior destination, directly she is fit for sea), not a frigate, not another liner, have we to protect our harbours, dock-yards, guard ships in ordinary, with foreign and coasting-trade which covers the ocean. Surely the lethargy preceding death has overspread our country. Lord Minto states a case of justification from the number of ships commissioned in 1792, 1821, 23, and 28, and compares those times with the number in 1837, 38, and 39, and it does appear (although the resource for seamen, from the coast blockade, has been shamefully destroyed) still that this country (it is truly gratifying to state it, and reflect on such energy) has now one or two ships more in commission than at those periods!!! But his Lordship failed to remember, or to name, and no other noble Peer did so, that even at the periods selected (at all of which the Navy was reduced far too much), then the crews were more efficient, more numerous; and we had always a squadron of ships of war, to guard our coasts and trade, in case of sudden surprise. As the First Lord is so fond of comparison, why did he not state what was the extent of our colonies and trade, at the period selected, 1792, compared with the present; and the number of ships, at that time, which Russia and France had in commission. Had the former Power ever before 29 sail of the largest line of-battle ships in the world, carrying from 84 to 130 guns each, and manned with from 900 to 1,000 men, and 14 large frigates, with sixty 32-pounders, and 550 men in each; which fully efficient force in men is only landed in barracks when the ships are laid up in winter, and ready for sea in one week, and all this within a few days' sail of our coasts, and this formidable force at the disposal of such a suspicious Power as Russia! My Lord Duke, the case of England is truly alarming, in a very few weeks these ships will be released from their frozen harbour; and how is England prepared? I did expect that a direct motion would have been made by Lord Hardwicke, or Lord Colchester, for at this instant commissioning of from 25 to 30 sail of the line of our largest ships. It is slaughtering the men to put them in our miserable seventy-fours against such a disparity of force. Then the case would have come to an issue at once—Whether this great country is yet to hold up her head, or for ever submit to degradation, insult, and slavery. Your Grace may think I feel warmly: so I do; but not more so, depend on it, than the extreme urgency of our case ought to excite in the bosom of one who has often triumphed under that flag he now feels is about to be lowered, never to be again hoisted as a conqueror, or as lords of the ocean. The proposition of Lord Melville to strengthen the Navy, by expending one additional 100,000*l.* per annum was truly farcical. It is little to be wondered the state of destitution the country has arrived at under such hands. The country, my Lord Duke, would cheerfully pay any sum to uphold our national honour and safety, both of which are now, I fear, irretrievably lost. The only means of keeping up the number of men appears to have been, by every act of ingenuity, destroyed. From Sir Francis Head's statement, we have much reason to fear that there has been treachery in high places. Sailors, whilst they keep out of the service, are allowed their pensions; but the moment they re-enter they are stopped. Thus we have the benefit of a bad for a good man; (was ever such egregious folly practised?) and that, too, when only a limited number of men are to be had altogether! We have now, I think, 75,000 Seamen and Marines as pensioners; call them all in, and let such as are able (perhaps 20,000 may yet be capable of service) be put into ships, being allowed to keep their pensions, subject to increase from further service, and you would thus obtain a nucleus at once on which to man your fleet. Of what avail would it be to save two or three millions, and lose hundreds of millions, and our country's honour and independence! A victorious fleet would soon take more in value from us than an extended Naval war for years would expend. I will fancy many persons may think an addition to our present Naval force of thirty sail of the line a great many; but let it be recollected we should want nearly that number to cope with the fleet of Russia alone. One battle lost, and, without a strong reserve, all would fall before the victor. It must be recollected we are the defendants, fighting to support ships, colonies, and commerce. The case is far different with Russia and other Powers; they have no colonies, and but trifling commerce; and if we defeated their fleet, it would avail very little, except to preserve our present benefits; it would be a barren victory compared to what they would reap against England, who has so much to lose, with colonies multiplied in all parts of the world, and an extent of trade never before heard or dreamt. We have everything to lose in a Naval battle: all sailors know that much depends on accidents;—the most gallant and distinguished of Commanders may lose a battle against every common chance in his favour—accidental shots, cutting away the masts, accidents by explosion, fire, &c., will decide a battle most unexpectedly. Hence, when we have all at stake, how prudent, how indispensably necessary it is to have ships ready in reserve; and yet now we have the proud, the safe protecting force of only one line-of battle ship, about to proceed directly to a destination already assigned her! Oh! fatal insensibility and indifference, what evil lurks beneath thy sway! Sir F. B. Head's late publication proves the infamous, the traitorous objects that man always had in view who is the great brawler for economy. I could add much more to prove the lamentable state in which this country is now placed; but I will refrain for the present, trusting that what I have said, with sincerity and from the bottom of my heart, may induce your Grace, who is considered to preside alike over both our national Naval and Military defences, to take steps to put the country in a proper state of defence to guard against impending dangers of the most appalling nature. The thing, to be done well, or with success, must be done on a large scale, and effectually. To commission ten or fifteen ships will do nothing to meet the exigencies of our present deplorable, debilitated state. One ship-of-the-line, not even a frigate in addition (unless one should accidentally arrive from abroad), be it remembered, is all that is now officially stated as the total means of defence for the whole kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. The ships abroad cannot be withdrawn. If the squadron were recalled from the Mediterranean, the Russian Fleet from the Black Sea would forthwith come through, and seize that of Turkey. No, not one ship must be drawn from abroad, but a fleet of thirty sail-of-the-line, at least, ought to be commissioned for home service. Economy, it is pleaded, has brought us, to this helpless state. Point out to me the man in England, except Joseph Hume, that would not call for a sufficient protecting force for our trade coasts, and every thing that is dear to us as Britons. Excuse, my Lord Duke, this home-spun yarn; but I feel deeply for my country's prospects of degradation. I have witnessed and contributed to her glory, and now I see her, in the enjoyment of all her blessings, thus laid powerless at the mercy of her envious and hateful rivals, and to witness the general inattention to her sunk and lost state, cuts me to the heart. I have the honour to be, &c. &c.

An Old Flag Officer.

MILITARY COSTUME.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—As this appears to be the age of improvement in our Military costume, strategy, and tactics, if we may judge from the many able writers who from time to time indulge your readers with their ideas, I may, without being able to do much good, perhaps be permitted to take a partial glance at the first named as it is, and afterwards endeavour to point out how, in my humble opinion, some improvements may be made. Changes do not always insure improvement; the reason, I suspect, is a want of sufficient consideration and trial being given before adoption; and as I am not wedded to any measure I propose, but simply take advantage of your kindness in throwing open your columns to the suggestions of those who may be desirous of availing themselves of so good an opportunity of gaining attention, I am desirous of courting remarks which I am not less assured will be good-naturedly bestowed upon what appears to me deserving consideration.

The knapsack, to begin, you are aware, has been the subject, from time to time, of much talk, many changes, and some improvement; it having at last reached to what it seems capable of being made—the latest improvement appears to be in the manner of slinging it, and a trifling reduction in its size; it is now sixteen inches and a half long (i. e. from shoulder to shoulder), twelve inches wide, and four and a half deep, capable, with a little trouble, of containing a shell jacket, two shirts, two pairs of white trousers, one pair of cloth, one pair of shoes, hold-all, two towels, and brushes. It is still too large and too formal; it is also too expensive for the quality. A more equitable and better way than at present, of providing them for the soldier, would be, I presume, to have them made up in some Government establishment, under proper superintendence, of such canvas as ships' sails are made of, to be afterwards painted, varnished, and numbered; we might then expect uniformity—an article that would wear in any climate twelve or fifteen years, and in all probability less expensive than those now supplied. As it is, they are furnished by tradesmen in London and Dublin, who, knowing little more about them than their outward appearance, and the profit which follows their sale, truly imagining the shorter time they last, the sooner a fresh order. Again, the love for neat appearance has done much to spoil the pack, by which I mean the introduction of the wooden frame, which not only adds to the weight and lessens the inside space, but is a source of annoyance to the soldier on a long day's march; if it were well put together of the material here proposed, and properly packed, it would always retain its shape.

The great coat being now intended to be carried after one fashion only (rolled and on the top of the knapsack), the great eyesore, and most inconvenient article to carry, is the mess-tin, slung as it is on the back of the pack; it is, under every situation, of march or manœuvre, very much in the way; and it is that article, of all others, I am most anxious to stow away, or have carried without inconvenience. It can be done thus:—The diameter of the great coat when folded is six inches; two tins made to fit on each end—say four inches and a half deep each and six inches in diameter, to fit to each other (when required for use as cooking utensils), would certainly do away with the inconvenience complained of, as they could be made to fit on both ends of the coat—the edges under the outer coat-strap.

The great coat, as at present supplied by the Ordnance, appears to me to call for material alteration; it is too long, too loose, and too comfortless. If it were made of what is called pilot-cloth (you may retain the present colour), to fit the body, and warmly lined, with a better fitting collar and sleeves—something like, but larger than, the surtout as worn by the officers, but with large double-breasts, adding to its warmth, it would be rendered a more generally useful garment. Instead of the stiff unmeaning things called epaulettes, now worn by the soldier, a strap with loose, longer, and more abundant fringe, similar to those worn by the French troops, to be occasionally worn on the great coat, would be an improvement. The great coat might then be worn in the severe winter weather on all occasions of parade, drill, marches, and on guard—at night, when necessary, the coattee under.

The shell jacket is not a dress for the soldier; he is now one part of the twenty-four hours wearing an article which covers and keeps his loins warm—the other portion bare, subjecting him to frequent colds. If a great coat such as I propose were given to the soldier every two years, with a coattee yearly as at present (doing away with the shell jacket altogether), I do conceive we should be materially benefitting the condition of the soldier at a trifling expense, and at the same time giving him one garment less to carry.

I will conclude my observations with the three linen shirts, which I should be delighted to see replaced by two of flannel, with sleeves, or Guernsey frocks. Soldiers, we know, more frequently take cold, and so lay up the seeds of future disease and death, by sudden checks of perspiration, while partially undressed after returning to their barrack-room or proceeding to their billet: a flannel shirt, whether within or without the tropics, would, in the end, go further to keep the troops in health than all the care bestowed upon them by the medical department.

SCHOOL OF NAVAL ARCHITECTURE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—On my return to England, about eighteen months' since, I became a subscriber to your Paper, and have been generally satisfied with its politics, arrangement, and correspondence; not so, however, with the tone of two letters which have appeared in the Numbers for the 12th and 19th of January, which roundly assert that the officers of the Dock-yards who come from the School of Naval Architecture are "deficient of the skill and energy" necessary to "conduct the practical duties of building our ships."—Now, Sir, if this be true, the natural and necessary inference to be drawn is, that education must unfit a man for the duties of a Dock-yard; for no other reason can be assigned why those gentlemen should not be at least as well qualified as the persons whose gross ignorance the Board of Revision declared rendered it necessary to introduce into the service a class of superiorly-educated officers. But not to depend entirely on the conclusions drawn from the absurdity of such an assertion as that of your correspondent Z., I visited the Dock-yard of this port to ascertain who are the persons deemed most qualified by the heads of the department to conduct ship-building, and the result of my inquiry was, that I found all (yes, Mr. Editor, all!) the ships on the stocks under the superintendence of two of the much aspersed members of the School, and these not persons new to their duties, but men of many years' experience, in this and other yards, in the same practical branch of their business. That those persons who have made it their study to annoy the Surveyor of the Navy by their petty squibs and pamphlets are to be justified, I am far from asserting, on the contrary, I think they should be held up to the contempt they merit; but I do contend that you are wrong in giving the countenance of your publication, and the wide spread of its circulation, to so gross a libel on diligent and deserving men—a libel which will be credited because you advance it, but which (if I judge rightly) you will lose no time in contradicting.

Some time since, in the course of a perambulation round the Dock-yard, I fell into conversation with an officer of the establishment, of very superior manner and address, and in order to ascertain the opinion entertained here on the Surveyor's system, I led our discourse to that subject, when I received a clear, intelligible, and convincing statement of why his ships are so superior to those of his predecessors in office? I then asked this question,—If you are right, and I do not hesitate to believe that you are so, why do all the members of the School of Naval Architecture maintain an opinion so contrary? His reply was—I can only speak decisively respecting the opinions of one of that body—I myself having been a pupil at the School—and I can say that I am, from conviction and not from party spirit, a maintainer of the superiority of Sir Wm. Symonds's system of construction. As I have no wish to sound a trumpet either for a body of men or for individuals, I shall mention no names, nor do I think I am authorised to do so; my intention is to disprove the assertion that, after the immense sums spent by the country in the establishment of that School, it has proved a total failure, and that after twenty-eight years of study and experience, none of the students could be found capable of doing that duty which previously to 1811 seven years' employment in a mould-loft, or at manual labour, were deemed sufficient to qualify a man to undertake.

C. H.

[It is not long since we published a table to show, that in the appropriation of patronage the members of the School of Naval Architecture have had a fair share. It would be most unjust, however, to advance them over the heads of others of equal merit and longer claims. They are eligible for the higher situations, but we never heard that it was intended they should appropriate them exclusively. We are glad to hear that they have the grace to avow conviction—that they have felt it long ago we are sure.—Ed.]

To Readers and Correspondents.

Subscribers wishing to bind the N. & M. Gazette may obtain, at the Office, 19, Catherine-street; of Mr. Burrill, Library, Chatham; and of Mr. Yates, Bookseller, Dublin, such back Numbers as are not out of print. Subscribers in Ireland can procure their copies from Mr. Yates, which will save postage.

We had intended, at great inconvenience, to have given a very full memoir of Sir John Devonshire, but the party who supplied us with the same having most ungraciously sent a copy to a Port Paper, and in which the memoir has appeared, we consider the double publication to be unnecessary.

In reply to "Perseus," the Duke of Buccleuch's yacht is commanded by a Lieutenant, R.N: the Pantaloon is not a schooner, but a brig, and carries 10 guns: she is 323 tons.

The "Weekly Dispatch," in its Number of last Sunday, has indulged in its wonted rancour against the officers of the Army generally, in the particular case of the Blues. Without entering into the matter of dispute, we must yet observe that the language and drift of the "Weekly Dispatch" writer are alike scandalous. But the writer is beneath notice,—"En un mot, c'est un homme d'esprit pour les sots qui l'admirent, c'est un fat pour les gens sensés qui l'évitent."

We are requested to contradict the reports which have appeared in some of the morning papers, that a man of the Artillery had been taken into custody on suspicion of being concerned in the death of Charlotte Rees, who was shot at Woolwich on Monday last. The person who thoughtlessly fired the shot, which caused the death of the young woman, is a civilian, of the name of Whooley, and who has been committed to Newgate for "Manslaughter." No soldier was concerned in this unfortunate affair.

The arguments of "A True Briton," on the New Armament for the Navy, shall have attention. We are glad again to hear from an old correspondent, and hope he will favour us with Naval news as formerly.—The letters of another esteemed old correspondent, "Silenus," shall appear next week. The tables showing the rapid promotion of some Lieut.-Colonels and Majors; the tardy promotion of Captains: and the tedious promotion of Subalterns (the working portion of the Army), had engaged our attention when our correspondent's letter arrived, and we therefore, in publishing his able exposé, shall offer a few remarks.—The letter of "James," in reply to "Arthur," arrived too late for this week: we do not object to publish his letter, but should feel personally obliged if he would expunge passages that are irrelevant to the controversy, and may tend to create an ill-feeling between two very distinguished officers.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, MARCH 9, 1839.

The Army Estimates for 1839-40 have been lately printed, and we much regret to observe, that a very small increase (only 791 men) over the number voted for 1838-39, has been estimated for. The total of all ranks for the last military year was 109,027, and the total for the coming year is 109,818. The difference in the numbers estimated for, does not, however, exhibit the actual increase of the Army; for in the past year credit was taken for nearly 10,000 men, who only existed on paper then, but who have very lately been raised. We have about 10,000 more effectives at present than at this period last year; and we understand that the numbers of them are nearly complete. The recruiting has been ably and successfully conducted under the orders of the Deputy Adjutant-General; and, without any increase of bounty, men have been raised with wonderful celerity. We have in this fact convincing proof that bounty has but trivial influence in persuading men to enlist, unless that bounty be 20*l.* or 25*l.*, as in the war-days. We contend, however, that a soldier should receive sufficient to supply his necessaries, and that he should not find himself in debt on his first joining his regiment or depot. The state of debt into which every soldier is thrown by the supply of his necessaries (the final portion of the bounty not being adequate to furnish them, and the first of it being spent in drinking and debauchery at the place of enlistment) causes the young and easily-tempted recruit to sell these necessaries to some of the dealers in stolen goods who abound in every town. We venture to affirm that, if the recruits received sufficient for the supply of their kits, and consequently were placed on a footing with the old soldiers as to their daily balance of pay, we should have few desertions, and few instances of men selling their necessaries—these two offences being now those which chiefly prevail in the British Army. We rejoice to learn that drunkenness is rapidly on the decrease; and ere long this vice, it may be hoped, will be rare among soldiers of all classes, and at all stations, as it now is among our English soldiers, and at stations in England. The numbers of our Army are consequently much augmented in efficient soldiers, for soldierly sobriety is military efficiency.

Last week we recorded the Names and Services of the Officers of the Royal Navy and Royal Marines who have within the last twelve months received the Pensions for Good and Meritorious Service; and we now present those of the Army. As in the case of the Navy, the Officers of the Army previously on the Good Pension List appeared in our volume for 1838.

Deprecating everything personal in our remarks, we cannot pass over the late extraordinary promotion of Lieutenant-Colonel Hankey, from the Majority of the 8th Hussars, to an Unattached Lieutenant-Colonelcy, without purchase. This promotion has caused universal astonishment among soldiers of all ranks, and deep indignation among the hundreds of Majors who have long served, been severely wounded, and been refused even, after thirty years of distinguished service, that very step in rank by purchase which Major Hankey has obtained without purchase, after sixteen years of peace campaigning. Major Hankey entered the service in 1823, purchased a Lieutenancy in 1825, a company in 1826, and a Majority in 1833. What possible cause can be assigned for having conferred on this very fortunate Major a Lieutenant-Colonelcy, Unattached, without purchase? Promotion Commissions are perfectly useless! The Duke of Wellington must feel that his exertions are vain, when the hand of power can thus elevate a young Major over the heads of his old companions in arms, for whom he is now labouring as President of the Promotion Commission. This promotion is said to have been forced on Lord Hill. So little claim on the service had Major Hankey, in the general opinion of the Army at least, that officers would not have been more astounded had they read in the Gazette, "Poulett Thomson, M.P., Gent., to be Lieut.-Col., Unatt." We beg Lieut.-Col. Hankey to excuse our free mention of his name, which is unavoidable.

Hitherto, these military favours have been conferred with some show of Justice; but if extraordinary merit exists in the present instance, it is certainly not known merit. This promotion of an officer, of only sixteen years' peace service, to the highest regimental rank, and without purchase, has roused the most apathetic from their stupor. The old and distinguished officers of the Peninsula and Waterloo may now bid adieu to hope. "Hope long deferred maketh the heart sick." From this sickness of heart they need no longer suffer. In the words of Napoleon, "They have ceased to exist," or, more classically, "vixerunt!" The final act of the whimsical farce, "Promotion," has been concluded, and the curtain has dropped, leaving the spectators in astonishment. Can the actors say, "Plaudite?" They may yet have an answer to that—in Parliament, where we trust their acting may meet all the applause it merits. We would wager a round sum that some of the economic clique have been the chief performers.

DURING the week the attention of Parliament has been almost wholly occupied with the discussion of Naval affairs. In the Lords on Monday, the Earl of Minto complained, on the part of Admiral Sir Philip Durham and other officers, of the statement made by the Earl of Hardwicke, that they had furnished false returns; and produced official documents to prove, that at the very time the gallant Earl asserted, upon the authority of his own personal inspection, that not a single top-sail was in store in Plymouth Dock-yard, no less than 66 of these sails were ready. On Thursday evening Lord Hardwicke admitted his error, but not, in our opinion, in a manner to satisfy the parties. On the same evening the Duke of Wellington delivered his opinion, that, under present circumstances, a considerable increase of both Navy and Army was called for.

In the Commons, on Monday, after some preliminary conversation respecting pensions, the Secretary to the Admiralty brought forward the Navy Estimates, and, in a speech of great power and perspicuity, entered upon an explanation of every matter pertaining to our present Naval establishment, contrasting it with former periods, and proving incontestibly, that, whether in respect to actual force, efficiency, or in available resources, the Navy was never in so good a state in time of peace as at the present moment.

Mr. Wood's statement was frequently cheered by both sides of the House, which plainly shows, coupled with the Duke of Wellington's conduct in the Lords, that the more respectable and influential of the Conservative party do not countenance the proceedings of those who have been so industriously employed, for the last six months, in depreciating our Naval resources, whilst many are of opinion that, owing to the state of Canada and affairs in the East, an increase of force should take place.

The discussion of the subject was continued on the subsequent evenings, and all parties have admitted the very able manner in which Mr. Wood made his statement, and the gratification it is calculated to afford to the country. The principal differgence of opinion appears to exist on the two points to which we adverted last week, namely, the peace complements of the ships and the stations whereon they are kept, so as to be most available should occasion demand their services.

As the Mediterranean fleet does not consist of more than eight or nine sail of the line, and three others on foreign stations, as flag-ships, may be considered as out of reach, the question which arises is (supposing no increase to take place) whether the remainder are best kept at home, or at Lisbon, or on experimental cruises, within reach and available, as they have lately served for the conveyance of troops to Canada, or lying in harbour as guard ships for the defence of the coasts. This, it appears to us, is a question to be determined by the nature of our relations with foreign powers, and of which the Government must be the best judges. We recollect, that in 1809, when, on the change of Ministry, it was declared impossible to maintain the peace of Europe twelve months, we had not such resources as at present available, although the effective force was considerably increased by Sir James Graham. In the summer of that year, just after St. Vincent had sailed with Sir Henry Hotham's flag for the Mediterranean, the Ganges having preceded the Victory (a ship not fit for sea) was the only ship of the line in Portsmouth harbour; and at that time, and for several years prior, when it will be admitted a rupture with Russia was quite as probable as at present, the Baltic fleet was cruising about in very nearly its present force.

We must refer our readers to our Parliamentary report of the proceedings, which, owing to their great interest, we have given at more than ordinary length.

THE letter of a gallant Officer of Cavalry, in reference to our observations of last week on the Purchasing of Discharges by Young Soldiers, being marked private, we can only avail ourselves of an extract. His opinions are those of a practical soldier, and will, therefore, assist our recommendation of the matter to the attention of the Authorities:—

"Among the very many excellent remarks I am constantly in the habit of reading in your Paper, I do not recollect one that I have seen that has afforded me greater interest, or one more deserving, as in your words, the 'close consideration of the Horse Guards,' than that in your Gazette of the 2d inst., relating to the Purchase of Discharge by Young Soldiers.

"I have frequently wished to have written to you on this very subject; and my proposal would have been generally as yours, excepting that I should have recommended a fixed period of service, extending to five years. As you truly remark, many valuable soldiers have been lost to the service by allowing them to purchase at any period after enlistment. The drills of the Cavalry soldier require months of instruction, and the constant attention of the recruit this is the period, no doubt, most trying to him; once get over this, and he is reconciled to, and generally likes, the profession he has chosen. I have been an every-day observer of the ill effects of the present system. The pride that the non-commissioned officer feels in his squad turning out well, receives a severe check in witnessing his most promising lads taken away on the eve of their joining the ranks, this also tends to dishearten those left, who may not have the same means of purchasing, and I am perfectly sure causes many desertions. I know many cases of parents purchasing their sons' discharge before they have been long enough in the service to be habituated to it, and the same again re enlisting, and again purchased out. In one instance a father said to me, with tears in his eyes, 'My little saving of years' hard work has been swallowed up by the thoughtless behaviour of an only son,—yes, Sir, this is the second time I have bought him off.' A widowed mother addressed herself to me, saying, 'Sir, I place in your hands 30*l.* for the discharge of my son—do, pray, Sir, ease it to me this is the second time I have bought him off; it is nearly all I have in the world.'

"I shall say no more, though many reasons I know exist for the alteration of the system of purchase. It is in good hands; they should be made to repent of their folly by serving a certain period; it would much benefit the service, and save many a parent hours of grief, and their hard earned savings of years would remain undisturbed by the follies of an ungrateful son."

WE have heard from good authority that the Militia, under a system very different from the former, will be soon embodied. Lord John Russell has laboured indefatigably to bring the details into as perfect a state as possible, before submitting the measure to Parliament. Rumour states that, after Easter, the bill will be laid before the House. We hope that one of its effects may be the introduction of Volunteers from the Militia to the Line. From 1805 to 1815, the Line received from the Militia 119,409 ready-drilled soldiers!!

WE understand that Lord Hill has it in contemplation to introduce into the Army a system of gymnastics and manly games, which will tend to the instruction and amusement of the soldiers in garrison, and fit them by increased activity and strength for the arduous duties of the field. Some trials of this system have lately taken place among the Guards, and we believe with great success. Gymnastics and manly games having been constantly advocated in this Paper, we are not a little gratified at the determination of the General Commanding-in Chief, and we earnestly ask that gallant and noble Lord to order that the system of the Baron de Berenger shall have a fair trial.

[illegible] varied and available talents, and the happy [illegible] to which they are allied. "The Idler in Italy" is neither more nor less than a Journal—we verily believe little, if at all, altered or embellished from the original tracings of the fair journalist's hand—kept during a tour through France to Italy, and a residence of some months in the most attractive localities of the latter country, namely, Rome and Naples. The materials of which it is made up—so far at least as regards their "complement external"—may readily be guessed at; but the manner of attiring those materials, and the points of view in which they are set forth, can only be appreciated by a perusal of the book itself, to which, therefore, we heartily commend our readers.

[illegible] have been informed that the Barrack Department at Maidstone is to undergo an investigation similar to that lately entered into at Chatham, that the ordered distribution of Quarters (much encroached upon to the inconvenience of juniors) will be enforced, and that the present extra allowances of fuel, &c. &c. &c., issued there, on the plea of being issues to the Staff, &c. &c. &c., will be assimilated to the issues to corresponding ranks and situations at Chatham.

[illegible] and other remains of the ancient Incas [illegible] and they are described attracted Dr. Smith's curiosity; by him with very graphic effect. But, perhaps, the most popular parts of his volumes are those relating to the mines, wherein are shown the mode of working them, their products, the expense for labour, the number of productive mines, and their different qualities. The whole book, indeed, is of as much utility as amusement, and it is rich in both.

The Aldine Magazine of Biography, Bibliography, Criticism, and the Arts. March, 1839.

ORIGINATING in a weekly sheet, this Magazine, on an enlarged and improved plan, now takes its stand with the regular monthly periodicals. The first Paper in the present Number is of a startling character, affirmatory of the existence of Louis XVII., the orphan of Louis XVI. and Marie Antoinette, and peremptorily appealing to the French Noblesse now in London, to investigate his claims. "Letters to my Son at Rome" illustrate the history and character of the leading booksellers of the past generation, [illegible] facsimilia autographs of about sixteen [illegible] of the work.

THE unfortunate retirement of the Honourable Captain Berkeley from the Admiralty is infinitely to be regretted, he being one ever happy to receive from experienced officers of the respective departments over which, as a member of the Board, he more immediately presided, any feasible suggestions tending to the general benefit of the service. In the Marine branch he caused to be carried into effect the following propositions (emanating with an old officer of the corps, who had the honour, as well as the very great pleasure, of serving under his command). First, the obtaining an order for the Pursers of all ships fitting for foreign stations to be furnished with a stated number of forage caps and pairs of cloth trousers; and, secondly, for the contractor to supply with the future annual clothing (in lieu of the old issue of an unfinished waistcoat, and pair of black gaiters), a neat and completely-made white cloth jacket, to be worn in warm climates; both being desiderata which every Commanding Marine Officer embarked will know full well how highly to appreciate.

There were other contemplated improvements, which, had it not been for his premature resignation, would have received his able support and recommendation.

Among the many projects for nurturing seamen, we do not see any which dwells with sufficient force (if indeed any allusion at all be made to it) on the most important nursery which Great Britain possesses, in an eminent degree, above all other countries—"our fisheries." It would seem as though, because adventurous men are found upon our coasts to embark in this line of life to procure a subsistence, the individuals should be left to their own resources, under all circumstances, and in all weathers, even to the contention with foreigners for the maintenance of their just rights, and their individual protection from aggression. Every succeeding winter furnishes us with the most melancholy details of the destruction of boats and the loss of life among this valuable class of men—torn to survivors, and abject poverty to the families of the

It is true, they cannot afford to lose seamen of any kind, and hence, perhaps, their guardianship, independent of the principles of humanity, which no Government ought ever to lose sight of; but neither can we afford to lose men whose pursuits are maritime; and if there be a class of men meriting the protection of the Legislature more than another, that class is the fishermen of our coasts—a hardy, bold, and daring body of seafarers, who bring up their sons, from infancy, to the same life of enterprise settled boundaries of each nation We do this in regard to the oyster dredgers of the Channel Islands, and as the host of home fishermen is so transcendently numerous, little doubt can exist as to the expediency of a similar arrangement nearer head-quarters The average numbers annually lost in winter gales can be easily ascertained; and very sure are we that the detail would amply justify Government for any expense attendant on the proposed measure which might be incurred. A redundant fishing population would be a prolific source from whence to draw supplies for the Navy; and since we are at no cost for feeding or initiating them, we may well dedicate a few small craft to watch over and shield them from disaster. A good boatman is more than half a sailor, and is certainly a first-rate ordinary, and may prove highly valuable at times as a pilot in his own district. This last is a consideration of magnitude, in conjunction with steam navigation in narrow waters; for it is not possible that the Master can be conversant with every harbour, bay, or inlet; and occasions may arise when it might be requisite to go in, and no pilot to be procured And be it remembered furthermore, that boys forced into the workhouse through the untimely death of their adventurous fathers will be alienated from a seafaring life, their fathers' fate will be a warning, and their own fate (of parish incarceration) cannot but render the impression indelible. Hence, from want of protecting aid, we not only lose many valuable members of the community, and considerable amount of property every succeeding winter, but likewise deter vast numbers of young lads, the sons of the sufferers, from embarking in a pursuit so nationally important Motley

If is with infinite pleasure that we lay before our readers the copy of a letter from the principal inhabitants of Travancore, to their no less highly than justly-esteemed Resident, Colonel J. S. Fraser, together with his reply Colonel Fraser's eminent talents are too well known to need newspaper comment, but we should be neglecting a duty were we to omit mentioning that the high qualifications of this able public servant, which at last met a fitting field at the Court of Hyderabad, have been already successfully exerted, and productive of good there, and that his arrangements hold forth a promise of general improvement, which we trust may be permanent in that long misgoverned country.

To Col J F Fraser, British Resident of Travancore & Cochin.

Dear Sir,—Your departure from Travancore was too sudden to admit of our obeying before you left us, that which was the immediate impulse of our hearts, to express to you unitedly our sentiments on the loss we were about to sustain; but although on account of our distant residence from each other, we were unable to unite in this joint expression of our feelings immediately on the occasion, we cannot deny ourselves the gratification of conveying to you in this manner, the assurance of the profound aspect and heartfelt affection with which your high talents and your amiable qualities have inspired us Our regret at your removal from us would be deep indeed, did we not foresee that the intellectual and moral qualities which we have been accustomed to admire, are about to find a still more ample field for their exercise, and one which we anticipate will be fruitful in honour to yourself and advantage to the public service It is not for us to dwell upon the great benefits conferred on this country by the various measures you have recommended, and the improvements you have fostered but we will venture to say, that the name of Fraser will long be remembered in it with gratitude by all, from the prince to the peasant

For ourselves we will only further add, that in foregoing the privilege and pleasure of your society, we have the consolation of reflecting that our loss will be conducive to your own and your country's good In the hope that you will accept this imperfect expression of our feelings on the occasion of your separation from us and with the sincerest good wishes for your continued health and happiness, we beg to subscribe ourselves, dear Sir, your very faithful friends and servants,

(Signed) R N Campbell, J Paton, Jas Hulenahoy, H W Daly, T Roberts, Guirot Man, C Miller, John Abbs, Arch Ramsay, Jas Russell, E B Stevenson, H Baker, J Peel, U O Munro, W Anderson, D D Slatz, W H Horsley, John Cox John Chatterton, C Mead, C Mault, I N Clerk, Jin Baby Clerk, S Vemede, I Vemede, A Allardice, Assistant Surgeon, S Ridsdale Clerk, Thos Crawford, D'Albeldhill

Dear Sirs,—I have just had the honour to receive your letter of 31st August last, and am deeply sensible of the kindness which has prompted you to address me I fear you have attached more value to my personal services than they deserve, though I will not affect to depreciate the advantages which have attended our joint efforts to benefit Travancore I am as far from desiring as it would be arrogant in me to claim an exclusive merit for any measure of public utility that may have been effected while I was in that country I endeavoured to do my duty, and your friendly aid enabled me to fulfil it in the manner which you have deemed worthy of approval

I am happy to take this opportunity of acknowledging the support which I received from you during the time I exercised the office of Resident in Travancore No measures of useful policy, or plans for the improvement of the country and for the amelioration of the condition of its inhabitants, ever occurred to me that I did not meet with your immediate and hearty co operation, and the advantage of your judicious counsels If the projects that were undertaken, with a view to the public good, have either already success, or promise success hereafter, I refer this result primarily to the countenance and encouragement of the enlightened prince who reigns in Travancore, but in a high degree also to the zeal and energy with which you have all, in your several offices, fulfilled your duty, and carried out into decisive act I determined effect the various interests that have been committed to your charge.

I rely on your continued watchfulness over the several departments with which you are entrusted You are well acquainted with my wishes and the particular objects to which they are directed while I have learnt by experience that you possess both the desire and power of essentially serving Travancore and contributing to an honourable name and distinguished rank among the states of India for that beautiful and highly favoured land To the gentlemen who are not in the service of the Travancore state or whose avocations have not brought them so immediately into official connexion with myself, but who have done me the honour of expressing a favourable opinion of the manner in which I executed the duties of my office I beg to return also my warmest thanks The worth and high character of those who have united in conferring this distinction upon me invest it with peculiar value If ever circumstances lead to my resuming my office in Travancore, I shall return to the court of a native prince for whom I entertain the highest respect, and to the society of valued friends, from whom it has been painful to me to separate But if the commands of the British Government give a different direction to my services, it will always be a source of the sincerest pleasure to me to reflect that my conduct has met with your approbation I have the honour to be, dear Sirs, your faithful and obedient friend and servant,

J S Fraser.

The second chapter upon punishments, the fifth on offences against the state, and the seventh relating to offences against public tranquillity, present so many novel features in the science of jurisprudence, and embrace numerous enactments of so much weight and importance, that our columns will only permit us to offer some very brief remarks upon these momentous subjects, which demand the deliberate and profound meditation of the ablest and most enlightened legislators. The punishments are arranged under the following six classes:—"death, transportation, rigorous and simple imprisonment, banishment, forfeiture of property, fine." The enactment No. 109, Chap. 5, on offences against the state, declares, that—

"Whoever wages war against the government of any part of the territories of the East India Company, or attempts to wage such war, or by instigation, conspiracy, or aid, previously abets the waging of such war, shall be punished with death, or transportation for life, or imprisonment of either description for life, and shall forfeit all his property."

Whether the organization of our Indian empire requires seamen, for most of them were always employed in foreign parts, and those remained, comparatively speaking, very few at home available to the service of the Royal Navy in the event of any sudden emergency, so that it would be necessary in such a case to resort to press warrants, and take every seaman found in our ports. The way to render impressment unnecessary would be, to keep up a greater force in our ports ready for service. He complained that the demonstration ships were utterly unprepared with masts or stores, so that a considerable time must elapse before they could be in readiness for any emergency. He vindicated the Earl of Hardwicke, and gave Capt. Berkeley the merit of having at length roused the vigilance of the Admiralty. The Board had exceeded their powers in altering the rating of ships. He thought the Admiralty would promote the interests of the country by a different disposition of the force.—Admiral Sir C. ADAM said that the three line-of-battle ships in the three ports could be made effective in a very short space of time; and, besides them, there were in the Tagus, within a few days' sail of our shores, and constantly sailing backwards and forwards—the Hercules, the Edinburgh, the Minden, and the Hastings, and the two large frigates Pique and Inconstant, and some other vessels. He contrasted the former mode of keeping vessels in a state of readiness for sea and the present mode, and argued that, so far from being in a greater state of preparation from what they had been previously, time was absolutely lost in the unrigging and re-rigging. The Duke of Wellington's speech had had no effect whatever on the system adopted in supplying the arsenal: that speech had merely had the effect of producing a pamphlet from a Flag Officer, full of innumerable mis-statements and wilful misrepresentations. The employing small seventy-fours, instead of frigates, so much objected to as being in contravention to an Order in Council, was an arrangement determined on when Earl de Grey was at the head of the Admiralty. With respect to Capt. Berkeley's pamphlet, he was sorry that that officer had so far forgotten himself as to take a step unjustifiable in any member of a Board—at a time, too, when the subject of his pamphlet was under the consideration of his colleagues.—Sir JAMES GRAHAM said that the force which a Government ought to ask for, should be the smallest that would be sufficient for the purposes of the country. After stating the circumstances under which the Coast Guard had been appointed, and that the Government should think twice before they put down that force, he went into a variety of details to show the advantage of the system laid down by him with regard to demonstration ships, which he was glad to find was not to be departed from. He instituted a comparison between the ships of France, America, Russia, and Great Britain, and contended that unless a certain number of ships were launched every year, our fleet would dwindle away, and at last require a great effort to restore it at all. With the advice and concurrence of Sir T. Hardy and Adm. Dundas, he proposed launching three new vessels-of-the-line, three new frigates, and repairing three old ships worth the trouble and expence, and 195,000*l.* would be required for this purpose; which sum would be the full amount required satisfactorily to dispose of the question between safety and danger.—Sir E. CODRINGTON observed, that many ignorant people supposed that it was the fear of flogging which deterred men from joining the Navy. So far from this being the case, were one Captain to announce that under no circumstances would he allow of flogging, and another to declare that he would punish every one who did not do his duty, and encourage those who did their duty, the ship of the latter would be the best and quickest manned. He repelled the accusation that sailors were as ready to fight under foreign states as for their own country. He sincerely believed they only wanted encouragement and reward in return for their services. In the Army, men were wheedled and bribed to join it; but in the Navy they had to steal men, because they would not give them the worth of their service.—Mr. H. BERKELEY, so far from allowing that Capt Berkeley had forgotten himself, thought he had never better recollected what was due to himself and to the service to which he belonged.—Lord INGESTRIE complained of the tone of party spirit introduced into the subject by the Secretary to the Admiralty. He agreed in all the opinions with respect to the complaints of ships, lately advanced by Capt. Berkeley, and adverted to various grievances felt by the Navy.—The debate was adjourned to Friday.

FRIDAY, March 8.—Sir J. HOBHOUSE, upon laying on the table certain treaties connected with India, said that he would take this opportunity of correcting a mis statement which had been made in the other House of Parliament by an illustrious Duke (Wellington). He had great satisfaction in informing the House that instead of the Military force in India being lower, it was, in fact, higher than it had been for some preceding years, and there had been a considerable augmentation. He had transmitted to Lord Auckland, in Nov., a decided declaration that, should any augmentation of the European forces be required, the home authorities would be willing to grant it.

The late Sir Robert Spencer, in Her Majesty's ship Naiad, being sent to Algiers, owing to some infringement of the Exmouth Treaty, and not obtaining the satisfaction required, withdrew the British Consul, but had not cleared the bay before he had to commence hostility in a small way; for, falling in with an Algerine three-masted felucca of about 150 tons, a shot was fired to bring her to, and several times repeated, which the spirited little craft returned by a shot through the heel of the Naiad's main-top-gallant mast; then, sending all but one hand below, continued her route under all sail, within musket-shot and under the heavy fire of the frigate, until every stick was literally knocked out of her, when a 10-gun brig in company was signaled to take possession. Some twenty Spanish prisoners were taken out of her, and thus rescued from impending slavery, and the Turkish Captain became a prisoner on board the Naiad. Our friend Ali Cutti, the Captain, though a gallant fellow, became very much "down in the mouth;" and though, for a Turk, he took largely of wine (of course medicinally, as the temperance people do brandy), all would not do; he became a very sorry fellow: when it was discovered that he had a wife (and but one), with several children who must be living all this time "six upon four"—in short, in absolute distress, owing to his non-arrival. The Naiad shortly after returning off Algiers, Captain Spencer, with noble generosity, availed himself of a flag of truce to furnish Mrs. Ali Cutti with a plentiful bag of Spanish dollars, and continued a liberal allowance until her loving husband was restored to her by the cessation of hostilities.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—The Moniteur announces the arrival of the Prince de Joinville, in the Creole corvette, on the 27th ult., from the Havannah.

SPAIN.—A decree of Don Carlos sanctions and applauds General Maroto's recent sanguinary conduct at Estella, and continues that officer in the command of the army. The Bishop of Leon, M. Anais Teijeiro, and Lubandero, have been dismissed from their offices; Senor Ramirez de la Piscina has been nominated Foreign Secretary by Don Carlos. It was supposed that they would be escorted to France and suffered to escape, but report very strongly asserts that Maroto has demanded and will obtain the execution of Teijeiro. The Bishop was even said to have secreted himself at Lesaca, watching an opportunity of escaping!

A letter from Madrid states that Cabrera had discovered a conspiracy at Morella to deliver up the place to General Van Halen, and had, in consequence, shot 450 persons, consisting partly of soldiers and partly of inhabitants of the town.

MISAPPREHENSIONS FOR THE FATE OF POOR ENGLAND, IN THE EVENT OF A WAR, IN THE PRESENT INEFFICIENT STATE OF HER NAVY.

With Louis Philippe the First
We would come off the worst,
The Emperor Nicholas
Would pepper and pickle us;
By the Porte most *Sub*lime
We'd be thrashed in no time,
A war with the Dutch
We'd repent very much.
I've an awful opinion
Of the navy Sardinian:
But I don't think we need
Dread the Dane or the Swede;
'Twould be shocking indeed,
And we'd justly complain,
If by Naples or Spain,
Or the fleet of Old Egypt,
Britain's feathers could be chipt,
Still Jonathan Yankee
Would "wop" us and thank ye. PEGASUS.

Theatres.

COVENT-GARDEN.—Sir Lytton Bulwer's new play, Richelieu, or the Conspiracy, was on Thursday night produced before one of the most crowded audiences ever assembled within the walls of a theatre. The house was in every part full to overflowing, and the play was received with an enthusiasm of applause alike merited by the rich and picturesque scenery, the power of the acting, and the dramatic skill, pleasant humour, fine discrimination, and poetical beauty of the composition. Its success was most triumphant, but we have not space this week for a detail of the plot, and to do justice to its merits.

ADELPHI.—On Monday evening some half dozen monkeys, who have been remarkably well drilled, performed an interlude. First one appeared in front of the curtain, and apparently made some communication to the leader of the orchestra. Then the curtain rising, discovered two of them, who danced, playing upon a tambourine. Then a lady monkey of distinction, attended by a page, walked across the stage and back with all the airs and graces of a lady of fashion. Next they enjoyed themselves in a petit souper, being waited upon by a monkey footman. The whole affair caused roars of laughter.

ST. JAMES'S.—A new burletta in one act, entitled The Rear-Admiral, was produced on Monday night. Its success was complete. The plot, without any pretension to novelty, is sufficiently dramatic, and the dialogue is spirited and smart. The scenery is very beautiful, and gives evident indications that Mr. Hooper's Olympic education has not been lost upon him.

Literary Notices.

The Idler in Italy. 2 vols. By the Countess of Blessington. H. Colburn.

WOULD that we could make this charming book review itself, by taking from it into our columns a few characteristic examples of the various attractions of which its pages consist: its easy and graceful, yet animated and brilliant style—its shrewd and sagacious spirit of observation—its just and natural tone of sentiment—its picturesque descriptions—its racy and original views of character, national as well as individual—its perfectly true yet piquant sketches of manners and society in the countries visited—its high and pure, yet perfectly unaffected, tone of moral feeling:—in short, all the points and features which go to make this book one of the most delightful and acceptable of its class that we have had for many a day. Would—we say—that our space would allow us to set forth all these qualities in their own proper forms, instead of tantalising the reader by a mere verbal and vapid description of what cannot be described; seeing that its peculiar qualities and characteristics are—as those of all Journals should be—purely personal and individual. To describe how Lady Blessington writes on occasions of this kind, when she writes from the actual impulse of the moment, and seeks to do no more (nor less) than impart to her readers the immediate feelings and reflections called forth by the occasion treated of, were only to describe the personal character and constitution of Lady Blessington's mind and heart, and their respective capacities and attributes; and this were a task beside our office, even if we were capable of fulfilling it. In the absence, however, of the means of conveying a due impression to our readers of the many merits of this work, we have the consolation of knowing, that all we could in any case effect in the matter—even if we could quote half the book—would be a work of supererogation; seeing that the book itself will be in the hands of all the reading world as soon probably as our notice could reach them. It does not, however, the less behove us to in some sort pay this charming writer for the pleasure she has afforded us, by recording, as we now do, our unmixed admiration of the uses to which she has in this instance—as, indeed, she does in every other—turned her varied and available talents, and the happy temperament to which they are allied. "The Idler in Italy" is neither more nor less than a Journal—we verily believe little, if at all, altered or embellished from the original tracings of the fair journalist's hand—kept during a tour through France to Italy, and a residence of some months in the most attractive localities of the latter country, namely, Rome and Naples. The materials of which it is made up—so far at least as regards their "complement exterior"—may readily be guessed at; but the manner of attiring those materials, and the points of view in which they are set forth, can only be appreciated by a perusal of the book itself, to which, therefore, we heartily commend our readers.

Peru as it is: a Residence in Lima, and other parts of the Peruvian Republic; comprising an Account of the Social and Physical Features of that Country. By Archibald Smith, M.D. 2 vols. R. Bentley.

A TEN years' residence in Peru has enabled the very intelligent and observant author of the present work to amass a valuable fund of information respecting Peruvian society, the external aspect of the country, the operation of its new form of government, its agriculture, its general trade, and particularly the present state of its mining districts. The portion of the work which treats of the diseases peculiar to Peru is exceedingly interesting, and developes a series of facts of considerable importance to the medical science, and dietetics. The architectural and other remains of the ancient Incas seem to have attracted Dr. Smith's curiosity; and they are described by him with very graphic effect. But, perhaps, the most popular parts of his volumes are those relating to the mines, wherein are shown the mode of working them, their products, the expense for labour, the number of productive mines, and their different qualities. The whole book, indeed, is of as much utility as amusement, and it is rich in both.

The Aldine Magazine of Biography, Bibliography, Criticism, and the Arts. March, 1839.

ORIGINATING in a weekly sheet, this Magazine, on an enlarged and improved plan, now takes its stand with the regular monthly periodicals. The first Paper in the present Number is of a startling character, affirmatory of the existence of Louis XVII., the orphan of Louis XVI. and Marie Antoinette, and peremptorily appealing to the French Noblesse now in London, to investigate his claims. "Letters to my Son at Rome" illustrate the history and character of the leading booksellers of the past generation, and a plate of fac similia autographs of about sixteen bibliopolists of the present day, patrons of the work, impart to it a novel species of interest. Amongst the literary contributors to the Aldine Magazine, we find Miss Pardoe, Delta, the author of "The Siege of Zaragoza," and other popular writers. The critical notices of new books, the Fine Arts, &c., evince much soundness of judgment and purity of taste.

Home Service. By Benson E. Hill, Author of "Recollections of an Artillery Officer." H. Colburn.

THIS writer's first work was very generally and most favourably reviewed; it teemed with interesting details, of foreign and warlike matters, interspersed with droll scenes, characters, anecdotes, and jests. Its successor, though more British and pacific, is still sufficiently Military to content our Artilleryman's former brother soldiers, with whom his gentlemanly habits have kept him in high favour, though some of them may regret that he ever left the Army.

Those familiar with the "Head-Quarters" of his corps, and with such "Out-Quarters" as Dover, Shorncliffe, &c., will recognize the authenticity of his sketches; not, however, confined to those localities. The Engineer, whose Kentish road he praises, also furnished him with ludicrous tales, from far distant lands. His memory and imagination have gleaned rich material from Egypt, Minorca, Genoa, Gibraltar, and other "realms remote," where our officer never was quartered.

Royal and noble chiefs figure in his lively pages. His own Yorkshire servant, Gunner Samuel Turner, is a rough diamond, well worthy of careful examination. Mr. Hill seems to have admired great persons, and observed diverting ones, with a spirit of frank impartiality, whether Whig or Tory, prince or poet, player or parson, Major-General or master tailor, dwarf or fortune-teller, smuggler or boatman, Irish, Scotch, French, or West-country, chambermaid or "lady with the light hair." His unprejudiced accounts ought to conciliate liberal readers, of all parties, especially as there is no wavering in his fair play; he professes the political bias in which he was trained for the service, and from which he has never swerved; though this prevents him not from dealing justly by honest leaders on the other side, while he sports with the simile of one among his own plods, and with the symmetry of another. In his theatrical portraits, from the highly coloured full length, to the pen and ink profile, he has brought forward good points, throwing "eye-offending blots" as much in the shade as any artist can do, who desires to preserve fidelity of likeness. In private allusions a forgiving tone pervades his most comic passages, doing credit to his heart and head.

Judicious comments on literature and the fine arts, lend value and variety to these volumes, which are calculated to create a sensation, and diffuse entertainment, through many contrasted circles of social life, metropolitan and provincial.

Mr. Hill's originality and humour are never immodest, still less immoral or irreligious, yet sometimes evinced in traits that will be best appreciated by masculine readers. But, if nautical authors may be naughty with impunity, in a gross coarse way, surely a land blue-jacket, who can delicately imply "a bit of fun," need dread no squeamish censure. 'Tis a mad wag, my masters! Two or three gems of nature's pathos, however, redeem the whole from any charge of useless levity; rendering it a case of "sweet and bitter" liqueurs, all enlivening, and of the purest quality. The few chapters which have before appeared are corrected and amplified, so that they can scarcely be termed reprints, and form not a sixth of the total quantity.

Mr. Hill trusts that he has improved; we pronounce "Home Service" superior, both in matter and manner, to the "Recollections." "Practice makes perfect," experience alone can teach talent how to excel in its favourite arts, how to arrange its own stores, and give due effect to its own powers.

Clear and correct style is requisite to the lightest essays of the pen. This Mr. Hill has acquired, by care, pains, time; it cannot otherwise be attained. His first literary attempt promised much, his second has amply redeemed that pledge, we hope for a third.

Nothing can be more manly than is his dedication. Its "unflattering brotherhood" proves that its theme merits "more than is set down for him." By the way, Mr. George Raymond so shines in his friend's adventures, that he, we imagine, will not complain of personality.

We must now conclude our notice of "Home Service," and cordially recommend it to our readers. As leisure and space may serve, we shall endeavour to give them a few extracts, as specimens of Mr. Hill's versatility, good temper, and wit. We congratulate Mr. Colburn on this venture, which, we predict, will answer the purpose of all concerned, a consummation devoutly to be wished, as the ex-artillery officer confesses himself "one of the poor and proud." To the mentally industrious and economical, a luck of lucre should enhance pride; we wish our author's humbled by nothing, but very full pay, for all his services.

Russian Soldiers.—The Russians make good soldiers, yielding an implicit obedience to their superiors, and undergoing the basest punishment, frequently inflicted unjustly, without a murmur. Until very recently there existed in the Russian military code seventy-three cases in which the punishment of death might be inflicted; and that punishment in six different modes—by quartering, by the wheel, by fire, by decapitation, generally accompanied by the previous burning of the tongue with a red hot iron, by hanging, and by running the gauntlet, the late military code has abolished all these modes except the last. The more lenient punishments were—the knout, which indeed frequently caused death, tearing away the nostrils, mutilation of the ears, nose, hands, or fingers, and nailing the hands to the pillory. The incendiary, the forger, the magician, and the sorcerer, were to be burned alive.* Blasphemy and defamation of the Emperor or any of the Imperial family were punished by decapitation. The theft of a sum above twenty silver roubles, about 3*l* 10*s*., entailed death. "A Russian soldier," observes a native writer, "knows but that which is read to him; a maxim which should be repeated and inculcated as often as the word of God." And such were the military laws as established by Peter the Great.—London Monthly Miscellany.

Peninsula Anecdotes.—Lord Charles Manners, when surprised in Spain by a squadron of French Lancers, and desired to surrender, determined upon a struggle for his liberty, replied only by such a start as he would have taken at the sound of "gone away!" from a gorse covert, quickly applying spurs to the side of his charger, a thorough-bred mare—luckily the second which he had mounted after the fatigue of a general action, a mare distinguished in Leicestershire—he led chase, fearlessly steering his course, indifferent to a volley of oaths and threats, accompanied by the display of weapons in his rear, straight towards a ravine in front of him, charging it at a point somewhat broader than the full breadth of the Whitsendine, and, clearing it, landed in safety on the opposite bank, to the infinite amazement of all, les Messieurs braves des braves, not one of whom could regard it otherwise than as the most un-negociable ne plus ultra of pursuit. The same kind of activity, added to coolness, self-possession, and that dependence upon his own resources, which are generally combined in the constitution of a true sportsman, were also available in another instance, lately related to me, as having occurred to one no less distinguished throughout the army of the Peninsula, or regarded by his comrades, than Colonel (now General W——s, formerly of the Coldstream Guards, better known by the familiar appellation of Billy W——s. Upon one of those occasions to be met with in the catalogue of the chances of war, the Colonel found himself in the situation of many brave men before and since,—a prisoner in the hands of the enemy. The circumstance being reported, as a matter of course, to the Commander in-Chief, his Grace's reply, couched in his usual style of brevity, plainly demonstrated his knowledge of character:—"Ha! W——s taken, is he? got W——s, have they? well, they wont keep him long." The result was according to the Duke's general discrimination concerning all with whom he had to deal. That W——s was taken, was too true; true he was on his route to incarceration, or the shadow of liberty, a limited freedom on parole; but, instead of yielding to despair, his wits were directed, from the moment of his capture, to the means of escape, the way to effect which is not invariably in such cases manifest as accompanying the will. It might not appear particularly feasible to any one riding unarmed in the centre of a corps of well-armed and well-mounted dragoons, each taking an especial interest in his society, while under their charge; but as the pigmy driver of a celebrated coach observed, "What big uns does by strength, I does by hartifiz,"—so did our good Colonel resort to that stratagem which alone could serve his purpose in such a strait. Affecting the utmost unconcern for the consequences of such an event, he jogged merrily and, to all seeming, willingly along with his escort, merely lamenting le sort de la guerre, remarking upon the expediency of resignation to fate, taking a prise de tabac with one, a sup of eau de vie with another, and conversing with a degree of good humour and indifference, which completely disarmed all suspicion of his object. He was pronounced a bon camarade, and regarded in the light of what an Englishman, for want of more expressive phraseology, must have termed a d—d good fellow. After a march of some miles upon these terms, a halt was proposed; the Colonel, not requiring any hint to dismount, was the first to quit the saddle, taking care, however, to remain close within the reach of his horse. The day was sultry, and the soldiers perceiving their prisoner apparently intent upon the solace of the Indian weed, attempting to obtain a light for the Meerschaum, with which he affected to be exclusively occupied, one by one had abandoned their horses, and were seated smoking or reposing upon the ground, when Colonel W——s, mounting quicker than thought, was at least a hundred yards distant from the group before any exertions could follow the ejaculations which so unexpected a proceeding had produced.—[From the New Sporting Review, a publication under the management of "Craven," and we hope worthy the fame of that clever writer.]

* It may be observed that the sorcerer and interpreter of dreams are still punished under Russian criminal law.

THE WRECK.

FROM THE "ATHENÆUM MAGAZINE."

They are gone, they are gone, to the unseen caves
Of the wide and trackless deep,
And of them no relic remains to show
Where they lie in their lonely sleep

The sea-weed clings to their matted hair,
And the coral rock is their quiet bed;
No sigh breathes above their darksome bier,
No dirge is sung o'er the ocean dead,

Save that of the mad and booming wave,
As it speeds on its swift and reckless way,
O'er the wailing voice of the winter wind
At the boding close of a stormy day.

Their thoughts—their prayers—and their last wild words,
Not one of the living may ever know—
They are buried where rocks the shark his prey
In the cold and fathomless depths below.

Their loves—their hatreds, where are they now?
In the gulf where rests all love and hate;
No voice of the past is heard to tell
Their name, their lineage, their former fate.

What lips have smiled, and what eyes have wept
For those who lie 'neath the briny wave,
Is hidden with many an untold tale
That sleeps in many an unknown grave.

The step of the Watcher now profanes
That deck where the feet of the dying trod;
And his oath takes place of the frantic shriek
That in life's last gurgle called upon God.

A drifted spar, and a broken mast,
And a board where their last sad meal was spread,
Are all that remain to the wistful eye
Of those the unshrouded—the nameless dead. L. S. S.

To secure the strength and efficiency of that service, once increased, is a matter of paramount interest; and as it is generally admitted to be found more difficult to retain than to possess, so the importance of this part of the subject demands more consideration and patience than the former. This is the second measure, and resolves itself into the branches of justice—due encouragement and provision for the mariner, which will finally be found to accomplish the last. Justice can only be rendered to him by assimilating his condition to the seaman of the Royal Navy. In attempting to accomplish this end, which must promise the most beneficial results, we can only hope it will operate most favourably on the mariner, from the natural conclusion that every class of men will not fail, in proportion to the inducements held out for their provision in old age, and the advantages offered of immediate support, to continue faithful to their employers, and devoted to that country in which they are rewarded for their industry in an equal scale to that of other occupations, and a superior consideration to that which is given in other nations. To achieve this measure, there is ample ground to operate on, without in the least infringing the interest of the shipowner or by any other means that would not ultimately repay him tenfold. A natural and just conclusion must have its weight in this as on a variety of points, the spectator is invariably capable of perceiving the merits of any occurrence, or the errors of action, with more disinterested feelings, and through the medium of purer sentiments, than those which form a portion of the moving scene. In reference to the establishment of a class of ordinary seamen in the trading marine, it might be deemed arbitrary to insist on such a measure. But who is there that, being intimate with the present state of the maritime service, can assert the possibility, if required, of furnishing the trading marine with an increase * of able seamen? No, it would be found totally impossible. Therefore, under the undeniable fact of there being so great a scarcity of seamen, and the not less notorious proof of the trading ships not being efficiently manned in numbers, there could not be any injustice in the aforesaid measure of augmentation. In fact, on the score of humanity, it should be urged, if not from other motives.

As the present short-handed † state in which the trading ships proceed to sea, coupled with other circumstances before alluded to, are the prevaling causes of the incessant destruction of property, loss of life, and consequently the immense annual sacrifice of seamen. So in an eminent degree do these palpable facts require notice. The community at large would be served by the introduction of an increase of hands, particularly of the former description, into the trading marine—without imposing on the shipowner the expense of additional able seamen (the pay of the ordinary one probably would not exceed or vary, for the first three years, from 5*s*. to 10*s*.) per month. With disinterested feelings of zealous concern for the welfare of both nautical services, it is to be hoped that adequate measures will be adopted, in order to accomplish the foregoing purpose—followed up by, and united to, such steps as will tend to retain the important services of our valuable mariners.

With a view to obtain this result, and arrive at the means of achieving so great and desirable an arrangement, the inabilities and innovations on the mariner's privileges must be removed, and a just remuneration offered; with a due encouragement manifested by abolishing those petty and injurious transactions so seriously interfering with the nature and duration of his engagements, at the same time securing to the shipowner and him reciprocal benefits. Hence, as the minute duty of the seaman is not only founded but also dependent on, in many points, scientific principles, and one which requires, even in its most secure preparation, more than ordinary boldness, the injustice of allowing any interference with his avocation, or depriving him of his due employment while in port at home, becomes more striking,—the inroad on his industry more unjust, and as disgraceful to his employers as it is singularly prejudicial to the state. This circumstance, as before but only generally adverted to, arises from the practice of dismissing the mariner immediately on his arrival in England, and instantly employing landsmen riggers to discharge the cargo and dismantle the ship. After which, on the vessel being brought forward again for freight, the before-mentioned riggers are re-engaged to equip and rig it. It cannot fail to afford a correct opinion on the evil tendency of this system, not only as refers to its impropriety of justice to the mariner, but also in a more palpable form by the effect it has on the number of seamen,—in so much that the number of those riggers, of whom few have ever been out of harbour, particularly the younger men, when we find they amount, according to a calculation that there cannot be less than 4,000 in the port of London, 2,200 in Liverpool, 950 in Glasgow, 1,000 in Hull, and in Dublin, Cork and Liverpool, 870, and throughout other ports of Great Britain and Ireland, Jersey, Guernsey, and Man, they are 980, showing a total of 10,000 men which are unavailable to the state in the event of war, and not more than one-third of whom have been at sea. It must not be advanced that the greater portion of those men are old and disabled; not so; they are chiefly able-bodied, and as equal to perform laborious duty as the seaman—as proved by the circumstance of being employed by the shipowner, who, it is to be presumed, in justice to himself, would not engage an invalid labourer. This is an alarming deduction from the strength of our trading marine, in addition to other evils of which it is productive.—(To be continued.)

* Several ships were detained last summer for hands, although the pay rose to 3*l*. 15*s*. per month.

† The author came home from Portugal in a ship that, in a moderate gale, was obliged to cut away from the yard a foretop sail, which could not be furled from having only three men and two boys in a vessel of 250 tons.

THE LATE REAR-ADMIRAL SIR JOHN FERRIS DEVONSHIRE, K.C.H.

This veteran, whose death was notified in our Paper of the 23d ultimo, entered the Naval Service in 1789, as a Volunteer, on board the Cumberland, 74, and served on the Halifax station as Midshipman in the Penelope, Captain J. Lindsay; and on the W. India station in the Trusty, 50, bearing the flag of Adm. Sir J. Laforey; in the Queen, 98, under the flag of R.-Adm. Sir A. Gardiner; and in the Berbice schooner. Subsequently Lord St. Vincent appointed Lieut. D. to the Terpsichore, 32, which ship was employed in the defence of Fort Matilda, Guadaloupe, when besieged by the French in Nov. and Dec. 1794. During the siege, which lasted nearly two months, Lieut. D. commanded the Terpsichore's boats, by which supplies were conveyed day and night to the garrison, under a heavy cross fire from the enemy. Early in October, 1796, the Terpsichore was despatched from Gibraltar to inform the Commander-in-Chief of the squadron under Rear-Admiral Mann having been chased thither by the Spanish fleet. On her return she fell in with, and captured an enemy's frigate of far superior force—the Mahonesa, a Spanish frigate, carrying on the main deck twenty-six Spanish 12-pounders, weighing 18 ounces more than ours, 8 Spanish sixes on the quarter deck, and a number of brass coborns, swivels, &c., had on board 278 men, besides six pilots, qualified for the Mediterranean as high as Leghorn. The despatch of the gallant Commander of the Terpsichore, Captain Richard Bowen, contained the following notice of Lieut. Devonshire's conduct:—"I am unwilling to speak of the particular conduct of any of the officers; but the talents displayed by the First Lieut. Devonshire, who was but just out of the sick list, during the action, added to his uncommon fatigue in taking care of the prize, and the very able manner in which he conducted and prepared to defend her, entitle him to this distinction, and prove him highly deserving of the recommendation you gave him with his appointment in the West Indies." In consequence of this well-merited commendation, the Admiralty promoted Lieut. Devonshire to the rank of Commander. His post commission, dated April 27, 1801, was given him as a reward for his gallant conduct when commanding the Dart sloop-of-war, attached to Lord Nelson's division, in the battle off Copenhagen. The Dart on that occasion had a Lieutenant and 2 men killed, and 1 man wounded. During the late war he commanded several line-of-battle-ships, and, at the promotion in July, 1830, he was made a Rear-Admiral, and placed on the Retired List. Sir John was in the 65th year of his age. The ardent zeal, gallantry, and ability, that marked his long and distinguished professional career, obtained for him the friendship and esteem et his late Majesty, as well as of Earl St. Vincent and Lord Nelson. In his native county (Devonshire), the firm, upright, and unflinching integrity of the magistrate, the benevolent, hospitable, and urbane manners of the man, placed him high in the respect of his neighbourhood, and in the esteem and regard of a large circle of friends. His private worth and domestic virtues are consecrated in grateful and affectionate remembrance by his afflicted widow and family.

CLIMATE ON THE HAIR.—The effect of climate upon the hair is very great. Extreme cold is apt to dry and wither the roots; and, on the contrary, extreme heat to enervate and weaken this important integument of the head. The most extraordinary thing connected with the preceding fact is, that one counteracting agent should be endowed with the singular virtues of preserving the hair in health and beauty, in either the torrid or frigid zone; and it is a question, whether ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL is most used in warm or cold countries. At the Court of Russia, the above delightful conservator of the hair is lauded with extraordinary encomiums; while in India the consumption of Rowland's Macassar is immense!

BALSAM OF SPERMACETI.—Asthma, Shortness of Breath, Wheezing Coughs, soreness, tightness, and oppression of the Chest, and most affections of the Chest and Lungs, relieved in ten minutes, by taking one dose of WOODHOUSE'S BALSAM of SPERMACETI, or PECTORAL COUGH DROPS. Persons doubting the efficacy of this Medicine may take a dose in the Proprietor's Shop before they purchase. The Proprietor earnestly recommends a trial of these Drops to persons afflicted with the above complaints, but he does not introduce them as being an infallible cure (as many do), but is warranted in asserting their efficacy, from the extensive relief afforded in numerous cases of the above description. Constitutional Coughs of three, four, and more years' standing, have been cured in the course of a week by the use of these Drops. In the Hooping and Chin Coughs it will be found equally valuable. Two tea-spoonfuls of the Balsam are equal to one ounce of Spermaceti—it will at all times relieve the most violent Consumptive Cough.

In Bottles, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 10s. 6d. each.

This preparation is prepared only by DECIMUS WOODHOUSE, Operative Chemist extraordinary to his late Majesty, at his Laboratory, 13, Little James-street, Bedford-row; of whom it may be had Wholesale; also Retail of Nash, 18, King William-street, London-bridge; Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Hannay, 3, Oxford-street; and of all Medicine Venders.

FAMILIES, TRAVELLERS, MASTERS OF SHIPS, AND SPORTSMEN, Should never be Without MOXON'S

EFFERVESCENT MAGNESIAN APERIENT, decidedly the most generally useful Medicine ever offered to the public.

The unrivalled efficacy of the Magnesian in all Disorders of the Stomach and Bowels has obtained for it the uniform recommendation and approval of the Faculty.

This unique preparation unites all the active powers of the most approved saline purgatives with the palateable qualities of a glass of soda water. In torpid state of the liver and bowels, bilious affections, cholera morbus, pains in the head, or disordered state of the stomach, nausea, and violent sickness, it will be found a safe, speedy, and effectual remedy. It gives instantaneous relief in the heartburn, is of great service in preventing piles, fistula, and gout, and in alleviating the febrile symptoms attendant on the latter affection. Derangement of the stomach and head, &c., arising from too free indulgence in the gratifications of the table, is speedily removed by a tea-spoonful taken early in the morning.

Prepared only by BENJAMIN MOXON, Chymist, Hull.

Wholesale Agents—Barclay and Sons, London; J. and R. Raines, Edinburgh and Dublin. Sold wholesale at all the Medicine Warehouses in London, and retail by all Venders of Medicines throughout the kingdom, in bottles at 2s. 9d.; 4s. 6d.; and in family bottles at 11s., containing the quantity of five of the 2s. 9d. size, a saving of 20 per cent. to the purchaser.

N.B.—Be careful to observe that "Moxon and Smith, Chymists, Hull," is engraved on the stamp, without which it cannot be genuine.

May be had as above, that very popular and much-esteemed preparation of Sarsaparilla, the

CONCENTRATED COMPOUND DECOCTION,
Prepared by B. Moxon, Chymist, Hull.

"One table-spoonful added to a pint of pure water readily forms a pint of the Compound Decoction; and, in justice to the preparers, we must say, appears to be more impregnated with the virtues of the ingredients than the decoction made in the usual way."—See Gazette of Health and Practical Medicine for January, 1829.

In bottles at 4s. 6d., 12s., and 22s., the latter equivalent to 32 pints of the Compound Decoction of the London Pharmacopœia.

J. DELCROIX AND CO., Perfumers to Her Majesty Queen Victoria, &c. &c.
No. 158, NEW BOND STREET (opposite Stevens's Hotel).

The great superiority of J. Delcroix and Co.'s Perfumery been so incontrovertibly established by the distinguished patronage of her Majesty Queen Victoria, the Queen Dowager, the various Members of the Royal Family, and by the Nobility and Gentry generally, as to render it unnecessary for J. Delcroix and Co. to do more than enumerate their leading articles, viz.

BOUQUET DE LA REINE VICTORIA, a new perfume, prepared expressly for her Majesty.

HIS LATE MAJESTY GEORGE IV.'S PERFUME, BOUQUET DU ROI, prepared expressly for that Sovereign.

ESPRIT DE LAVANDE AUX MILLEFLEURS, so universally admired in every quarter of the habitable globe.

DELCROIX'S VEGETABLE EXTRACT, for cleansing Hair, &c.

POMMADE REGENERATRICE, for the growth and preservation of the Hair.

VEGETABLE CREME des SULTANES, for preserving, beautifying, and whitening the skin.

DELCROIX'S celebrated POUDRE UNIQUE, for dyeing the hair, &c.

PATE D'AMANDE A LA REINE, so justly esteemed for its healing and softening quality.

The TRUE OPIATE of the Circassian Ladies, for the preservation and embellishment of the Teeth.

TO LADIES.—POUDRE SUBTILE, for removing superfluous Hairs.

DELCROIX'S ANTI-SCORBUTIC ELIXIR and ANTI-SCORBUTIC TOOTH POWDER, for preserving the Teeth and Gums from decay, and curing the Toothache.

TO GENTLEMEN.—For the comfort of easy shaving, they can, with every satisfaction, recommend their Vegetable Polish Soap Paste, and Pasta del Castagna.

ALMOND OIL SOAP, for Rough or Chapped Hands, and for softening and improving the Skin.

Also, Farina's Genuine Eau de Cologne—Eau Aromatique—Real Swiss Arquebusade, and all other articles of Perfumery of the very best description.

 J. Delcroix and Co. respectfully request that attention be particularly paid to the address upon their labels, No. 158, New Bond-street. No others can be warranted genuine.

HANNAY'S RONDELETIA,

FOR the TOILET or HANDKERCHIEF, originally prepared for the use of Her Most Gracious Majesty and the Royal Family, but now made use of at every Court in Europe.—An entirely new, elegant, and refreshing Perfumer superior to any article ever before offered to public patronage, retaining its delightful fragrance for days, and even after being washed, without smelling faint and unpleasant, the universal complaint against all other essences, five drops of which are equal in power to half an ounce of lavender. The lovers of elegant perfumes are solicited to call and try this article on their handkerchiefs, for which purpose a bottle is always open, free, and to which handkerchief, so perfumed, the combined fragrance of the choicest conservatory must yield precedence.

 The great satisfaction Hannay's Rondeletia has given those who have made use of it, and the consequent large sale it has obtained, has produced a host of counterfeits.—Perfumers, whose appearance of respectability would induce a belief that they would not sell a counterfeit article, are even guilty of it. Hannay and Ditrichsen, therefore, beg to inform their customers that the Essence of Rondeletia cannot be obtained genuine in London anywhere but at their own shop (63, Oxford-street); but it may be obtained in the Country of most respectable Perfumers, care being taken to observe that it has the name and address of HANNAY and CO., 63, Oxford-street, on the Bottle, the Label, and on the Seal. Sold in Bottles, at 2s. 6d., 7s., and 15s. each.

SARSAPARILLA.

FRANKS'S SARSINE PASTE, or ALKALINE COMPOUND OF SARSAPARILLA.—This Compound contains the active principle of Sarsaparilla, in combination with other Vegetable alteratives and tonics in the most pure and concentrated form. It will keep in all climates, and not deteriorate by age.

In Rheumatic Gout, and all Neuralgic Affections—in Dyspepsia, Eruptions of the Skin, Scrofulous Affections, enlarged Glands, Morbid Secretions, &c.—in General Debility, and where the constitution has been impaired by the continued use or abuse of Mercury—and, in fine, wherever it is desirable to administer the full benefit of Sarsaparilla, this form of that valuable Vegetable will be found of the greatest service.

Prepared only by GEORGE FRANKS, Surgeon, 96, Blackfriars Road, London; and may be had of all Wholesale and Retail Patent Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom, in Bottles at 4s. 6d., and 11s. each.

Mr. FRANKS may be consulted daily until Two o'clock.

CAUTION.—The Public are protected against Counterfeits by the name "George Franks, Blackfriars Road," being engraved on the Government Stamp attached to each Package.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove.—"Sheffield, Oct. 11th, 1827.

"DEAR SIR,—Will you send me twelve dozen of Solvent; I find my sale rapidly increasing. The superiority of the Rotterdam Solvent over all other preparations for the entire removal of Corns and Bunions, is becoming generally known and appreciated. Sir, since I last wrote to you, I have heard of several remarkable instances of its efficacy. One I may give you, as I have the permission so to do. Mr. Whitham, a respectable manufacturer, residing in Bridge street, Sheffield, has been a great sufferer from Corns for the last fifty years, hearing of the Rotterdam Solvent, he was induced to try it, and from the great benefit and relief experienced from its first application, he resolved to persevere in its use, and, in a comparatively short time, was completely cured, and continues so to this day. This gentleman will be happy to give any information to those who may personally apply. I am, dear Sir, yours truly, T. LOFTHOUSE."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely ineffacious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Prepared and sold by J. A. Sharwood, 55, Bishopsgate Without, London, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each; and, by appointment, by Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; and by most Medicine Venders.—Any Vendor not having it will procure it on its being ordered.

BRITISH WATERPROOFING COMPANY, 432, West Strand, near the Lowther Arcade.—The Directors of this Company invite the attention of the public to the following report, received from the Commissioners of the Metropolitan Police Force, addressed to H. C. Moreton Dyer, Esq., one of the Directors of this Company:—

"Metropolitan Police Office, Whitehall place, 23rd February, 1839.—SIR,—The Commissioners of Police beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 16th instant, requesting to be informed of the reports made by the police constables who have been wearing the clothing prepared and waterproofed by the British Waterproofing Company. The Commissioners have to acquaint you in reply, that one suit has been in the use of a constable, whose beat is situate on Blackheath. He reports that frequently during the month of January he was out in six hours' successive rain, without getting the least damp underneath the clothing; that on the night of the 8th instant it rained the whole nine hours he was on duty, and that when he took off his great coat, in the presence of the sergeant at the station, it was found as dry inside as when he put it on, that since he wore the waterproofed clothing he has been out in as much wet as at one time would have saturated three suits of the ordinary clothing. The other police constable is situate at Kingsland. He reports that he has worn the waterproofed clothing night and day, and has been under severe rain and snow storms, none of which penetrated any part of his clothing, except a little wet through one of the legs of the trousers on the first day he put them on, but since then he has observed nothing more of it. I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant, "C. ROWAN."

Agents continue to be appointed to all parts of the kingdom.

DRESS COATS, cut in the first style of fashion 30s.; superfine, 40s. to 50s., frock coats, silk facing, 35s. to 47s., superfine, silk velvet collar and silk facing, 50s.; milled cloth great coats, 40s to 60s., trousers, 6s. 6d. to 12s., fashionable cassikin and kerseymere, 15s. to 25s.; waistcoats, 5s 6d to 12s. 6d.; Petersham great coats, 25s. and 30s.; pilot coats, 16s., 21s., and 30s; cloth cloaks, 30s. to 63s.; shooting jackets, 18s., dressing gowns, 10s. 6d., boys' and youths' clothing, cloth tunic dresses, 30s. to 42s.; a suit of clothes, 2l. 12s superfine black, 3l. 5s.—At FISHER and CO.'s, Tailors, 13, King William-street, City, ten doors from London Bridge.

RAPER'S PATENT WATERPROOF.—patronised by the Queen, the Nobility, and several public establishments.—Messrs. RAPER and Co. beg respectfully to inform the public, that they are now carrying out Mr. Raper's newly invented PROCESS of WATERPROOFING of all sorts of FABRICS used in CLOTHING, as well as leather, with increased and extensive machinery. Receiving houses—8, Bridge-street, Blackfriars; 12, Marshall-street, Golden-square, and 46, Basinghall street. Messrs. Raper and Co. beg unequivocally to state that they have no connexion whatever with any public company, and that theirs is the only Patent Waterproof.

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.—FAMILIES in WANT of really good SERVANTS, of every description, will decidedly find their interest better consulted, and their object sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, 120, Oxford-street, corner of Regent-circus, (removed from 134, Oxford street—established in 1830), than through the adoption of any other method whatever, as domestics are waiting to be hired from Ten to Five o'clock. Convenient rooms are appropriated to engagements, which prevents unnecessary trouble at home through numerous applications. Many persons are prejudiced against an establishment for hiring servants, but if the servants possess good characters, it must certainly be obviously absurd to suppose that they can be injured by the readiest method having been taken to procure situations. Fee for obtaining a servant, 2s. 6d.; as many as may be required in a family per annum, 14s.

HODGSONS' EAST INDIA PALE ALE.—E. ABBOTT and Co., Wapping, are exclusively supplied by Messrs. Hodgsons and Abbott, of Bow Brewery, with this long-celebrated Beer, for home consumption; orders for which, in 18-gallon casks or bottles, immediately attended to. Export orders executed.

City Office, 99, Gracechurch-street.

THE MODEL OF THE BATTLE OF WATERLOO,

Is now EXHIBITED at the EGYPTIAN HALL, PICCADILLY, by brilliant artificial light; constantly illuminated from Two o'clock in the afternoon, and throughout the day in dark or unfavourable weather.

Open from Ten in the Morning until Nine in the Evening, without intermission.—Admission, One Shilling.

T. COX SAVORY, &c., 47, Cornhill, London (Seven Doors from Gracechurch-street), informs the Public, that he offers SILVER WATCHES, on the celebrated PATENT LEVER CONSTRUCTION (the most accurate on which a Watch can be made), for Six Guineas each, with the latest improvements, i. e. the detached escapement, jewelled in four holes, capped, hand to mark the seconds, hard enamelled dial, and maintaining power to continue going while winding up.

N.B. If in hunting cases, 10s. 6d. extra. Second-hand Watches purchased in Exchange.

MATHEMATICS, NAVIGATION, FORTIFICATION, SURVEYING, & the USE of the GLOBES. Mr. E. CLIFFORD acquaints the Nobility and Gentry that he gives private Lessons in the various branches of the MATHEMATICS:—Arithmetic, Algebra, Euclid, Trigonometry, Analytical Geometry, Conic-Sections, Spherics, Fluxions, Mechanics, Astronomy, &c. Scientific Geography, Determination of Latitudes and Longitudes by Astronomical Observations, Trigonometrical Surveying, &c. taught. Gentlemen prepared for the Universities, Military or Naval Colleges. Those designed for Engineers, Architects, Surveyors, may receive that instruction which constitutes the requisite scientific knowledge in those Professions.

42, Old Bond-street, & Raven Cottage, Waltham Green, Fulham.

BARFIELD'S DIAMOND PLATE POWDER, warranted not to wear the Plate.

It instantly cleans tarnish and dirt, and magically produces a most immutable polish upon Gold, Silver, Plated Goods, Brass, Tin, Copper, and makes British Plate Zinc, and Pewter, look as white as the best Silver.

Sold, wholesale and retail, at Hallet and Co.'s British Plate Factory, 46, Ludgate-street, Bateman, Chemist to the Queen, No. 8, Castle-street, Leicester-square; 8 Chapell, 94, London street; Wilson, 57, Fenchurch-street; Thomas and Co., Old Kent-road; Russell, 67, Whitechapel road; and at the Manufactory, 92, Fenchurch-street.

AGENTS WANTED for every Town in the Kingdom.

N.B.—Plate cleaned with this Powder will not again tarnish.

A NEW DISCOVERY.—Mr. HOWARD, SURGEON-DENTIST, 52, FLEET STREET, begs to introduce an entirely NEW DESCRIPTION of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed without springs, wires, or ligatures, at STRICTLY MODERATE CHARGES. They so perfectly resemble Natural Teeth as not to be distinguished from the originals by the closest observer. They will NEVER CHANGE COLOUR OR DECAY, and will be found very superior to any teeth ever before used. This method does not require the extraction of roots or any painful operation, and will give support, and preserve teeth that are loose, and is guaranteed to restore articulation and mastication; and in order that Mr. Howard's improvements may be within reach of the most economical, he has reduced his charges to the lowest scale possible. Tooth-ache instantly cured, and decayed teeth rendered sound and useful in mastication.—52, Fleet-street. At home from Ten till Five. All consultations free.

TEETH.

MR. R. CLARK, Surgeon Dentist, late Assistant to Mr. Cartwright, brother and successor to the late J. Clark, formerly of 3, Keppel street, Russell-square, and lately of 44, Sackville-street, respectfully begs to announce that he continues to execute EVERY BRANCH of the profession on the most modern and scientific principles. In consequence of the long and severe illness of Mr. C.'s brother, he has had numerous complaints from parties wearing ARTIFICIAL TEETH, owing to neglect, bad arrangement, &c., he therefore begs to inform those who have the slightest complaint, that he will, at any time, make the necessary alteration, without any further charge.

23, Sackville street, Piccadilly; and E. Clark, 19, Old Steine, Brighton.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Boudli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Trademen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, No. 72, Welbeck street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sons, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lacenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c. &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading or any other Sauce.

PATRONISED BY HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

TROTTER'S ASIATIC TOOTH POWDER, established upwards of eighty years, so long been a general favourite of the Nobility and Gentry of this and foreign countries, consigns to fame its virtues in cleaning and preserving the Teeth. The Proprietor of this most excellent and invaluable Dentifrice having served as an Officer in his late Majesty's Navy the whole of last War, most respectfully solicits the patronage of the Officers of the United Service. Sold wholesale, and by the single box, at the Manufactory, 2, Arundel street, Strand; and by all Perfumers and Medicine Venders in the United Kingdom.

Printed by WILLIAM THOMAS, of No. 13, Gloucester Terrace, Old Brompton, in the County of Middlesex. Printer, at the Office of Messrs. BRADBURY & EVANS, Lombard Street, Fleet-street, in the Precinct of Whitefriars, in the City of London, and Published by him at

THE NEW PATENT METALLIC FOLDING BEDSTEADS, COUCHES, &c., As To Officers of the Army and Navy and of the Hon. E. I. C. Service, Writers, Cadets, Surgeons, Passengers proceeding to the East or West Indies, these Bedsteads are particularly suited; as, in addition to their other advantages for warm climates, they possess the inestimable quality of requiring neither Mattress nor Bolster and can be used during the voyage as Swinging Cots or Ships' Sofas. For the barrack room they will be found superior to all other inventions of the kind.

To Emigrants to the Canadas, Van Diemen's Land, Sydney, and South Australia, they are invaluable.

They are strongly recommended to all who may have occasion for a number of Beds on a sudden emergency, as, from their folding perfectly flat, they can be put aside when out of use in less than one-twentieth part of the room occupied by the common French Bedsteads.

Prices—£3 3s., £4 4s., £5 5s., £6 6s., £7, 10s., £8 8s. and upwards.

An inspection of the above, at 199, Piccadilly, is with confidence solicited, where alone they may be had, together with every article of Camp or Cabin Furniture.

PORTSMOUTH, March 15.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Snipe cutter was commissioned on Monday by Lieut. T. Baldock.—Clio and Childers were taken out of dock on Wednesday; they have since been masted, and will be ready for commission next week; their rigging and sails are completed. Zebra sailed on Thursday; she is to call at Plymouth and Lisbon on her way to Malta. Powerful arrived at Spithead yesterday; she is to go to Lisbon next week, and will remain there some time, carrying out orders for the Gauges to go up the Mediterranean, unless she should be sent to the West Indies with the new Admiral. Waterwitch and Ætna are fitting; the former in the Basin, the latter alongside her hulk. Curlew was not commissioned until yesterday; but that no time might be lost in her equipment, Capt. Trotter has had a party of men from the Britannia at work on her, and the lower rigging is up, and great progress made in her fittings. Indus is to be launched to-morrow between 11 and 12 o'clock: the Surveyor of the Navy is to be present. Rattlesnake and Tweed are ordered to be taken in dock—Rattlesnake to be inspected and reported on as to her fitness as a troop-ship; Tweed to be repaired and got ready for commission. It is not yet settled when the new flag is to be hoisted—most probably on 1st April. Revenge is to be ready for putting in. Ships in Port—Powerful at Spithead; Britannia, Victory, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Ætna, Curlew, Waterwitch, Snipe, Messenger steamer.

PLYMOUTH, March 13th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—8th—Sailed Gorgon steam frigate, with the Windsor Castle, 74, under escort for Pembroke. 9th—Sailed Marquis of Camden, for the East Indies; twenty-two of her crew have been committed to the House of Correction for thirty days for refusing to go out in her, according to their articles of agreement, under a pretence that she was in a leaky state, which was proved to be quite otherwise, by two separate surveys held on her. Inconstant, 36, Captain D. Pring, was hauled alongside the sheer-hulk, and had her mainmast taken out, it being found defective. A Court-Martial assembled on board the Royal Adelaide this day, to try Mr. David Paine, carpenter of the North Star, on a charge of drunkenness; the Court having heard evidence for the prosecution, and on behalf of the prisoner, was of opinion that the charge had not been proved, and therefore acquitted the prisoner. Arrived the Gleaner steam-vessel, Lieut.-Com. G. E. Davis, from Holyhead; she proceeded the same day for Woolwich, to have her boilers and machinery repaired. 11th—Arrived the Boreas, Dutch corvette, 24 guns, from Batavia, on her way to the Texel, but put into this port by contrary winds. 12th—Sailed the Hamoaze lighter, with stores for the packets at Liverpool and Holyhead. 13th—Rhadamanthus steam frigate, Commander A. Wakefield, was taken out of dock; having had her repairs completed, she was immediately masted, and will be ready for sea in a few days. Rodney, 92, Captain H. Parker, is daily expected at this port from the Mediterranean. In Harbour — Royal Adelaide, San Josef, Inconstant, Wolf, Rhadamanthus, Tyrian. In the Sound — Implacable, Acorn, Boreas (Dutch corvette).

MILFORD HAVEN, 13th March. (From our own Correspondent.)—On Saturday evening, about 7 o'clock, the Gorgon steamer arrived at Pembroke Yard, having in tow the Windsor Castle from Plymouth, to be broken up. She is rapidly dismantling, and will shortly be docked and taken to pieces. At present the Medusa is in dock there; she will be taken out as soon as the tides will permit. Then the Gorgon will be docked to have her bottom examined; and as soon as that service is accomplished she will be removed, and the Windsor Castle taken in. On Sunday the Harpy, 10, arrived from the West Indies with despatches, having been unable to make any other port, from the severe easterly winds which have prevailed for some time past. She, having split her sails, and sustained other damage, is expected to go up to the Dock-yard for repairs as soon as the weather will admit. Mr. Cheeseman, Foreman of Pembroke Yard, has been appointed to Chatham, and a Mr. Turner, Inspector at Plymouth, promoted to Mr. Cheeseman's vacancy. In unrigging the Windsor Castle on Tuesday, the "top," falling out of the slings, so injured one of the riggers as to fracture both his leg and thigh. He is in a dangerous state, and it is doubted whether or no the limb will be obliged to be amputated. The small and inefficient marine guard of about 10 or 20 men, still does the military duty of the arsenal. When the force is to be sufficiently augmented time alone will be able to decide.

Mr. Allan, Master Boat-builder, has just obtained his promotion to Bombay, upon 700*l.* a year, and goes out as Master Superintendent of the building department, Mr. Blake being at home. No one is yet appointed in Mr. Allan's place.

THE NELSON TESTIMONIAL.—On Saturday an adjourned meeting of the general committee was held at the Thatched-house Tavern, St. James's-st., when his Grace the Duke of Wellington presided as chairman. The committee agreed to postpone their decision, and to afford other artists an opportunity of contending for the final honour. We trust that this concession will be responded to as it ought to be, and that, when the collection of models and drawings comes to be re-opened to the public, it will be found to contain not only the best of the present contributions (with such alterations as their authors may deem advisable), but others, from men who, with a feeling of professional etiquette, very excusable, but which we hope they will now compel to give way to the patriotic, and therefore higher considerations, have hitherto refrained from entering into the competition.

The Fantome, 16, and Pearl, 20, sloops, are to be brought forward for service at Chatham; the former is not yet launched.

The Winchester is undocked, and the Curaçoa docked at Chatham, the latter was undocked immediately and the Hogue taken in. The Thalia is undocked, and the Buffalo docked to fit for New Zealand.

The Perthcawl (Glamorganshire) preventive boat, recently engaged on wreck duty, was swamped, and a crew of six Coast-Guard officers and men were drowned.

Lieutenant Fisher of Tribune, tried by Court-Martial at Lisbon on 22d ult., on charges of intoxication, and leaving the deck in his watch, has been sentenced to be reprimanded, dismissed H.M.S. Tribune, and placed at the bottom of the list of 1837.

Lieut. Archibald Campbell, R.N., has received the appointment of Vice-Consul at Milan under Col. Sir T. Sorrell.

THE COAST-GUARD.—A seizure of 123 tubs of foreign spirits was made by the officer (Lieut. Brouncker) and crew of the Coast-Guard station at Lepe in the Lymington district, on the morning of the 4th inst. On the night of the 6th inst., the Coast-Guard at Mothercombe captured the tub-boat Venus, of Cherbourg, laden with 169 tubs. The men effected their escape with very great difficulty. On the 9th inst. the crews of the Geiran's-Bay and Portloe Coast-Guard stations seized 90 tubs of foreign spirits, which had been sunk by a Cawsand vessel. The Fox, revenue-cruizer, chased the smuggling vessel Emma, of Cawsand, and made her destroy her cargo on the 10th inst., which there are great hopes will be crept up. A small seizure, consisting of 14 half and two quarter-ankers of foreign spirits, was made by the Coast-Guard galley, belonging to No. 1 battery, Sandown, Kent, on the 12th.

The report in the Plymouth papers that Sir Lawrence Halsted will succeed Lord Amelius Beauclerk is not true. Sir Graham Moore succeeds to Plymouth, and Admiral Fleeming to Portsmouth; but until the 28th inst. and the 27th of next month, when the period of service of the present Comm.-in-Chief expires, these appointments will not be officially announced. It is generally rumoured that Sir Charles Adam will succeed Sir Charles Paget on the North American and West India station. Sir W. Parker is also spoken of, but nothing is yet decided on that point.

The system of "piece work," it is generally believed, will be immediately resumed in the several dock-yards.

The Hebe, 46, is fitting as a receiving hulk at Woolwich. The Warrior, 74, is fitting for a convict hulk, for reception of additional convicts for the dock-yard duties.

The Alonzo and Boadicea transports are fitting for service at Deptford; as are the convict-ship Egyptian, Vengeance, to take freight to Jamaica, and the Isabella speedily to Cape of Good Hope.

Lieut. G. F. Somerville, R.N., was on Tuesday last examined before the Military Commission, and he has furnished us with a copy of an Address he was allowed to read. The pressing demands of friends and correspondents whose contributions are equally valuable to the service, compel us to confine our extracts to some tables compiled by this officer, and which are of themselves convincing evidence that no class more imperatively demands improvement than that of the Lieutenants of the Royal Navy.

Besides the above, there are also 162 upon the Retired, and 68 upon the Active Lists, to square with the two Junior Flag Officers upon this Synopsis.

Mr. James Lillicrap, son of Capt. Lillicrap, R.N., has just been appointed to a Cadetship in the E.I.C.'s service.

Capt. Sir Burton M'Namara, R.N., has declined to accept the Governorship of St. Domingo.

Capt. C. Bartholomew (1809) whose death, at the great age of 91, appears in our obituary, was the only surviving commissioned officer but one, Capt. E. S. Baily, who received promotion on occasion of the Jubilee, 25th October, 1809.

The Great Western, Capt. James Hoskin, R.N., arrived in Kingroad, Bristol, on Tuesday afternoon. She made the homeward passage in 14¼ days, having sailed from New York on the evening of 25th Feb. She was 19 days in making her outward passage.

The Hindostan emigrant-ship, is fitting at Deptford, and will embark the emigrants at Bristol.

The following Midshipmen passed for Lieutenants at the Naval College on Tuesday, before the Port Admiral, Admiral Superintendent, and Captain of the Excellent:—Messrs. H. P. Hope, J. N. Norman, David Miller, Stephen S. L. Crofton, W. N. Hastie, F. M'Gregor, W. D. Carroll, F. P. Coull.

The Log of H.M. brig "Espiegle."—"Tuesday, Nov. 17. S.S.E. Remarks.—A.M. Light winds and fair weather, added top-gallant masts, crossed top-gallant yards, and made ready for sea. 10. Light sea-breezes and fine. The French steamers towing their ships into position to attack the Castle of St. Juan D'Ulloa. 11. Unmoored ship. Noon. Commander came on board with a pilot; loosed sails. P.M. at 4h. 25m. weighed, and sailed for the anchorage at Sacrificios; 5h. 45m. passed close under the lee of the French corvette Creole. At one Creole hoisted a British Union Jack, and fired a gun, the shot of which dropped about a cable's length on the windward bow; tacked ship, and stood towards the Creole. At 1h. 10m., shortened sail, and laid to, the ship's head to the northward; a boat from the Creole came alongside, demanded and took our pilot; made sail, tacking as necessary. 2h. 15m. the French commenced their attack on the castle. 4. Shortened sail, and moored ship at Sacrificios, in seven fathoms water, best B.B. to the east, S.B. to the west, island E., two cables' length. Found lying here H.M.S. Satellite, U.S.S. Erie, 20 guns, a revenue schooner, 6 guns, and a packet, 6 guns. 28. 2 P.M.—The French squadron saluted their flag, there hoisted on the Castle of St. d'Ulloa. 29. A.M.—Moderate and fine. 7h. 20m. Sailed H.M.S. Satellite."—"A boat from the Creole came alongside, demanded and took our pilot." Who that knows anything of the character of British seamen will believe that the gallant Commander of a British man-of-war would make this cold entry of such an insult if he had not been previously instructed that he must submit to any affront, however contumelious?—Standard. [A Court of Inquiry should be held on Lieut. Croke.]

INFANTRY.

Grenadier Guards, 2d. Batt.—Lieut. the Hon. Henry Townshend Forester, brother to Lady Chesterfield, arrived at Chesterfield House on Wednesday, from New York. The battalion were quartered at La Prairie barracks, near Montreal, at the date of his departure.

Coldstream Gds., 2d batt.—Capt. S. R. Conroy is appointed one of the Aides-de-Camp of the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

3d—Lieut. Magrath is ordered to India.

5th—This corps at Corfu has instituted a Temperance Society, which is patronised by the Commanding Officer.

6th Depot—Capt. Guy being ordered to join the service cos., Major Johnson commands the depot.

10th—Lieut. Wright is appointed to the Recruiting Service at Armagh.

11th Depot—are under orders for Portsmouth.

12th Depot—ordered to Chatham for embarkation to India.

22d—Lieut. Kyffin has gone on the recruiting service at Newry, v. Lieut. Davies, 46th. The corps embark this month for Glasgow, to replace the 78th, ordered to Dublin.

23d Depot—On 1st inst. the officers entertained a select party at dinner, in their mess-room, at Armagh, it being the anniversary of the Welch National Festivity, ycleped St. David's Day. It may not be generally known to the extensive circle of our readers that, on this occasion, both the officers and privates of the Royal Welch Fusiliers wear a leek in their caps, in commemoration of a battle fought and won by the said corps, on that day, in the reign of King Edward the First. The scene of action was in that province, where the battle of Cressy was so gloriously, as well as victoriously, achieved by the Black Prince. After the battle had been decided in their favour, which was after a most severe struggle, they encountered a garden of leeks, the crowded recollections of their distant home flashed quickly on their remembrance by the fragrance which scented the air around them, and induced them, with one accord, to tear the savoury emblems of their native valleys from their beds, and, with a general shout to their Patron Saint, to place them in their "Monmouth Caps," in honour of the day. So, thus has the custom been handed down to the present day, and in addition to the wearing this national badge of honour, each officer, on his first joining, is obliged, according to the mess rules of the regiment, on the succeeding 1st of March, to go through the ceremony of eating a leek. As soon as the cloth is removed from the table, and before the toast of "St. David" is proposed, the Drum-Major makes his appearance, dressed in his state uniform, accompanied by the goat, together with a fifer and drummer; he then presents a leek to the aforesaid individual or individuals, during which time the quartette march round the room to the tune of that Welch national air, "Of what a noble race was Shenkin!" The whole ceremony of immolating a leek to the shrine of St. David, is generally of so affecting a nature, as not only to bring tears into the eyes of the votary himself, but also into those of his friends, who happen to be fortunate enough to sit near him. On the present occasion, at the depot, Lieuts. Barrow, Baker, and Campbell, were thus enlisted under the Welch banners. Among the number of distinguished guests present was Major-General Sir Thomas Pearson, commanding the Northern District, who appeared in excellent health and spirits. Upwards of 40 years of his life were spent in this distinguished corps, and he participated in sharing those glories, and gaining those laurels, which now embellish the colours of the regiment, and which may be enumerated from Egypt (where he served as Captain to the left flank company) to the treaty of peace concluded at Paris in 1815, during the whole of which time he was on active service with the regiment. Major Shaw, also, on half-pay of the regiment, was among the number, and wore at his breast the Egyptian medal.

24th—The Apollo, with this reg. on board, arrived on 5th Dec. at the Cape.

25th—Lieut. Bristow commands the comp. at Mallow. Capt. Devayner's comp. joined hd.-qrs. at Cork on 5th inst. Lieut. Brooke, with Ens. Cust, and 30 men, are detached at Bandon. The next station of the corps will be Gibraltar. Capt. Jenkins joined from leave on 14th.

27th Depot—The draft for the Cape will call at Cork in the Isabella transport. The last sent out in the Baretto arrived at the Cape in December.

29th—Ens. the Hon. J. W. Fortescue is appointed one of the Aides-de-Camp to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

34th—Col. Prince, of the Canadian Militia, followed the example of the atrocious wretches in Spain, by shooting 21 of his prisoners at Windsor, and the humanity of Capt. Broderick (34th), to whom some of the survivors appealed for mercy, alone saved them from a like fate.

35th Depot—ordered to Chatham for embarkation to India.

42d—The Royal Highlanders have received new colours at the Royal Barracks, Dublin, from Lieut.-Gen. Sir E. Blakeney, after being consecrated by the Presbyterian Minister. Lieut.-Col. Middleton delivered the following address:—

"Mr. Simpson, in the name and on behalf of Sir George Murray, Colonel of the 42d Royal Highlanders, I have to thank you, Rev. Sir, for the solemn benediction you have bestowed on us and these colours. The ceremony which you have so impressively performed will, I hope, have a permanent influence in the future conduct of the regt., and to you, Sir Edward Blakeney, his friend, whom he has delegated to present these banners, the same thanks are justly due for the kind, laudatory, and flattering manner with which it has pleased you to address us on the solemn occasion of committing them to our charge, and which cannot fail to stimulate us to maintain the good opinion which we fortunately hold in the estimation of so gallant and distinguished an individual, as the present Commander of the Forces in Ireland. And to you, brother officers and fellow soldiers, whom I have the high honour to command, and to whose good conduct and zealous support in your relative situations I owe the flattering encomiums of the gallant general, upon the present state of discipline of the regiment, I may be permitted on such an occasion, to briefly remind you that this is the centenary year of our existence as a corps, during which period the name which the regiment has earned in many a 'hard contested field,' is indelibly blended with the martial renown of the armies of these realms. It behoves us, therefore, to transmit the same good name unsullied to our successors; in saying which, when called upon in defence of our gracious Queen, her kingdom, or foreign possessions, I am sure we shall not be found wanting, as it may then be my proud duty to lead you and those colours into action against her foes; and it will be your duty to shield, defend, and bring them out of it. In conclusion, let us always bear in mind and remembrance the deeds done by our predecessors at 'Fontenoy,' 'Ticonderoga,' in 'Egypt,' the 'Peninsula,' and at 'Waterloo.'"

46th Depot—Lieut. Davies, removed from the recruiting service at Newry, is appointed Acting-Paymaster of the Depot.

50th Depot—Brev.-Maj. Serjeantson has leave to 10th June.

53d Depot—The comp. marched from Newbridge to Naas on the 11th inst.

58th—On the arrival of this corps from Ceylon, it will take garrison duty at Portsmouth in lieu of the 84th, which will go to Ireland; the depot are ordered to Portsmouth from Cashel. Lieut. Collins is recruiting at Birr, vice Lieutenant Magrath, 3d.

60th, 2d Batt., Depot—are under orders to proceed to Cork.

62d—Ens. R. Gubbins, who sailed from Chatham in the Thames, for Madras, takes the decoration of the first class of St. Ferdinand for his services with the Auxiliary Legion.

66th—Major Goldie has retired from the Military Staff in Canada.

67th—Report says the Hercules, 74, will remove this regt. from Demerara to our North American States.

67th Depot—are under orders to proceed to Cork. Lieut. Byrne, senior Subaltern, gets the late Capt. Dean's company, and his promotion vacates the Acting Paymastership.

70th—The death of Lieut. Costobadie was erroneously reported in January Army List.

72d—The drafts arrived at the Cape in December.

74th Depot—The officers of this depot gave a ball and supper on Thursday, the 7th, to 170 ladies and gentlemen of the town and county of Aberdeen, which included all the fashionables of the place. The ball went off with great spirit, and the officers, with their fair partners, were seen tripping it on Friday morning at half-past four o'clock. The county rooms, which are handsome, were hired by them for the occasion: the whole evening was one continued scene of enjoyment, the greatest friendship and good feeling existing between the officers and the inhabitants. The officers present at the depot are, Major Crabbe, Capts. Alves and Hutchinson, Lieuts. Thompson, Eyre, Warde, Fordyce, Ensigns Hancock and Willington. Major Crabbe is about proceeding to join the service companies, and the command devolves on Captain Alves.

75th Depot—Assist.-Surg. Tighe, from Boyle, embarks at Cove for the Cape. Ens. Bicknell has joined on appointment.

76th Depot—Major Grubbe takes the command, Major Clarke being ordered to join the service companies.

77th—Lieut. Galway is appointed to the Recruiting Service at Cork.

78th—move to Dublin.

79th—The corps will move from Dublin, and take the quarters of the 22d, in Belfast.

81st Depot—The Queen has been pleased to grant unto Ensign Charles William Thompson, late a Captain in the Spanish service, her royal license and permission, that he may accept and wear the cross, of the first class, of the National and Military Order of St. Ferdinand, which the Queen Regent of Spain hath been pleased to confer upon him, in testimony of Her Catholic Majesty's royal approbation of his services in the action before San Sebastian, on the 5th May, 1836.

82d Depot—Capt. Rogers has leave to 31st March. The depot move from Sheerness to Portsmouth. Lieut. Martin has left the Military College.

84th—A General Court-Martial has been held for the trial of two privates, for riotous and highly insubordinate conduct.

88th—will leave Templemore shortly.

90th Depot—Lieut. Caldwell has leave to 31st August. A detachment, one Captain, one Subaltern, one Bugler, two Serjts., and 52 r. and f., have relieved the detachment of the 11th, at Harwich.

96th—The detachment, under Capt. Jones, has been moved from Wigan to Ashton till the election is over. Lieut. Taylor is appointed to the Recruiting Service at Antrim.

99th—Lieut. Cassan has left the Military College.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.—Lieut. Cockburn is on leave from Limerick. Prince Louis Napoleon on Monday visited the arsenal at Woolwich. Lord Bloomfield, the Lieut.-Gen. Commanding, and the superior officers of the garrison received him with much attention, not only on account of his origin, but also in consequence of the works which he has published on the science of artillery. After having shown him all the details of the establishment, Lord Bloomfield caused four guns of horse artillery to be paraded and passed in review; after which his Highness expressed to Lord B. his high opinion and admiration of the excellence and rapidity of the movements, and returned thanks for the honour which had been paid to himself. Major Wilkis's company 5th. batt. was to embark this morning for Devonport, to relieve Major Hanwell's comp. 5th batt., which is to return to Woolwich. Capt. G. Spiller has arrived from the Cape of Good Hope on leave. Lieut.-Col. T. G. Browne has received his orders to proceed to Gibraltar to relieve Col. Turner in command of the Artillery at that station. Orders have been received at Woolwich to cast all horses unfit for actual service.

The examination of the forty Gentlemen Cadets about to obtain commissions in the Engineers and Royal Artillery will take place before the Master-General at the Royal Military Academy on Monday next.

G. O., 7th March.—The Master General has been pleased to approve of the following exchanges, viz.:—First Lieut. E. W. Crofton, 6th Batt., with Lieut. Stace, 5th Batt. First Lieut. W. F. Crofton, 7th Batt., with First Lieut. W. T. Smythe, 8th Batt.

A. DICKSON, D.A.G.

RL. ENGINEERS—Lieut.-Col. Oldfield proceeds, in the course of this month, to Canada.

There are now at Chatham about 1500 men belonging to various regiments awaiting an order to embark for India and N. S. Wales.

All the troops in the manufacturing districts are on the alert, and in readiness to march at short notice, to put down any disturbance which may take place in consequence of the arming of the Chartists. The Brigade-Major of the Northern District, Lieut.-Col. Sir Charles R. O'Donnell, recently attended a special meeting of Magistrates at Mansfield, and several of the London police have arrived in the district.

Maj.-Gen. Sir C. Napier, K.C.B., will take the command of the Northern District (head-quarters, Nottingham) about the 1st of April.

Friday the 8th inst. being the anniversary of the landing in Egypt, the officers of all arms employed on that service sat down to a splendid banquet at the United Service Club, to celebrate that event, and the glorious victories that ensued, which ended in the expulsion of the French army from Egypt. The Duke of Cambridge and his Excellency the Turkish Ambassador honoured the meeting by their presence:—Gen. Sir Hilgrove Turner, in the chair; Major-Gen. Reeves, Vice-President. The following officers were present:—Gen. Lord Hill; Gen. Sir C. Colville, K.C.B.; Gens. Sir C. Doyle, Sir W. Peacocke, K.C., Sir F. Macdonald, Sir W. Houstoun, G.C.B., Sir H. Lowe, Sir F. Maclean; Lord Beresford, Lord Lynedoch; Admiral Sir C. Ogle; Capt. Sir C. Cogbill, Bart., R.N.; Gen. Sir P. Phillips; Col. Sir W. Cox; Gen. Sir E. Paget; Gen. Sir G. Murray; Gen. Anderson; Col. Money; Col. Jolliffe; Capt. Kelley, Col. Rolt; Col. Renah; Col. Craig; Mr. Stace; Capt. Lloyd, R.N.; Capt. Alexander, R.N.; Col. Thornhill; Col. Duffy, C.B.; Capt. Teade; Sir L. Cole, G.C.B.; the Hon. Gen. Meade; Gen. Le Mesurier; Sir R. Kennedy; Major Annesley; Gen. Mawby; Gen. Bradshaw; Rev. Dr. Bakins, Chaplain-General.

On Tuesday the members of the Naval and Military Commission again assembled at Lord Melbourne's office. The meeting was attended by the Duke of Wellington, Duke of Richmond, Earl of Minto, Viscount Melville, Viscount Howick, Lord Hill, Sir H. Vivian, Sir G. Cockburn, Sir W. Burnett, Sir T. Hardy, &c.

In the Army Estimates for the coming year, commencing 1st April, 1839, an augmentation to the forces of Her Majesty has been estimated for as follows:—701 horses, 44 commissioned officers, 54 non-commissioned officers, trumpeters, and drummers, and 647 rank and file; making an increase, of all ranks, of 745 over the estimate of the past year. This is, in a few words, an augmentation of about one regiment! The total of all ranks in India of Her Majesty's Army is 20,467.

The first evening meeting of the United Service Institution will take place on Monday next at 9 o'clock.

Very great activity prevails in the Ordnance Department at the present time. The gun business has not been so brisk since the battle of Waterloo, and good workmen are with difficulty obtained. Very extensive contracts (indeed the largest ever known) have been lately entered into for the supply of military and naval stores of all descriptions. Large quantities of stores have been lately shipped off from the Tower for the colonies and various parts of the United Kingdom.

At the assizes at Maidstone, yesterday, Mr. Hawkins (formerly a clerk in the office of Messrs. Cox and Greenwood, and afterwards in the service of Don Pedro, which he quitted to enter that of Don Miguel) and Mr. Frazer, a barrister, were found guilty of an assault on Colonel Sir Charles Shaw, and required to enter into recognisances in the sum of 100*l.* each, and find two sureties in the sum of 25*l.* each, to appear at the Court of Queen's Bench to receive judgment.

Let it not be supposed that the mariner would not gladly avail himself of the privilege of working in the docks, on board their respective ships, until the freight be discharged and the vessel dismantled. Their anxious watching for the day on which a vessel is said to be dismissing the "riggers and lumpers," and commence "shipping her hands," sufficiently attests how readily they would accept occupation,—and experience can equally corroborate the fact. This injustice, this indiscreet arrangement, should be discontinued, by obliging every vessel on commencing to prepare for a voyage, whether by rigging or taking in cargo, finally and permanently to engage that number of mariners which the shipowner may deem equal to the performance of the duty while in harbour, and those men finally and permanently contracted with for the intended service on which the vessel is about to proceed, according to the present "articles of agreement" and usages in this instance of "the trading marine." The benefit of this arrangement alone would be soon felt by the nation, its ameliorating effects experienced by our mariners, and in an eminent degree by the underwriters. The ship, in place of being (as now is the case) literally thrown out of the hands of the riggers, would be providentially equipped, the rigging judiciously distributed and arranged by those men who would feel the beneficial result of seaman-like work, and who in the present system suffer so much in these matters from the unskilfulness, inattention, and neglect under existing circumstances. From these transactions arises losses both to the shipowner and insurer; and thus they occur:—hurried to sea on the very day the mariner joins his ship, which invariably is deferred until the last moment; the seamen are thrown together, strange alike to his new companions, as also unacquainted with the distribution of the running rigging, which is mostly varied in its plan of arrangement. Ignorant of his commanders, he has suddenly to encounter new passions, and probably caprice, perhaps under circumstances that require an intimate knowledge of every detail and habit of which he necessarily must be unacquainted. In the event of sudden storms, immediately after leaving port, morg vessels are lost or wrecked in consequence of this, together with being short-handed, than can possibly be conceived by those who do not devote observation, or possess not experience, in proof of the tendency before mentioned. It is by no means unusual to find expert and good seamen, even in the broad daylight, at a loss to find where many important ropes lead *. Thus, if not hurried by any immediate danger, the effect of the ship-rigging system is so injurious, how much more so must it prove how fatal the disorder and confusion, when

"Surrounding evils yet they ponder o'er,—
"A storm, and dangerous sea, and leeward shore."

In the night of pitchy darkness, when unexpectedly arrested by a storm, environed by hidden breakers on a lee-shore, where all possible expedients must be at hand. How long would our present establishment of the Royal Navy retain a standard number of good mariners if such an arrangement as this existed in it,—the present happiness and conduct of its seamen would soon be disturbed, and too readily would they be made the prey to design and restlessness. Hence, by the introduction of these regulations, with a fair proportion of pay being allowed to the mariner per day, while the vessel should be within the limits of the docks, those mischievous consequences would be avoided, in order to defray the immediate expenses necessarily incurred by his being obliged to live on shore, from the impossibility of allowing fire or other conveniences in the above establishments, and these arrangements would be found soon to work a beneficial end, productive of more than one benefit. In the first instance, it would immediately constrain those men (who are now employed, as previously stated, to perform the above portion of the seaman's duty,) to embrace the herein-proposed ordinary seaman's situation, affording the trading marine at the same time a body of men which would, more readily than young landsmen, become extremely useful, from their before-acquired knowledge of ship-rigging in harbour. In the second place, it would defeat the desultory system of crimping, which is so widely spreading its blasting influence not alone in England, but also throughout the seaports in many of our most commercial colonies *. Equal justice must also dictate that no more than a proportionate number of the mariners should be retained on the ship's arrival in port, and those invariably to be selected from that part of the ship's company who subscribe to certain stipulations hereafter stated; and also that the portion of law which now exists (sec. 11, 5 and 6 Wm. IV.), deeming the seaman a plunderer before he is discovered, be modified; this section cannot be formed with a view of allowing time to the shipowner to collect his freight, as it is usually paid before a particle of the cargo is discharged. Hence it cannot admit of any other construction than the foregoing one; but it is also strangely absurd, for reason whether a vessel be partly or wholly laden, there still remains open to examination the same opportunity and room to scrutinise the cargo as there would have been for the mariner to plunder; however, in either case it is proved that the shipowner would not be inconvenienced or embarrassed by any of the previous measures, or would the last circumstance be so important to the marine were they adopted, therefore may be passed over as one of those evils which may be counteracted without being expunged. As out of it may arise some benefits to the mariner, which would induce him in some instances to continue his labour while it was required, and prevent him from falling a prey to the designs of the crimp and impostor, and enable him to provide his family with his daily pay till he received the full amount of the well-earned wages of his voyage; thus would be removed a portion of those disheartening grievances which at present exist, reconciling him at the same time to the service, and prevent him from viewing his native country and his employers in the comparative light previously dwelt on in this work. The errors of the internal and domestic economy of the trading marine, and the detail of that justice so essential in all services (where numbers are obliged to be governed by few), with uniformity and discriminating discipline, whether civil or military, and where intellect ought to aid ignorance, next becomes conspicuous, demands minute attention, and a free disclosure. We see the mariner's pay of the trading marine in one instance regulated according to the proportion of provisions and necessaries allowed him, forming a set-off against his services, and considered a most important point by the shipowner as a liberal equivalent for a deficient proportion of wages. In the Royal Navy this reasoning is also placed in balance with the pay of the seaman, who in a most wise proportion has that equivalent meted out to him in an established and abundant quantity as equitable in allowance; hence it becomes due to the country that such be considered a remuneration in lieu of a deducted part of salary. But in the former service far different is the case, and too often this negligence and injustice to the trading mariner fails not to be productive of evil consequences to health, safety, and subordination. The equity also in this case, which is extended to the seaman of the Royal Navy, is withheld from the former, although the calculation of pay, as before said, rests on similar arguments. Evidently wrong as this latter circumstance must appear, principle and the well-being of our country ought therefore suggest the necessity of interference, and prompt an alteration in favour and justice to the mariner in this instance also.

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

NATIONAL CORPS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—As Sir Charles Napier has declared, in his letter on National Regiments, that he will not enter into a discussion with anonymous writers, I conclude he will make no reply to Arthur; therefore, as I concur in the arguments of Sir Charles Napier, I will make a few remarks on the epistle of your correspondent. In the first place, Sir, will you tell me what Arthur means by the flourish of trumpets with which he opens his letter? "Spanish wars," "great battles," "heavy charges," "high elevations," (will Arthur tell us what a low elevation is?) and throwing bombs, all which I pray that you will first explain the positive meaning of, and then, its relation to the subject of national regiments?

I next ask you, Mr. Editor, to inform me what Arthur's grateful reminiscences of favours received from "all the Aristocracy," and his politics, have to do with the question about national regiments? I much fear we must put all Arthur's "Capulets," all the Fitz Geralds, Howards, Plantagenets, Surreys, Morgans, Trevors, and Wynns, on the shelf, under docket irrelevant! When you kindly expound these matters, you will be as useful to the readers of Arthur as Mr. Champollion was to the learned world, when he was among the Pyramids of Egypt deciphering the hieroglyphics; for, like them, no doubt Arthur has a meaning, if we could but discover it! But to proceed. Arthur is deficient in correctness of statement. He says, "Sir Charles Napier begins by asserting that, if the Army were made more national than at present, the Commander-in-Chief would always show injustice towards those three races in whose blood he did not share." Sir Charles Napier does not assert any such thing, neither in the beginning, nor in the middle, nor in the end of his letter, does he make such an assertion!!! General Napier's letter defends itself, and to it I refer the reader. All that I have to remark is, that as the assertion attributed to Sir Charles is not to be found in that officer's letter, the whole of Arthur's arguments based thereupon fall to the ground.

As to Arthur's pure Milesians, pure Celts, pure Gaels, pure Saxons, and pure Cymraegs, say, good Arthur, didst thou never hear of a circumstance called the "crossing of breeds?" If not, look at Johnson's Dictionary for "intermarry," and you will know, what all your readers know already, that in the course of some thousands of years, during which intermarriages have been managed in a species of "joint-stock company" by all the races you refer to, mixtures have taken place; and when one party prevailed, very unscrupulous means were taken for destroying the purity of races, so that, between lawfulness and unlawfulness, the probability is, that there does not exist an individual of any pure race in the four countries: to prove that there does, every one knows to be impossible, and all history gives the lie to so visionary a supposition. I fear, that when Arthur rants about "battles in Spain," his brain was occupied with building "chateaux en Espagne," to be garrisoned with his "pure races." To proceed. If there be eight regiments that refuse to enlist Her Majesty's Irish Roman Catholic subjects, as Arthur states, all I can say is, that if such regiments have national names, and are endeavouring to make themselves really national corps, the circumstance is accounted for, and there is nothing improper in it; but, otherwise, such a fact would call for animadversion. Arthur is certainly called upon not only to name these eight regiments, but also (as you, Sir, very justly observed) those that he accuses of having "run away" at Waterloo. Let me next remark, that the 42d is a national regiment only in name, if, as Arthur says, and I believe correctly, one-fourth of its numbers are not Highlanders. As to its being "a pet," I disbelieve that Lord Hill has any "pets," but that blindfolded dame called Justice! The next sentence, I find, is Arthur's pathetic exclamation, "only make one, at least, of our nominally Welsh regiments as Welsh as the 42d are now Highland, and I will be content, and my countrymen gratified." Now, in the very sentence which precedes this, Arthur gives us to understand that only three-fourths of the 42d are "Gael;" so, after all, his wish is to have a mixed regiment with a national name, like the 42d! In short, his Welsh regiment would be what Napier thinks so good—a mixed regiment. But this is exactly what the Welsh regiments are—mixed and excellent! Arthur does not seem to know what he wants! However, I am glad that he is "content" with a mixed regiment, and I wish its name had half the consonants in the alphabet, for his sake; so guttural, that nothing but a Welchman, or a tame raven with an oyster in its mouth, could pronounce it, both raven and oyster being of the pure Cymraeg race.

Arthur proceeds—"But Sir Charles Napier kindly furnishes me with missiles against himself by alluding to Naval favouritism." Now here, a second time, does Arthur misstate Sir Charles Napier, who does not make the slightest allusion to the Navy in his whole letter! Really a little more circumspection in making assertions would become the writer, even though he be anonymous. But though Napier does not allude to the Navy, Arthur does, so I will examine his arithmetic a little. He gives us to understand, and marks it with italics, that Lord Melville gave the Scotch three times their share of the Naval loaves and fishes. "I grudge not their good fortune," says Arthur; "I wish it doubled, but I should like some portion of it also to fall in our way." Now, as the Scotch had a right to a fourth of Naval promotion for their share, and got three times their share, they must have received three-fourths of the whole promotion. One would imagine that that was sufficient; but no, Arthur wishes it "doubled." What! six-fourths? But Arthur does not stop at the discovery of six quarters; he wants the Scotch to have all the six quarters, and "some portion to fall to the Welch besides!" Oh, Cocker! Cocker! wherefore art thou Cocker! Arthur's genius for discovering that two and two make six, and not four, as we believed, is not exaggerated, for the claimants from Scotland for employment in the Navy, during Lord Melville's time, were far more numerous than those of the English, Irish, or Welch, so that the Scotch share was, correctly speaking, more than a fourth; therefore I should not be at all surprised if Arthur should, in time, discover as many quarters in every whole as there were in the family arms of the celebrated Cunegunda! Let us now quit arithmetic and blazonry, for I long to arrive at the arguments of Arthur; but, alas! they are in the inverse ratio of his six quarters! so scarce, so very scarce, that I cannot find one, no not one solitary argument! He says he would have national regiments, for this reason, that their being national would prevent young officers from going to Florence and Rome to spend their substance!!! They would not go there, if they served in national regiments: they would then stay at home and hoard up their money, for the perspective pleasure which it would give them, when they became

"Old three legg'd grey beards, limping with the gout; Men full of rhumes, who liv'd past ages out!"

to live quietly at home among their old soldiers in the characters of landlord and tenants! Everybody must admit the propriety of so efficacious a "moral restraint" on wild young dogs with short red coats and long rich rentals! Some of us imagined that these thoughts and enjoyments came only with time, and when years had whitened the hair; but Arthur brings them into action, when we are yet in our teens, by the machinery of national corps; then, presto! begone! and the pleasures of Italy vanish from the youthful imagination of our national officers. "Avaunt thee, Capua!" cries the young Sub, as he looks tenderly on the Drum-Major of his regiment. "Oh! how we shall play, rub-a-dub, tub-a-dub, on an old drum about the old farm when we grow old with our old wives! Blessings on Arthur, who invented moral restraining (quere immoral?) national regiments, and saved our youth from Rome and Florence." Arthur, apropos to nothing, proceeds to quarter (how he loves quarters!) his races (which are all begotten, born, and bred, at his own chateaux en Espagne!) in the colonies. (What has the quartering of the troops to do with Sir Charles Napier's arguments in favour of mixed regiments? Nothing! However, Arthur would station four regiments in the Bermudas; to this I have no objection: of course he would there send the consumptive race (Lancashire lads, I think they are); no matter, away with them to Bermuda, where there is plenty of arrow-root, "the sovereign'st thing on earth" for consumptions! Here leaving them to coddle and cough, on Arthur trots, like "Peter Parley" the great traveller, and gets with four more regiments to the top of the "Blue Mountains," which, being dotted with red coats, would look very picturesque! Arthur proceeds—"Having thus smashed Sir Charles' leading echelon," (with the "Blue Mountains," of course,) "I shall take the liberty of assailing the supporting corps." I thought that Sir Charles was an unemployed General Officer; but Arthur, the creator of six quarters, has created an army for the General, made him fight a battle, "smashed his leading echelon," attacked his "supports," and all this with four regiments on the top of the "Blue Mountains!!!" (by the way, would not Arthur wish the Blues to be one of the regiments sent there? they would decidedly be national troops on the "Blue Mountains!") But gently, good Arthur, you began by saying Sir Charles would not fight—that he "halted at a safe distance" out of your reach, quite afraid of your mighty power! But now you say, you "smashed his leading echelon" and "attacked his supports:" so he fights, and does not fight! he advances in echelon, and halts in position! is quite safe, yet gets his echelons "smashed!" and performs all these feats at the same moment!!! I will tell Arthur a story:—A country parson was preaching; "Bellarmine says," quoth the parson, "that this thing was so; but I say it was not so: now my friends, Bellarmine being thus confuted, we shall proceed." Every reader must see that, as the parson confuted Bellarmine, just so has Arthur "smashed" Sir Charles Napier."

Arthur proceeds to enumerate some crimes committed by men of mixed corps, as an argument in favour of national corps. Would not national corps commit crimes? Are they to be more pure than the nations themselves? Is this what he calls "smashing Sir Charles's echelons?" Why Arthur would persuade the mixed regiments of the line that they are guilty of cowardice, treason, mutiny, rebellion, marauding, and that nothing but a national regiment is fit to wear the British uniform, if such he would allow to be worn; for he writes as if he would have all our breeches off before we knew where we were! But let us pass by his Welsh, Irish, English, Anglo-Saxons, Sulphuric Acid, Potash, Protestants, Precursors, Gunpowder, and all the rest of his purities and impurities, and come to his next paragraph, where he takes up Sir Charles for saying the British soldiers trusted in Wellington and in their bayonets. I answer neither for Sir Charles's religion nor for Arthur's; but I hate cant. I ask Arthur if a writer is to call upon the sacred name of the Almighty whenever he discourses upon trifling professional matters? Men have confidence in good Generals, as the means which God employs to effect his all-wise and inscrutable purposes; and every soldier (however deeply religious he might be) who served under Wellington, knows that the Duke's presence gave great confidence to the Army. His Grace, it is said, estimated the presence of Napoleon as equal to a reinforcement of forty thousand men! Was his own less? Soldiers in general are of Turenne's opinion, that—"Dieu est toujours du côté de gros canons." Let me observe to Arthur, that when Cromwell impiously invoked the name of the Lord, he also desired his men "to keep their powder dry;" and his canting assertion, "The Lord is with us," was made when about to commit one of those merciless slaughters which detract from the Protector's otherwise noble character. Such an insult to the DEITY is rather an unfortunate example produced as an evidence of piety! Sir Charles did not say there was no higher dependence than on a great General or a good weapon; but I suppose he thinks that to call upon God's name at every turn is neither devout nor decorous. Hypocrites cry out, "In the name of the prophet—figs!" but religious men in such matters abrogate the invocation. It is unfortunate for himself that Arthur should quote massacres and the merciless pillage of the East, as proper occasions for men to call upon the God of justice and of peace! Now for Arthur's grand question; the substance of which being, as I understand it, as follows—"Did Sir Charles ever witness men armed with muskets and bayonets close upon opponents, who stood firm, and were armed with pikes or scythes?" That is the question! I cannot answer for Sir Charles Napier, but I can go very near it; because Sir Charles was the author, as I am told, of an anonymous pamphlet, called "War in Greece," in which he strongly advocates the use of the pike as an admirable weapon; but, mind you, he by no means discards the musket and bayonet. There I leave him to defend himself. But I will answer Arthur on my own account. I have known individuals meet in battle, both being armed with bayonets: many instances of this have occurred. At the battle of Busaco, Corporal Godfrey of the 52d (I think his name was Godfrey) charged down hill upon a French soldier; who, though below, firmly abided the charge. The Frenchman's bayonet grazed Godfrey's breast, and passed between his body and right arm. The corporal's bayonet struck the foe full upon the breast, passed out at his back, and the socket of the weapon was so far forced in, that to get it out Godfrey was obliged to sit down, and put his feet against the dead Frenchman's breast; thus with great difficulty he drew out the weapon. Now this is a fact which most officers of the 52d, who were at that battle, can probably vouch for. But let us go deeper into the question. Will Arthur deny that two brave men, equally armed, will have the courage to meet each other? We all know that they have the courage, and that they will attack each other; and, if two brave men, why not two thousand? I see no reason why they should not. I admit that I never saw an English and a French regiment cross their bayonets, because the French always gave way. Both their men and ours were conscious of our greater physical strength, and their nerves could not abide the terrible approach of steel; but does this help Arthur's argument? The French are all fencers: there is no French regiment without its "maître d'armes;" and our soldiers, among whom not a man throughout the ranks of the Army had an idea of fencing, beat them with our tear-honoured but peace-despised musket and bayonet! and why? Because we trusted to being component parts of that great and glorious machine "so highly wound," and to that great master workman, Wellington. We felt that victory was in our serried ranks, our well-executed manœuvres, our nerves firm, and our courage applied to the cool maintenance of our order, and an intrepid obedience. In short, discipline, all-conquering discipline, was our soul, and gave resistless force to the British arms; feeble striplings stood by their brawny comrades, and they fought together in such firm compact, that they seemed and felt as one mass, and as one mass they rushed upon the foe. No thought of individual fencing, or of weapons, entered their heads. Each man was as well armed as his neighbour, and as his foe! It is the heart and not the weapon that fails on these trials. What were Napoleon's orders to his cavalry (maîtres d'armes to a man)? "Hold out your sword horizontally above your horse's necks, hold down your heads, and when you feel the sabres of the enemy clatter on your helmets, spur your horse, and thrust." Here was no "fence," but we have the whole secret. It is the forward movement and combined power of the mass, not individual dexterity, which renders armies potent. But do not from this suppose that I condemn any instruction that makes men expert with there arms; far from it; for when men are engaged singly, it is good to feel masters of the weapon they are armed with. In masses men confide in their discipline: in single combat they confide in their personal dexterity. In great wars single combats rarely occur, in small wars they happen more frequently. Arthur refers to pikes. In a charge they may perhaps be better than the unloaded musket and the bayonet; but if the musket be loaded, and if the man who wields it shoots the pikeman before he gets within pike's length of him? Better far would the latter be were he far away on the "blue mountains!" Now this same shooting is exactly what the musketeer makes free to do. "Forward! charge! hurra!" cried the brave Father Murphy at New Ross in 1798; "never fear the balls; sure we are charmed! See! I've caught a handful as they fly!" and he showed some that he carried about him for the purpose. Headlong the resolute pikemen rushed, when lo! a ball slipt into Father Murphy's body, and let out his intrepid soul. His pikemen fled before the musketeers of Johnson. But against cavalry? Aye! against cavalry the pike is the devil; and for these two reasons—1st, cavalry have no muskets, and a pike is better than a sword. 2ndly, In charging pikemen, there would be eight if not twelve pikes against one sword! Cavalry in heavy armour can alone charge pikemen, and even cavalry so clad in steel had better let it alone. But can the cavalry effectually charge infantry armed with muskets? No! except under peculiar circumstances, which are equally disadvantageous to pikemen. Can cavalry safely approach musketeers? No! Can they safely approach pikemen? Yes! Finally, pikes are capital when you cannot get muskets and bayonets; but pikes cannot rival the latter, as GENERAL WEAPONS OF WAR. After answering Arthur's question, pray, Mr. Editor, tell me what that question has to do with Sir Charles Napier's defence of mixed regiments? I have answered it because I am answering Arthur, but it has clearly nothing to say to the dispute about national regiments, not a whit more than the "blue mountains" have, and the four regiments perched on their top. How the musquitoes in hot climates would worry the poor sans-culotte Gael! Diable! Poor Scotchy would be far better off, if playing on his own fiddle in the highlands at home!

TRISTRAM'S OVERHAUL OF A LETTER BY "ONE OF THE PEOPLE," RELATIVE TO STEAM FLOTILLA, &c.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

SIR,—Within this month the second edition of the printed letter by One of the People, has drawn my attention to its several merits. It is addressed to the Earl of Minto, G.C.B., First Lord Commissioner of the Admiralty, and written in an unassuming style, submitting an armed flotilla of steam frigates to protect the channel and the eastern coast of England, and an increase to the marine artillery; but principally to calm the groundless fears of our countrymen, produced by the wildfire pamphlet of the Flag Officer, ignited and spread by the inflammatory party-papers. In fact it is the anti-combustion letter to the incendiary pamphlet. It extinguishes every spunk—blows off the smoke—leaves the dust only of the straw behind! The gallant Flag Officer should be reminded, that a political treatise written with the pen of party-spirit may be eloquent, wise, and beneficial in the opinion of the factious, but in this no-party opinion, that pen not only despoils the treatise of these attributes, although avowedly written for the good of the Navy and the country on many essential points;—it injures the writer in his profession, and neutralizes his advocacy with the Government and Legislature. I like a spirited stroke of remonstrance or dissent against any impolitic, baneful, or doubtful measure;—the true patriotic spirit of the impartial Naval advocate must and will have free and fair play, and which, if exercised in a just and proper cause, when time, tide, or wind is in its favour, will merit and ensure encouragement.

One of the People says, in the second page of his letter, that "The main facts stated in this performance" (the Flag Officer's pamphlet) "have been, I believe, long known to such persons as turned their thoughts to Naval subjects. But the tone and temper in which inferences are drawn from them by this writer, are, I hope, very unusual in the honourable service to which he professes to belong. His statements have tended to excite no small alarm: the first question is, to what extent are they really true?" Sir John Barrow has ably exhibited the extent of their truth!

"Before I proceed, permit me to observe that I do not think our means of national defence a proper subject to be discussed in a party-spirit. The duty which men owe to their country is the highest form of filial obligation. The sacred veil which conceals the weakness of a parent should never be lightly approached. The first recorded instance of this offence brought a curse of shame and servitude upon a whole race *. I, therefore, feel bound, in entering upon this inquiry, to divest my mind of every consideration but what refers to the general good, and to remember that were the resources of the commonwealth laid bare and examined, faction would be the worst impiety."

"My Lord, I have no pretensions to be of your party and I am too obscure to have weight in any. But discussing the public measures of your Lordship, I t I owe respect to your station in the councils of Sovereign, and due credit for right intentions; while consider it to be utterly unfair to hold you accountable for admitted evils which existed before your power, and may still be beyond your control."

"I am constrained to allow that our Naval policy admits of improvement in some essential particulars; but I hope to be able to shew that we have available and commensurate remedies."

Referring your readers and correspondents to this admirable letter, in comment upon the Flag's jaundiced pamphlet, I will extract the matter relative to One of the People's proposal for a steam flotilla to guard us from a Russian or Cossackian invasion, which means—fire, sword, and violation.

"Heaven have mercy here upon us;
For only that can save us now!"

"My proposal is, that STEAM POWER should be resorted to, as what we have now sufficient acquaintance with, to feel an assured confidence, may, if properly directed, suffice, even of itself, to guard the coasts of Great Britain and Ireland from invasion. By way of clearly stating my meaning, I affirm that if the Russian fleet of 27 of the line, &c., were to approach our shores with h designs, a steam flotilla would, under the guidan Flag officers who might be readily named, give "a g account of them," or, in other words, "take or dest every one of them." "No sin either," says Chloe.

* * * * * *

Page 13.—"But, as the community at large cannot be supposed to be familiar with the data on which this opinion is founded, I would instance the performances of the Great Western steam ship, in proof of what may be done to such vessels in every variety of wind and weather. All must perceive that a similar steam ship, equipped for fighting, would possess the essential advantage of choosing her own distance in a contest with a sailing man-of-war. This implies the further choice of her own time and position for engaging. It only remains that the projectiles for the contest should be such on board the steamer as to be more destructive than the shot from the batteries of heavy guns with which sailing ships are chiefly armed."

The worthy One of the People calls his Lordship's attention (in page 14) to the PAIXHAN system of firing shells horizontally—and the effect, witnessed at Portsmouth, of live shells when they are exploded in a shi and to the certain destruction of the larger ship-of-war the smaller war-steamer. * * *

Page 15.—"Such then is the description of force which this country may trust for defence against invasi... A STEAM FLOTILLA, armed chiefly with mortar-cannon, with a few heavy guns of the largest calibre." (Tristram would also have half a dozen scuttles for firing Congreve's rockets. When alongside, first a broadside of shot, grape, shells, and rockets; then a shower of hand-grenades would complete the destruction of the Russian "Mighty, 110," by one "Infernal Machine"—a steam frigate.)—"The number of these vessels is a question of detail: I should think thirty, divided into divisions of ten each, for the Thames, Humber, and Forth, more than sufficient for the eastern coast. With half the number ready to act, we shall probably never have occasion to try their powers."

The word probably may be erased from this sentence—for 14 steam-ships of stout scantling, and so armed, would destroy in detail 27 sail of the Russian fleet. Suppose 14 their weather line, and the attack made at nig —two steamers upon the weather-bow and quarter of four sternmost ships, and one steamer only upon the b of the next three ahead; five would be thus doubled up and seven engaged with the eleven steamers—the unoccupied three steamers would check the first ship to the relief of her friends, or be ready to tow off the disabled steamers. If the weather line is on the weather-bow of the lee-line—then attack the seven headmost ships, keeping the three unoccupied steamers to ply the eighth astern with shell and rocket fire-works. If in three lines, I would still attack but seven of the headmost of the weather line. The main object of a steam flotilla would be to disable in detail;—conquest in detail would inevitably follow, as a sailing fleet could never protect its lamed or winged ducks against the floating-batteries steaming 9, 10, or 11 knots upon any point of union. Ten or fifteen minutes would disable the seven attacked—then steam off and attack the relieving ships as they come up to see and to ask "What's the matter?" Carrying "Le grand pape de la fête" out of the Russian line for a show on the Thames instead of the Neva! would be the British answer and result. This plan of steam attack is merely to divert the paper-broadsides from the Admiralty. The plan of a line of battle-ships against war-steamers will be submitted with every deference to the "Respective Flag Officers, Captains, and Commanders," of the privateering fleet of pamphlets cruising in troubled waters, by thy friend TRISTRAM.

REGIMENTAL RANK OF FULL COLONE

the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—In your paper of the 9th instant, I have re... er from Brevet Lieut.-Colonel Hulme, of the 9 ...egiment, on the subject of the "Regimental Rank ... Full Colonel," in which this officer is pleased to say that it operates to the disadvantage and annoyance of the officers of the line in most garrisons abroad; and, by way of illustration, brings forward the promotion of a Lieut.-Colonel in command of the Artillery, in Nova Scotia, in the year 1834, to the rank of full Colonel, and thus depriving Lieut.-Colonel Fullarton, of the 90th reg., of the command of the troops in the colony, to which he had fallen in consequence of the Lieutenant-Governor leaving from ill health, although Lieutenant-Colonel Fullarton was five years his senior as Lieut.-Colonel.

Lieut.-Colonel Hulme does not mention that the officer of Artillery alluded to was rather more than eight years in the service before Lieut.-Colonel Fullarton, and a Captain nearly five years before he was gazetted to his Ensigncy in the 51st regiment; and I cannot suppose that, had Lieut.-Colonel Fullarton lived, he would have felt himself aggrieved at the Artillery Officer's promo ...n—certainly not with justice; and as Lieut.-Colo... ...me charges the Artillery Officer with having depr... ...t.-Colonel Fullarton of the command of the tro... ...eg to offer another version of this affair.

Lieut.-Colonel Fullarton had been confined to h... ...room in a hopeless state for several weeks. The packet, in which the Gazette notifying the promotion of the Commanding Officer of Artillery to the rank of full Colonel was despatched from England, was lost on the passage. He, however, became aware of it through the United States, and requested it might not be communicated to Lt.-Col. Fullarton; and there is little doubt but that that officer actually died believing himself to be the Commandant, and as such he was actually interred, receiving all the honours attached to that rank. This circumstance would not now have been brought forward had it not been to manifest the delicate and generous conduct of the Colonel of Artillery alluded to, who not only lost a considerable portion of the command pay by the distressing loss of the packet, but even when the official intelligence of his becoming the Commandant duly arrived was most unwilling to supersede his old friend, ...is utmost to gratify the dying moments of Lt.-Fullarton, with the reflection that he to t... perfect soldier, commanding, and respect... ...ficer in the garrison.

other Artillery Officer alluded to by Lieut. ... as his junior in the rank of Brevet-Maj... suppose to be Lieut.-Col. Kirby, who entered the regiment as a Second Lieutenant, 1st Aug. 1799, rather more than four years before Lieut.-Col. Hulme entered the service, his Ensigncy having been dated 25th Sept., 1803; his Captain's commission as dated 26th August, 1813, and Lieut.-Col. Kirby's 1st June, 1806, rather more than seven years before that of Lieut.-Col. Hulme; and as Lieut.-Col. Kirby stands the fourteenth Lieut.-Colonel, I cannot understand how it is possible for him to be full Colonel in two years (as is stated in the letter of Lieut.-Col. Hulme he is to be); I am confident (using a sporting term) the chances are not on the cards.

The Artillery Officer commanding at Nova Scotia has incorrectly been stated "in command of two ...panies," the colonies of Newfoundland and New ...nswick are under him, and therefore he h... companies under his command—much too sm... ...ber for their duties; and I consider the c... ...f a battery in the field fully as importa... ...f a regiment of the line, and this may be, and ..., under a junior Captain. The charge under th... ...ommanding Officer of Artillery at Nova Scotia, or any other foreign station, is of more importance than Lieut.-Colonel Hulme seems to be aware of when he brings forward the Lieut.-Colonel's command of two companies; and before he again offers himself as the champion of his service, I would recommend him to study the new Army List; he will there find that those officers of Artillery who have obtained the regimental rank of full Colonel have served from forty-two to forty-five years, full as long as the officers of the line of the rank of Colonel. The average of the service of the Lieut.-Colonels of Artillery is thirty-six years; the junior Captain of a company has served thirty years—to obtain the rank of Lieut.-Colonel he is likely to serve fifteen years longer, and ten at least in addition before he can obtain the regimental rank of full Colonel, making a service of fifty-five years, quite as many as will fall to the lot of any officer of the line to arrive at the rank of Major-General.

FIAT JUSTITIA.

FORTIFICATION AND THE HIGHER TACTICS.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—I feel indeed the necessity of disarming the displeasure at my presumption of your experienced readers, and accordingly beg leave to point to the unfeigned loyalty of my intentions as the flag of truce which emboldens my following, in every way my humble abilities permit, endeavours hitherto ...t only excused, but so enviably honoured and encouraged the liberal approbation of those who are my superiors in ...ry sense, that I will even venture to lament, yet with undiminished respect for the officers of the Line, that the acquirement of a more intimate knowledge, alike of fortification and of tactics, on a grand scale, is far from facilitated, in reference to those who have not been educated at the Military academies. I have often thought that an exhibition to the public (but at a reduced price, or free to the Service) would fill up a blank in a country where fortified places not only are few and far between, but also of the minor kind; I mean an exhibition of small but correct models of fortification, capable of being taken to pieces to change parts to become either stronger or more vulnerable; as also to show the progress of sieges with different approaches, trenches, parallels, batteries, &c. It would be equally desirable to display different and differing tracts, as seats of war, showing armies opposed to each other, and their changes of position, &c. by coloured diagrams, to be shifted according to RULES to be founded on the particular obstacles, natural and creative; as also taking resources, supplies of ammunition, strong-holds, a secure retreat, or support requiring time to ...ome up, into the calculation, making the moves under ...eater or diminished alacrity, regulated by such obstacles.* ...e latter would give young officers a coup-d'œil explan... ...y of manœuvres on a great scale, and of their great ...cts; and the models of fortified places, entrenched ...ps or field-works, would make them familiar beforehand ...th obstacles which otherwise must take them by surprise at an escalade, at a storming party, or in attacks on redoubts, stockades, &c., or field-works generally—a surprise likely to be as fatal to them, as frequently the first experienced shock will prove to a well-disciplined Lancer, who in action has to LEARN (as I have said before) how to take the shock he has to share even with the foe who fails to his well-directed lance! I humbly think that a perfect familiarity with all these obstacles, &c. acquired in time of peace, will be as acceptable to the parties, as the discovery that a superior but suspected patrol, suddenly encountered, and on suspicious ground, has been sent out by friends† to find and to warn yours against an inimical ambuscade.

Many years ago I had the hardihood of submitting to H.R.H. the Duke of York some cards, each having a drawing affording a lesson in fortification, with explanations, and the figure of a playing-card in the corner†. I flattered myself that by Government's remission of the duty on cards (but only those used by the Service), the expense of engraving these illustrations, &c., would be covered, so that ...instructive packs, by not being dearer than common ...g-cards, might have been used in the houses of all ...s, to spread a familiarity with different defences among ...nior officers—the soiled cards doing as much for private... in barracks, &c. The illustrious Commander-in-Chief thought well of the proposal, not so the pickets round the Stamp Office, who forced my reconnoitring party, if not to ground arms, at any rate to fall back, not on the main body, but on poor nobody, who nevertheless had to boast of an approving smile: it made me happy even under disappointment; and not less would be the delight of private's, whose activity at gymnastics, swimming, bayonet-fencing, improved ball-practice, nay drills even as to forced marches and Rifle and Light Infantry races, secured them applause, not only rewarding and feeding their self-esteem, but tending also to feed the Army with recruits of a more ambitious and chivalrous character; and which is the aim also of your intelligent and very unassuming correspondent Chevron, who surprise me by stating that barrack-gardens did not answer the end I ...posed. I did not know that they had ever been tried, ...ven then I doubt that men were allowed to hav... ...s to themselves! If the garden was in common, I easily believe that drones should share equal with the ...rking bees did cause discontent, and of course a failure. Chevron, in showing the inadequacy of the bounty given to recruits, or rather its to him so truly embarrassing application, and at the most critical moment too, is the cause o... much demoralization, has probed the most morbid part o... the system, and which bids fair to ensure the consideration of those who cannot but have the same object at heart, that of improving the character as well as formidable array of your country's brave and willing, although humble, defenders. Such an aim, Mr. Editor, is clearly yours also; and to be allowed proudly to contribute my poor mite, is deemed a distinction by one who is anxious ever to fight under the same colours with you, and who remains, &c.

Stadium, Cremorne House, Mar. 5. DE BERENGER.

* Few places would be so suitable for such an exhibition as the United Service Museum, or adjoining the Waterloo Model.

† I have some few by me even now;—and I forgot to say, that I have used a sort of game with warlike movements, clever, but diminutive as to operations, still proving interesting enough to induce Gen. Sir Thomas Picton to urge me to play three games with an officer who had challenged me, but who did not repeat his challenge when we met again.

To Readers and Correspondents.

Sir Jasper Nicolls.—The letter of our last, signed "Your Constant Reader," furnishes a gratuitous plea in bar as to this officer's rank on the list of Lieutenant-Generals, which is not, or need not be so in fact. For some years past, if not always, the Commander-in-Chief in India has had the local rank of General assigned, to obviate all possibility of clashing rank—instance Sir E. Paget, Lords Combermere and Dalhousie, Sir E. Barnes, and Sir H. Fane, had such rank assigned on their appointment.

Our vexation is at least equal to that of Colonel G. A. H.: we trusted the matter to a party who has failed in his duty, but we hope shortly to remedy the injury.

The letters of "Maitre D'Armes," "Fiat," "An Old H.P," "Chevron," have been received, and shall have attention next week.—"G. L." is declined; Sir Edward Codrington has done much good for the service, and deserves the compliment recently paid him. We care not about his politics—they may be good, bad, or indifferent. The Navy are satisfied to have men in Parliament who will watch over their interests, and fearlessly express their opinions.

We do not see the utility of adverting to the matter mentioned by "One of the Line:" a leading feature of this Paper is to avoid personal offence, and we neither condemn proceedings nor individuals unless compelled by a sense of public duty.—The proposition of "R. B." to collect together in Trafalgar-Square the statues to public characters is not feasible; and if it were, would, on many accounts, be unadvisable. Our space will not admit of his letter.—Captain Tulloch's valuable Statistical Reports on the sickness, mortality, and invaliding among the troops in the United Kingdom, the Mediterranean, and British America, shall have the especial notice they merit.—The Suggestions and Plans by "Philo-Palinurus," for improving the condition of Naval Officers and Seamen, have been received.

The "Weekly Dispatch" is one of the most virulent defamers of the Naval and Military professions, and never omits any opportunity of endeavouring to persuade the public, or rather the public-house frequenters who constitute its principal readers, that the revenue of the state is wasted upon the services. The "Weekly Dispatch" affirmed last week that "the revenue of the country is abstracted from the Navy to support the extravagance of a Court, the enormous abuses of our Civil Government, and the shameful extent of our Standing Army!" Ah! Mendes Pinto, thou verily wert but a sorry fellow in the art triliteral, compared with that adept in superlative mendacity who writes himself—as "lucus a non lucendo"—"Publicola."

We thank "An Old Post Captain," but the debates on the Navy have exhausted the various matters to which he refers, and we should exhaust the patience of our readers by adopting just now the course he advises.

We have been compelled to leave out the Naval Distribution, in order to make room for Lieut. Somerville's tables; but it will be given in our next.

The Correspondent who sent us a copy of a contemporary Paper of 2d Nov. 1833, should not, in common fairness, have concealed from us that the statement therein referred to was contradicted by the Editor in a subsequent number. We have no file of the "United Service Gazette," and our wish is to act justly to all men.

Errata.—In the New Armament for Vessels, given on 2d March, the Pantaloon Class should have been stated at ten guns, not six—viz. eight 18-pounder carronades, and two long 18's.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, MARCH 16, 1839.

THAT the Royal Navy opens a promising field for men of enterprise, who have a name to make and an independence to gain, will, we think, be admitted; and if so, it follows that such men are best calculated for its arduous duties. Wealthy Captains rarely make keen cruisers; and though the rank they hold in society is, in a great measure, a guarantee for good conduct when engaged with an enemy, it does not follow that men, who already rank high in the lists of nobility, will be over solicitous to add renown to their dignified titles by personal adventure. If, however, fate places them in a position for the display of personal prowess, there can be little doubt but that they will acquit themselves as becomes persons of their rank, and contribute to their country's [illegible] dividuals seek fame at the cannon's mouth, and submit to long privations, anxious cruising off an enemy's port, and prolonged seclusion from society? If they willingly encounter these tests, then such men will, indeed, dignify the service by so magnanimous an example of self-devotion and [illegible] patriotism. We have had noblemen in the Royal Navy whose deeds emblazon the pages of our national history; but they have been scions of inadequate wealth, and who had their fortunes to make—for we speak of hereditary nobility, and not of men who won their way to high rank and the favour of their Sovereign, like our Nelsons, Collingwoods, St. Vincents, Hoods, Saumarez, &c., each and all of whom were indebted to their sword for their elevation. It has long since been shown, that men of minor distinction have been intimidated from choosing the Navy as a profession for their sons, seeing that the service has been reserved for persons of rank, wealth, and influence only; but there are yet many whose foresight did not lead to such anticipation, and unhappily sent sons into the Navy, and who now lament in bitterness their having done so. Many young gentlemen still hold the grade of Midshipman whose heads bear token of winter's snow, and whose hopes have been blighted with the chill blast of disappointment. These unfortunates, endued with the feelings of nature, give vent to repining and discontent, engendered by procrastinated subserviency in the cockpit, and decry the service as one of studied injustice and false faith; in corroboration of which, they point to the cruel abstraction of widows' pensions, and the remorseless transfer of officers' children to the parish poor-house. From the cockpit the spirit of discontent infuses itself among the crew, and the infection spreads. The Warrant-Officers dwell upon the fate of their widows and orphans, whilst the seamen revert to former pensions for service after fourteen years.

The time was, when the known services of meritorious officers were admitted as a just claim for the advancement of their sons. Now, however, Admirals and Captains may plead half a century of good and brilliant exploits in vain, unless Parliamentary friends will back their solicitations; and such are the men whose sons are now pining in hopeless expectancy, and are a heavy expense to the parent. Wealthy Midshipmen are no less detrimental to the Navy, than the discontented; independent of the beggarly stipend which the country awards as pay, and which falls far short of the wages of a menial, they despise their less fortunate messmates, imbibe a contempt for their superior officers, similarly circumstanced, and become impatient to the trammels of restraint, so essential to discipline; and too frequently advance to commands, before they have learnt to obey. The example, moreover, which they set, of profuse expenditure, and, not unfrequently, of the listless performance of duty, is injurious to the service. In this we do not advance opinions without being fortified with examples of reference within the compass of our acquaintance. Seldom on board during the ship's stay in harbour, the dockyard, and other arduous duties, followed by night-watches which they should keep, devolve upon the plebeian Mids. This, though glaring, the plebeian Lieutenants fear to remonstrate against, as, even though the animosity of the noble delinquents be not excited, the chances of sacrificing the probable ulterior interest of a noble patron would thus be that the merits of men of humble birth can only be seen by those in authority through the medium of influence and Parliamentary support. Thus discipline is sacrificed: my Lord may learn his professional duties or not, just as he pleases; for as a few short years will place him in command, with officers in plenty under him, who will save all trouble on that score, it is of little moment whether his Lordship knows how to turn in a dead-eye, clap on a throat-seizing, or the utility of the sister-blocks, &c.

THE state and condition of the Royal Navy has been an engrossing subject of late, both in and out of Parliament; and it is right that it should be so. The discussion has elicited the gratifying fact from the Earl of Minto, that "since the armament has been altered, it is intended to increase the complement of crews." But there is a class of Admiralty vessels not more entitled to the character of a man-of-war than a transport is,—we mean the Falmouth Packets, which are either unknown as to their equipment, armament, and personelle, or else most strangely unheeded. The recent case of the Express, however, will, it is to be hoped, cause some better arrangement to be made in regard to these nondescripts, which shall at least place them on such footing as to enable their Commanders to resist insult with something like dignity to themselves. These packets are rated in the Navy List at six guns, but we have an impression that they carry but one gun on each side, during these peace times, and those destined for signals only; however, be that as it may, the crews consist of about forty men, of whom the fourth part are found, paid, and fed by the Lieutenant Commanding, under a penalty for every such man deficient. When the economy mania first found its way into the Admiralty, these vessels were converted from their original equipment as brigs to three-masted barques; in other words the main-boom, which was well poised in a horizontal direction, from the mast to the taffrail, dividing its specific weight gradually over the quarter-deck, was suddenly turned into an upright mast, and stuck into the extreme end of the stern, where the build of those vessels (the run being extremely fine) was never calculated to sustain the weight, which is now concentrated there; and, to make the matter worse, a topmast must be added. Why was this metamorphose? because it was well known that the few men allowed, as the complement of the crew, were inadequate to work these vessels as brig-rigged, whereas, if barques, the difficulty might be met. What the consequence? Why that several of them have gone down, between Halifax and Falmouth, and every soul drowned; for the number of men on board are not sufficient to work them, even as barques, under all circumstances of winter gales and frozen regions.

But let us view them in another light. It has been admitted in Parliament, that the Commander of the Express was under the necessity of yielding up to a sloop-of-war, without any show of resistance beyond verbal remonstrance, a pilot, who, on the security, as he supposed, of British protection, had ventured to conduct H.M.'s packet from a dangerous position into a place of safety. Now, had the Express been armed, as is set forth in the Navy List, with six guns, it was the bounden duty of her Commander to have exchanged gun for gun with the Gallic Prince, even though backed as he was by his consort, the Rear-Admiral's frigate, and not until overpowered, and the British colours trust reposed in the faith of British Officers for protection, and that of pilots more especially (for reasons well known to those conversant with the operations of last war) should be held most sacred and inviolate—and should not be surrendered until after every struggle had been made to sustain the hallowed pledge.

It is evident, then, that these packets are not so ably armed and manned as to be capable of resistance, under ordinary circumstances; what, then, is to be their fate, freighted to the full with dollars, doubloons, and ingots of the precious metals, now that "letters of marque" are issuing from the Mexican Government? May not there be found among these commissioned vessels—nay, will there not be found—marauders, absolute pirates, looking out for these non-combatant Galoons? and will six guns even, worked by forty men, be adequate to defend them against predatory desperadoes, armed to the teeth, and numerous as the decks of their corvettes will admit of their stowing; urged on, too, with the prospect of an immediate distribution of specie among them!

It will be well to consider this position—and, although these vessels be royal floating hotels, the servants should not be paid out of the pockets of those placed in charge; neither should such valuable cargoes as they carry be exposed to capture, rather than furnish adequate crews, or the vessels themselves to wreck for want of hands to work them.

The time has gone by when it could be stated—as it so frequently has been stated in Parliament—that the officers of the Army are the best-paid servants of the country. It is true that some one of the few friends of the service in that assembly has generally denied this bare-faced assertion whenever made, and we ourselves have, from time to time, given our best exertions to demonstrate its utter falsity; still that such is the fact has been pretty generally believed, however, by those who are unacquainted with Military matters. A brighter day, we hope, has now dawned upon the Army; for these and other illiberal statements which have always been made by the economical clique whenever anything was to be proposed tending to ameliorate the condition of the Army, may now at once be put to silence by a reference to the pages of Lieutenant Hart's "New Army List," which indeed tells a tale of "hope deferred."

We had intended this week giving copious extracts from Lieutenant Hart's Army List, but we cannot, perhaps, do better on the present occasion than give place to the following two excellent letters from an old and valued correspondent. We shall next week, however, give a full and elaborate account of the state of the whole service, viz., Cavalry, Infantry, Royal Artillery, Royal Engineers, and Royal Marines.

Happy as we always shall be to receive communications from well-informed officers, showing up the particular grievances under which their own or other branches of the United Service suffer, we wish, at the same time, again to repeat, that we dislike all invidious comparisons which can do no good to any, and may do injury to all.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

"Read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest."
So says the Priest when in black cassock dress;
For wisdom thus from observation springs,
We learn by it to give right names to things.

Sir,—The working portion of the Army must feel highly indebted to Lieut. Hart, 49th reg., for the trouble he appears to have taken in laying bare to the profession at large, by the publication of his New Army List, the services of its members, which at a glance shows the effect of a partial system of promotion, supported only by those who have interest and a heavy purse. The individuals who have been so fortunate as to possess both, cannot be said all to have lacked merit; neither the opposite party, though wanting those essential props, be all less deserving. It will not, I hope, be thought out of place to give you here three tables, showing—Table I. The rapid promotion of certain Lieut.-Colonels and Majors. Table II. The worse than tardy promotion of Captains now on full pay. Table III. The tedious promotion of the Subalterns;—the two latter known to be the working portion of the Army. In preparing the two latter tables, I have divided those who appear never to have been on half-pay from those who have, as it is more than probable many of the latter have been on the shelf from choice, and at their own request, consequently are not entitled to that commiseration their long services would otherwise appear to entitle them to.
